Next week, for the first time during the seven years in which Dr. Muck has been the conductor of the Symphony Concerts, he will include in a programme a piece by Skriabin, "The Poem of Ecstasy," originally heard here in the autumn of 1910 under Mr. Fiedler and little heeded, since at that time the singular music of the composer and his singular purpose with it were barely known outside Moscow and Petrograd. Now, however, he and it are better understood and tentative as the "Poem of Ecstasy" seems beside the final "Prometheus" of relative fulfilment, the performance of it should whet curiosity over the tone-poem itself and over a unique figure in the development of ultra-modern music. The other numbers of the programme for the concerts of Friday, Oct. 19 and Saturday, Oct. 20, are: Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia"; Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody and Beethoven's concerto for violin and orchestra in which for the first time in Boston, Mr. Zimbalist will play the solo part.

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening of next week in Sanders Theatre, Miss Novaes, the remarkable pianist, hitherto heard hereabouts only in a single recital, will play with Dr. Muck and the band Beethoven's concerto in G major, the fourth of the series and a piece warmly inviting her signal talents. The purely orchestral pieces of the programme are Sibelius's symphony in E minor, No. 1, and Berlioz's overture to "King Lear."

Globe Oct-14

Cambridge Symphony Concert

The first Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be the Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, who then makes her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Later in the season she is to play in Boston with the orchestra.

The program comprises the First Symphony of Sibelius, that in E minor; Beethoven's G major concerto, for piano and orchestra, and Berlioz' Overture, "King Lear."

Advertiser Oct-13

SYMPHONY OPENS CONCERT SEASON

Dr. Muck, the Conductor, Was Received With Long-Continued Applause

LISZT'S "PROMETHEUS" GETS FIRST HEARING

Wagner's Prelude to "Parsifal" Ended the Excellent Program

By LOUIS C. ELSON

PROGRAM

Beethoven.....Fifth Symphony
Berlioz, "King Lear".....Overture
Liszt, "Prometheus".....Symphonic Poem
Wagner, "Parsifal".....Prelude

Boston yesterday took her own beloved symphony orchestra into her arms (metaphorically) conductor and all, and the prodigal sons showed themselves worthy of the welcome. Dr. Muck was received with long-continued applause. The season bids fair to be as successful as ever, even pecuniarily, in spite of the fact that Mr. McAdoo demands most of our money (unfortunately it is not "Much McAdoo about Nothing") and some concerts must surely suffer. Not only that but the obtaining of modern scores of novelties will be very difficult, so that some indulgence may be claimed in the make-up of the programs.

American works may therefore come more prominently into the foreground than ever. We hope, however, that when such are given, Dr. Muck will not hand over his orchestra to the native composer to play with. Some of the trial conductors of the past reminded us of nothing so much as of a traffic policeman at a busy crossing, and one does not like to worry about suspender buttons while listening to an orchestral work.

The season began yesterday afternoon, in Symphony Hall, with the good old Fifth, which Dr. Muck reads in a direct and sensible fashion, without too much individualization. The orchestra played this without any trace of having had a Summer vacation. The famous four-noted figure of the first movement was given with excellent unity. It is odd to compare Beethoven's reported statement that it is like "Destiny Knocking at the Door," with the sketch of it given in his own memorandum book.

His first inception of the figure and its treatment was in a chattering, jovial mood. The Scherzo and parts of the slow movement may be called chiefly contra-bass exhibitions, and it is possible that Beethoven was here flinging down the gauntlet to Weber, who had animadverted upon his severe treatment of contra-basses in the fourth symphony. Our band of contra-basses passed through the ordeal unscathed, although at times somewhat too pianissimo.

Finale Triumphant

The finale was made most triumphant—it would have been a proper finale to the Heroic Symphony. There was great applause at the end of the excellent performance. Dr. Muck was twice recalled, and the orchestra compelled to rise.

Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is not his best work in this form, but it is full of gusts of tempestuous passion, which were played with the utmost abandon, yet it scarcely awakens the final thought of—

"Vex not his ghost; O, let him pass; he hates him,
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer."

Only two characters of the play seem identifiable; the low-voiced Cordelia and the stentorian king, which leads to many very sharp contrasts. There is plenty of combat in the work, sudden interruptions, gasps and sighs, but it is not as Shakesperian as Tschaikowski.

To give a novelty at the opening concert, and a difficult one at that, was in itself a novelty. Liszt's "Prometheus" has never before been given at these concerts. It was astonishing that it could have been so well interpreted at the opening concert of the season. But we must remember that the orchestra has done a little more preliminary playing than usual, this year, including some performances for Gramophonic reproduction. And for this we are sorry, since a second class orchestra would give quite as good an effect upon a wax record.

It may awaken a storm of protest, but it is nevertheless a scientific fact that no machine can record the highest overtones (which have infinitesimal vibrations) and on these the delicacy and individuality of the tone depends. Wherefore a lesser band would have given just as good an effect for reproductive purposes, and we can only imagine that the great name of the orchestra was sought for advertising purposes. That might have been left to ambitious tenors and anxious pianists.

End With "Parsifal"

Liszt's "Prometheus," which was the novelty, is a fine bit of orchestration, even if not so full of power as "Les Preludes." It was rather a fault of program-making (in this field Dr. Muck sometimes sins) to follow the anguish of King Lear with the agony of Prometheus. This symphonic poem deals with "Prometheus Bound," but in a choral work which was written to follow the orchestral one. Liszt deals with the unbound giant. (One cannot help remembering the London bookseller who had no doubt but that Prometheus unbound would be less expensive than Prometheus bound.) Liszt used some of the themes of the orchestral "Prometheus Bound," in the subsequent vocal "Prometheus Unbound."

Yet even in this picture of the manacled god the note of Hope and of Triumph is not lacking. There is turbulence enough and to spare in the struggles of Prometheus. The riot begins even in the opening measures, but the theme of Defiance is lofty and noble, the vein in which Liszt excelled, and from which Wagner borrowed more than once. Pain, defiance, misery pride and finally Faith, all pass in a musical panorama.

The vulture plunges at once into "medias res"—the middle of things, and soon muted horns picture gnawing pains. But the work was much greater than the Lear overture. There was some very intricate double fugue work without a trace of dullness and a tremendous climax at the end. Liszt has a sure touch, while Berlioz is sometimes merely experimental. The performance was a really great one, almost with a technical flaw.

With Wagner's Prelude to "Parsifal" this excellent opening concert ended. This Prelude is not as great as deeply religious people believe it to be. If it celebrated Buddhism instead of the Holy Grail (Wagner once thought of a Buddhistic subject), it would not thrill many auditors quite so much. But it is a good example of the versatility of the Genius that he moves as powerfully among his diatonic progressions here (adopting the Gregorian style), as he does among the chromatics of "Tristan and Isolde," and Wagner's least is better than almost any living composer's best.

Globe Oct-13

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA BEGINS 37TH SEASON

Beethoven's C Minor Played Impressively

Dr Muck in Brilliant Performance of Liszt's "Prometheus"

The 37th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall in a conventional manner. Dr Muck was greeted as he came on, and there was a cordial tribute to the orchestra after the symphony; this was the fifth of Beethoven. The personnel of players remains the same as that of last year.

The performance by Dr Muck and the orchestra of Liszt's fifth symphonic poem "Prometheus," curiously the first for these concerts, was one of fine spirit and virtuosity, consonant with the composer's vision in it of a broad analogy to life rather than a mere photographic delineation of a "program."

Again the hearer marvels at the freshness of this music, now nearly 70 years old; at the strength and intensity of dramatic feeling; at the varied, colorful, gripping treatment of emotional ideas. Here is a technical scheme which must have shocked the conservative who remembered Mendelssohn. The virility of expression in the variety and force of harmonic color, in the keen sense of orchestral timbre as appropriate individual voices and as blended of several, in the arrangement and development of material which did not hold up the dramatic unfoldment by the introduction of the fugue—this is as far beyond the time in which it was written as the boldness of the subject in Liszt's conception of its relation to man. The imagination is helped to see not only the destroyed vulture, the liberated Titan and his new kingdom, but the human struggle which leads to enlightenment.

Berlioz' "King Lear" sounds old fashioned beside the Liszt which followed it in history and yesterday on the program. The wretched old king becomes melodramatic rather than a pitiable and tragic figure, but the suggestion of the innocent Cordelia, gentle and good, as of the proud and thankless Goneril and Regan is clear.

The performance of the symphony was marked by a somber dignity in the first three movements, particularly in the tempo of the andante, which led into sweeping triumph in the last. The prelude to "Parsifal" added nothing to the impression of Liszt's noble tone poem; on the contrary, it suffered badly in comparison.

Efrem Zimbalist, the violinist, next week will play the Beethoven concerto. The orchestral numbers will be Sibelius' "Finlandia," Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy" and Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody in A major.

Transcript Oct-12

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Skriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy" on Dr. Muck's Next Programme—Mr. Zimbalist in Beethoven's Concerto—The Return of Mr. McCormack—Other Recitals

FOR the first time in seven years and for the second time in the whole course of the Symphony Concerts, a piece by Skriabin—his "Poem of Ecstasy"—stands on the programme which Dr. Muck announces for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. It is the middle music of the series that Skriabin began in "The Divine Poem" and continued in "Prometheus: The Poem of Fire" before death came upon him in the flower of his years and powers. In it he is already germinating the singular chordal and harmonic procedure and the iridescent tonal color characteristic of his final pieces; while even this relatively early tone-poem undulates or throbs with the tremulous and sublimated emotion that was later to vibrate through his music. When Mr. Fiedler originally produced "The Poem of Ecstasy" in the autumn of 1910 in Boston Skriabin was little known and less heeded. Now he sits high, though aloof, among the priests of ultra-modern music. Of these things in general and of the new piece—for such it really is—in particular, more will be printed in this place next Wednesday.

The rest of Dr. Muck's programme for next week traverses familiar pieces; Sibelius's full-voiced national anthem for orchestra, "Finlandia," happily chosen when Finland is rejecting the thraldom of the Russian proletariat no less than of the Russian bureaucracy; Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody with vivid rhythms, hot color and many an opportunity for instrumental virtuosity; and Beethoven's concerto for violin—to serve this time as impulse and vehicle to the musical intelligence and sensibility, the delicate mastery of the violin, the justness and taste of style in Mr. Zimbalist, returned at last and deservedly to the Symphony Concerts.

On Thursday evening of next week in Sanders Theatre at Harvard College, Dr. Muck and the orchestra resume their concerts in Cambridge. They will be heard in Sibelius's symphony in E minor, passionately conceived and boldly, starkly and darkly written; in Berlioz's overture to Shakspeare's play, "King Lear," and in the orchestral part of Beethoven's concerto in G major (No. 4) for pianoforte. The pianist will be Miss Novaes, appearing for the first time hereabouts in circumstances becoming to her technical felicity, keen musical insight and warm sense of communicating tone.

Herald Oct-14

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the second pair of Symphony concerts given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Efrem Zimblast, violinist, will be the soloist. He has appeared only once with the orchestra, several years ago, when he played Glazounoff's concerto. This time he will play Beethoven's concerto. The orchestral pieces will be "Finlandia" of Sibelius, Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'Extase," and the Roumanian rhapsody in A major of Enesco. All of these works are familiar to the Symphony audiences except the symphonic poem of the Russian Scriabin, which has been played only on Oct. 21 and 22 in 1910. It is unusual music and was received at the time by the audience with much feelings; but seven years has made so great progress in the understanding of ultra-modern music that the poem will undoubtedly make a deeper impression. The composer has sought to express something of the emotional side of his philosophy of life. The first section is the composer's soul in the orgy of love; the second, the realization of a fantastical dream; and the third, the glory of his own art.

The program in its order is as follows:

"Finlandia".....Sibelius
Le Poeme de l'Extase," Op. 54.....Scriabin
Concerto for violin and orchestra.....Beethoven
Rhapsodie Roumaine in A major, Op. 11, No. 1.....Enesco formed upon the subject of physical culture, there is, on her part, a satisfied ignorance as to the wonders that can be wrought by the 'leap.' In the friezes of ancient Greece you will see little, long-limbed maidens springing into the air, disdaining the ground, limbs spread like wings, bodies poised with the apparent weightlessness of a bird. The term Greek maiden is a synonym for grace. If I were speaking a farewell word to American women I would repeat and emphasize the word 'leap.' If American girls would practice leaping they would grow taller and be more graceful."

Herald Oct-14

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The first Symprony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, Oct. 18, at 8 o'clock. The soloist at this concert will be the brilliant Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, who will then make her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Later she will play in Boston with the orchestra. Miss Novaes is regarded as the most talented young woman pianist who has appeared in America in many years. She will play Beethoven's fourth concerto. The program comprises the first Symphony of Sibelius, that in E minor; Beethoven's G major concerto for piano and Berlioz's Overture "King Lear."

Herald Oct-14

THREE CHORAL CONCERTS

This year for the first time, Dr. Muck is realizing his ambition to have in Boston a chorus with which he can perform, in conjunction with the Symphony Orchestra, choral works of first importance. He was famous in Europe as a choral conductor as well as one of operatic and symphonic music. The management of Symphony Hall announces three special concerts to be given on Tuesday evenings, Nov. 20, Jan. 22, and March 26.

At the first concert, the principal work will be the ninth symphony of Beethoven. The second concert will bring the first performance in America of Gustav Mahler's second symphony. At the third concert, in Holy Week, Bach's "Passion According to Matthew" will be sung.

It is well known that one of Dr. Muck's chief regrets during his engagements in Boston has been that it has been impossible for him to give any choral works, owing to the lack of a proper chorus. In the spring of 1914, arrangements were made with the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto under Dr. Vogt, to stop in Boston on its way to Europe in the spring of 1915 for two concerts to be given with the Symphony Orchestra. At these two concerts, the principal works were to be Beethoven's symphony and Mahler's second symphony. The war prevented this arrangement being carried out.

The idea of forming a special chorus to work in co-operation with the Symphony orchestra was a direct result of Mr. Townsend's chorus last year for the performances of Liszt's "Faust" symphony in Boston and New York. At the last concert of 1915-16 Mr. Townsend trained a female chorus for Liszt's "Dante" symphony. Mr. Townsend suggested that it would be possible to assemble and organize a mixed chorus of 300 voices for important works with orchestra. Last summer Mr. Townsend sent out over 400 invitations to Boston singers, professional, semi-professional, and amateur. The response exceeded expectations and a month ago, the first rehearsals were held. The chorus at it stands today has approximately 375 members. Nothing is to be left undone to make the concerts successful. The out-of-town schedule of the orchestra has been cut down in order to provide ample time for the necessary orchestral rehearsals which must preceed the full rehearsals of chorus and orchestra. The soloists engaged and to be engaged are of the highest quality procurable. The principal quartet which will be heard in the performance of Beethoven's symphony comprises Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass. The soloists for the other concerts have not yet been engaged. Complete details regarding subscriptions will be announced shortly. In the meantime, mail orders for seats may be sent to Symphony Hall.

Globe Oct-14

Mahler's Second Symphony

By the announcement from Symphony Hall, Mahler's Second Symphony will be an anticipated novelty of the Winter. New York, Philadelphia and Chicago all recently have heard the stupendous eighth—"the symphony of 1000"—Chicago during Mr Stock's festival last Spring, the first two named cities by Mr Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra a season earlier.

Until now Mahler's fifth alone of his greater compositions has been heard in Boston. Besides the eighth symphony, Philadelphia also gave the same season the first performance in the country of Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" for tenor, contralto and orchestra, which the composer regarded as a tone poem. This and the ninth symphony were among his last compositions. The first and fourth of the symphonies have been done in Chicago. The third was brought forward for the first time in America at the Cincinnati festival of 1914 and the second was produced Dec 9, 1908, in New York by the Symphony and Oratorio Societies under Mahler's direction.

Gladened by the splendid success of the performances of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony last year, with the chorus of men so aoly assembled and prepared by Stephen Townsend, Dr Muck has encouraged Mr Townsend in the formation of a large chorus of mixed voices. This will be available for works demanding a complimentary chorus, and with the Symphony Orchestra, under Dr Muck's direction, will aid in three choral concerts, to be given on Tuesday evenings, Nov 20, Jan 22 and March 26, at Symphony Hall. Rehearsals under Mr Townsend's direction are in progress at Jacob Sleeper Hall on Wednesdays—the women choir in the afternoon and the men at 6. The membership now reaches 375.

The works to be sung are as follows: Nov 20, Beethoven's ninth symphony as the principal number, with Frieda Heinpel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton as soloists. Mahler's second symphony will be performed Jan 22 and Bach's Matthew passion music on March 26, which falls within Lent.

American Oct-14

The second pair of Symphony Concerts, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon, October 19, and Saturday evening, October 20, will present the first soloist of the season in the very distinguished Russian violinist, Efrem Zimbalist. Mr. Zimbalist has appeared but once with the orchestra, several years ago, when he played a not very interesting concerto for violin by the Russian composer, Glazounoff. This time Mr. Zimbalist will play the Beethoven Concerto.

Every now and then Dr. Muck gives a program which contains no symphony and no symphony will be played at these second concerts. The orchestral pieces will be the "Finlandia" of Sibelius, Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'Extase," and the brilliant Rumanian Rhapsody in A major of Enesco.

Advertiser Oct-13

ZIMBALIST PLAYS HERE NEXT WEEK

Appears at Symphony Concerts As First Soloist of The Season

SCRIABIN'S "POEM" PROGRAM FEATURE

The second pair of Symphony concerts, which will be given in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Oct. 19, and Saturday evening, Oct. 20, will present the first soloist of the season in the very distinguished Russian violinist, Efrem Zimbalist. Mr. Zimbalist has appeared but once with the orchestra, several years ago, when he played a not very interesting concerto for violin by the Russian composer, Glazounoff. This time Mr. Zimbalist will play the Beethoven Concerto.

Every now and then Dr. Muck gives a program which contains no symphony, and no symphony will be played at these second concerts. The orchestral pieces will be the "Finlandia" of Sibelius, Scriabin's "Le Poeme de l'Extrase" and the brilliant Rumanian Rhapsody in a major of Enesco.

All of these works are familiar to the Symphony audiences, except the Symphonic Poem of the Russian Scriabin. This has appeared on only one program, that which was played Friday afternoon, Oct. 21, and Saturday evening, Oct. 22, 1910, under Mr. Fiedler. It is unusual music and was received at the time by the audience with much mixed feelings, but seven years has made such progress in the understanding of ultra-modern music that undobutedly it will make a much deeper impression now than it did then.

It was performed for the first time in America by the Russian Symphonist Society in New York in December, 1908. According to Mr. Modest Altschuler, who was with Scriabin when the latter was working on the Poem in Switzerland in the summer of 1907, the composer has sought to express something of the emotional side of his philosophy of life. The first is the composer's soul in the orgy of love; the second, the realization of a fantastical dream; and the third, the glory of his own art. It is said that the subject of "Le Poeme de l'Extase" begins where that of "Le divin Poeme" leaves off. The composer wrote the Poem as a program for his musical composition.

The program in its proper order is as follows:—

Sibelius, "Finlandia," Symphonic Poem for Orchestra, Op. 26, No. 7
Scriabin, Symphonic Poem, "La Poeme de l'Extass." Op. 54.
Beethoven, Concerto for violin and orchestra in D major, Op. 61.
Enesco, Rhapsodic Roumaine in A major, Op. 11, No. 1.
Soloist, Efram Zimbalist.

The first Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, Oct. 18, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be the brilliant Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, who then makes her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Later in the season, she is to play in Boston with the orchestra.

Miss Novaes is regarded as the most talented young woman pianist who has appeared in America in many years, and her performances with the Symphony Orchestra will be watched with interest by all who care for piano playing. She will play the Fourth Concert of Beethoven, that in G major.

The program of this concert comprises the first Symphony of the Finnish composer Sibelius, that in E minor; Beethoven's G major Concerto for piano and orchestra; and Berlioz's Overture "King Lear."

Americano Oct-14

CHORAL SOCIETY.

The various singing societies of Boston will receive a very important addition this season when the Symphony Choral Society makes its bow. This organization is a development of the chorus trained by Stephen Townsend for the performance of the "Faust" Symphony last season, and the female chorus directed by him for the "Dante" Symphony of Liszt the previous year. Mr. Townsend's work made it possible for Dr. Muck to add these important works to his Symphony programs.

This year Mr. Townsend's chorus has been increased to 375 voices, male and female. This makes it as large as the Handel & Haydn, and the People's Choral Union. With its assistance it will be possible for the Boston Symphony Orchestra to perform the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, which hasn't been sung here since 1910.

Post Oct-14

THREE CHORAL CONCERTS

This year for the first time Dr. Muck is realizing his ambition to have in Boston a chorus with which he can present, in conjunction with the Symphony Orchestra, choral works of first importance. Dr. Muck was famous in Europe as a choral conductor, as well as one of operatic and symphonic music, and it has always been his regret that he had been unable to do any work of this kind in Boston. Now an unusual chorus is at his command, and the management of Symphony Hall has announced three special concerts to be given on Tuesday evenings, and the dates are Nov. 20, Jan. 22 and March 26.

At the first concert, the principal work will be the Ninth (or choral) Symphony of Beethoven. The second concert will bring the first performance in America of Gustav Mahler's great Second Symphony. At the third concert, which falls in Holy Week, Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," will be sung.

It is well known that one of Dr. Muck's chief regrets during his engagements in Boston has been that it has been impossible for him to give any choral works, owing to the lack of a proper chorus. It will be remembered that in the spring of 1914 arrangements were made with the famous Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, under Dr. Vogt, to stop in Boston on its way to Europe in the spring of 1915 for two concerts to be given with the Symphony Orchestra. At these two concerts the principal works were to be Beethoven's Choral Symphony and Mahler's Second Symphony. The war, of course, prevented this arrangement being carried out very much to the disappointment of all concerned.

The idea of forming a special chorus to work in co-operation with the Symphony Orchestra was a direct result of the success of Mr. Stephen Townsend last year in training a male chorus for the several performances of Liszt's "Faust" symphony in Boston and New York. Mr. Townsend also trained a woman s chorus for the last concert of the season of 1915-16 when Liszt's "Dante" symphony was performed. Mr. Townsend suggested to Dr. Muck that it would be possible to assemble and organize a mixed chorus of 300 voices so that important choral works might be given with the orchestra. Dr. Muck gladly endorsed the plan, and last summer Mr. Townsend sent out over 400 invitations to Boston singers, professional, semi-professional and amateur, whom he knew had the voices, the ability and the training necessary for such work. In the invitation sent out, the long and arduous schedule of rehearsals was given in order that the singers might know what was expected of them.

The response exceeded Mr. Townsend's highest expectations. More than the necessary number of singers responded, and a month ago the first rehearsals were held. The rehearsals are held in the Jacob Sleeper Hall in Boston University on Wednesdays at present, the women's choir assembling on Wednesday afternoons and the men's choir at 6 o'clock Wednesday evenings. All these preliminary rehearsals are under the directon of Mr. Townsend. Later he will turn over the chorus to Dr. Muck for the final rehearsal with orchestra. The chorus as it stands today has approximately 375 members, divided into the usual groups of first and second sopranos, altos, first and second tenors, baritones and basses.

The out-of-town schedule of the orchestra has been cut down in order to provide ample time for the necessary orchestral rehearsals whihc must perceed the full rehearsals of chorus and orchestra. The soloists engaged and to be engaged are of the best quality procurable. The principal quartet which will be heard in the performance of the Choral Symphony of Beethoven comprises Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass. The soloists for the other two concerts have not yet been engaged.

The Ninth Symphony was last given in Boston at the Symphony concerts of April 29 and 30, 1910, under Mr. Fiedler. Then, as two years previously, when Mr. Fiedler gave it, the chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mahler's Second Symphony, so far as we know, has never been given in the United States. Its performance requires one hour and 40 minutes and it employs a soprano and contralto soloist in addition to a large orchestra and chorus. Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," is, of course, familiar to the musical public of Boston having been given here many times.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The first Symphony Concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, Oct. 18, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be the Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, who then makes her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Later in the season she will play in Boston with the orchestra. Miss Novaes will play the Fourth Concerto of Beethoven.

The programme includes the First Symphony of Sibelius and Berlioz's Overture "King Lear."

Globe Oct-14

Zimbalist Soloist at Symphony Concerts

Efrem Zimbalist, the distinguished Russian violinist, will be the soloist at the second pair of Symphony concerts of this Friday and Saturday. At his single previous appearance here with the orchestra, Mr Zimbalist played the Glazounow concerto. This time he has chosen the Beethoven.

The orchestral program, which will be without a symphony, will be the "Finlandia" of Sibelius; Scriabin's "Poem o Ecstacy," and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody in A major. The Poem was played here but once, in October, 1910, by Mr Fiedler, and was introduced in America by the Russian Symphony Society in December, 1908, at a concert in New York. Modest Altschuler, who was with the late Russian composer when he was working on the Poem in Switzerland in the Summer of 1907, says Scriabin has sought to express something of the emotional side of his philosophy of life. The first is the composer's soul in the orgy of love; the second, the realization of a fantastical dream; and the third, the glory of his own art. It is said that the subject of "Le Poeme de l'Extase" begins where that of "Le divin Poeme" leaves off. The composer wrote the Poem as a program for his musical composition.

Advertiser Oct-15

SYMPHONY TO GIVE 3 CHORAL CONCERTS

Rehearsals Held in Jacob Sleeper Hall—Chorus Has 375 Members

SOLOISTS OF HIGHEST RANK TO BE HEARD

Although it has been known for some time in a general way that it is the purpose of the Symphony Orchestra the coming winter to give three concerts of choral music, formal announcement of the same has been made only now by the management. The concerts will be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evenings, and the dates are Nov. 20, Jan. 22 and March 26.

At the first concert, the principal work will be the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. At the second concert, the only work will be the Second Symphony of Gustav Mahler. At the third and last concert, which comes in Holy Week, "The "Passion according to St. Matthew" will be sung. All of these concerts will have Dr. Muck as conductor.

It is well known that one of Dr. Muck's chief regrets during his engagements in Boston has been that it has been impossible for him to give any choral works, owing to the lack of a proper chorus. It will be remembered that in the spring of 1914, arrangements were made with the famous Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, under Dr. Vogt, to stop in Boston on its way to Europe in the spring of 1915 for two concerts to be given with the Symphony Orchestra. At these two concerts, the principal works were to be Beethoven's Choral Symphony and Mahler's Second Symphony. The war, of course, prevented this arrangement being carried out, very much to the disappointment of all concerned.

The idea of forming a special chorus to work in co-operation with the Symphony Orchestra was a direct result of the remarkable success that Mr. Stephen Townsend had last year in training a male chorus for the several performances of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony in Boston and New York. At the last concert of the season of 1915-16 Mr. Townsend had trained a women's chorus for the performance of Liszt's "Dante" Symphony.

Mr. Townsend suggested to Dr. Muck that it would be possible to assemble and organize a mixed chorus of 300 voices so that important choral works might be given with the orchestra. Dr. Muck gladly endorsed the plan, and last summer Mr. Townsend sent out over 400 invitations to Boston singers — professional, semi-professional and amateur—who he knew had the voices, the ability and the training necessary for such work. In the invitation sent out the long and arduous schedule of rehearsals was given in order that the singers might know what was expected of them.

The response exceeded Mr. Townsend's highest expectations, and a month ago the first rehearsals were held. The rehearsals are held in the Jacob Sleeper Hall in Boston University on Wednesdays at present, the women's choir assembling on Wednesday afternoons and the men's choir at 6 o'clock Wednesday evenings. All these preliminary rehearsals are under the direction of Mr. Townsend, and later he will turn over the chorus to Dr. Muck for the final rehearsal with orchestra.

The chorus as it stands today has approximately 375 members, divided into the usual groups of first and second sopranos, altos, first and second tenors, baritones, and basses. The work has begun with the utmost enthusiasm on the part of the men and women who are making real sacrifices to give the time necessary for rehearsals, and the promise is that Boston will hear at these concerts some most remarkable choral singing.

Nothing is to be left undone to make the concerts thoroughly successful. The out of town schedule of the orchestra has been cut down in order to provide ample time for the necessary orchestral rehearsals which must precede the full rehearsals of chorus and orchetsra. The soloists engaged and to be engaged are of the very highest quality procurable. The principal quartet which will be heard in the performance of the Choral Symphony of Beethoven comprises Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass. The soloists for the other two concerts have not yet been engaged.

The Ninth Symphony was last given in Boston at the Symphony Concerts of April 29 and 30, 1910, under Mr. Fiedler. Then, as two years previously when Mr. Fiedler gave it, the chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mahler's Second Symphony, so far as we know, has never been given in the United States. Its performance requires one hour and 40 minutes and it employs a soprano and contralto soloist in addition to a large orchestra and chorus. Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion" is, of course, familiar to the musical public of Boston, having been given here many times.

Complete details regarding subscription and the like will be announced shortly. In the meantime, mail orders for seats may be sent to Symphony Hall.

ENQUIRER

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

Oct. 14, 1917.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Philadelphia this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at George T. Haly's office in Heppe's piano rooms, 1119 Chestnut street, tomorrow (Monday) morning, October 15. The season of 1917 will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra itself and the thirty-third consecutive season in which the orchestra has been a visitor to this city. Its first appearance here was in the spring of 1885 and since 1888 the number of concerts given each winter has never been less than five, and for several years they were ten.

This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music on Monday evenings. The dates are November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. For the first time in its history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far at least the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck, despite all prophesies to the contrary, will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia, primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring, and in addition to her appearances in opera, and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Philadelphia during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist.

Herald Oct. 14-1917

PLAYS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Efrem Zimbalist, Violinist, the Soloist with the Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 19 and 20.

Evening Star
Washington, D.C. Sept. 23

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the National Theater, have been notified that the tickets for the series will be ready for delivery on and after Thursday, October 18, at Droop's music store. The subscription, according to Mrs. Wilson-Greene, who has the local management of the concerts, is quite equal to that of past years.

The concerts will be given, as usual, on Tuesday afternoons, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12, all of them at 4:30 o'clock. Three soloists are announced, Mme. Melba, who is on her way from Australia to this country; Winifred Christie, Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year.

Times
Brooklyn, Sept. 29.

Boston Symphony Plans.

Mme. Melba Will Be Soloist at First Concert in Academy of Music in December.

Renewals of subscriptions and new subscriptions have been received in large numbers by the Institute for the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy this coming season. Madame Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert, the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the Orchestra in Boston last fall. In January, the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

First Concert Will Be Given on November 1 at the Academy of Music.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city on Saturday evening, May 4.

Record
Philadelphia, Oct, 7.

* * *

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which had been in this city during the past week making records for the Victor Company in Camden, left for Boston last Friday evening, and tomorrow morning has its first rehearsal of the season. The first concerts will be on Friday and Saturday. The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in this city the coming season will open at Haly's ticket agency in Heppe's piano rooms a week from tomorrow. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December, Madam Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January, Kreisler will play, and in February the soloist will be Winifred Christie, a pianist of unusual qualities. The first concert will be on Monday evening November 5.

Star
Baltimore, Sept. 28.

MUSIC LOVERS TO ENJOY BIG TREAT

Total of 21 Symphony Orchestra Concerts Will Be Held Here.

FINE LIST OF SOLOISTS

Baltimore will have 21 scheduled symphony orchestra concerts this season—the largest number in the city's history. There will be five by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor; five by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski, conductor; four by the Symphony Society of New York, Walter Damrosch, conductor, and seven by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Gustav Strube, conductor.

The dates of these concerts are:

Boston Symphony Orchestra—November 7, December 5, 1917; January 9, February 13 and March 13, 1918.

Philadelphia Orchestra—November 14, December 12, 1917; January 16, February 6 and March 6, 1918.

New York Symphony Orchestra—November 27, 1917; January 21, February 26 and April 4, 1918.

Baltimore Symphony Orchestra—October 19, November 16, December 28, 1917; January 25, February 15, March 22 and April 19, 1918.

The Boston organization will present three special soloists. They are Mme. Nellie Melba, Australian soprano; Miss Winifred Christie, Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler, violinist.

The Philadelphia association will feature Margarete Matzenauer, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Jacques Thibaud, violinist, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist.

Mr. Damrosch will present Mme. Galli-Curci, soprano; Percy Grainger, pianist, and Jascha Heifetz, violinist.

The list of Baltimore Symphony Orchestra soloists is not at hand.

Renewal subscriptions to the Boston concerts can be made until October 15. On that day the public sale begins. Season subscriptions to the Philadelphia and New York orchestras' concerts are on sale now to the public, and single-ticket sales for the former will begin October 9. Tickets for the concerts of the Baltimore orchestra will be sold singly for each concert, as formerly; season subscriptions are not accepted.

Advance subscriptions to the Boston Symphony concerts here are said to be about what they have been at this time in former years. Subscriptions to the Philadelphia and New York Symphony concerts are believed to be better than formerly.

In view of the fact that the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Josef Stransky, conductor, discontinued Baltimore from its itinerary last year through lack of desired support, the courage and financial venture of the most recent orchestras to visit Baltimore—the Philadelphia and the New York Symphony Orchestras—to enlarge their series of concerts here is considerable. They are highly deserving, and it is hoped their support will be ample.

Herald Oct-13

37TH SYMPHONY SEASON OPENED

Audience Greets Dr. Karl Muck Warmly and Applauds Orchestra.

LISZT'S 'PROMETHEUS' GIVEN

By PHILIP HALE.

The first concert of the 37th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, overture to "King Lear"; Liszt "Prometheus," Symphonic poem No. 5; Wagner, Prelude to "Parsifal."

Liszt's "Prometheus" was performed for the first time at these concerts. The symphonic poem and the choral music for Herder's play were performed here in 1876 at a Liszt-Wagner concert conducted by Theodore Thomas. Liszt composed the symphonic poem in 1850, about 20 years after Berlioz raved over "King Lear" in Florence and wrote his overture to the tragedy; yet in 1850 Liszt was still a romanticist of the Parisian '30's. This is seen in the explanatory preface of "Prometheus." This preface contains sentences that recall Thackeray's burlesque of Bulwer's earlier novels. "Fate, Passion, Mystery, the Victim, the Avenger, the Hate that harms, the Furies that tear, the Love that bleeds, are not these with us still? Are not these the weapons of the Artist? the colors of his palette? the chords of his lyre?" This passage from "George De' Barnwell" might easily find place in Liszt's preface. If the Hugo of "Hernani" and the Dumas of "Antony" had written music it would have been in the manner of Berlioz and Liszt, and in 1850 Liszt was still a man of the '30's.

The rhetorical eloquence of one generation may well be only extravagance, hifalutin to the generations that follow. Would the House of Commons hear patiently today the speech of a Burke or a Sheridan? Would a jury listen in rapt attention to the summing up of a Rufus Choate? Would the solemn sentences of Webster, spoken by a man off lesser fame and less commanding personality, impress the Senate of today? The wild enthusiasm of Liszt and Berlioz is not easily understood by lovers of delicate tints, elusive rhythms, vague melodies and impressionistic effects. Even the contemporaneous countrymen of the two men were often frightened or bored by the heaven-defying compositions. And some in this century are still perplexed, disturbed, and find the "grandeur" circus-pomp; the pathos, bathos.

Yet there is no denying the genius and the sincerity of the two. They were terribly in earnest. What would music be today if Berlioz and Listz had not lived and worked in the face of discouragement that would have frozen the imagination of less heroic souls? Their greater works are more and more commanding as the years roll on, while compositions that for a month, a year, were hastily hailed as "epoch-making" are now dusty in libraries, or it dragged out into the concert hall and opera house are withered, wan, pitiable.

To Liszt the basic thought of the myth concerning Prometheus is that of misfortune and glory, and this thought must needs have a stormy, "fulgurante" expression. "Fulgurante" takes us back to the 30's, as the hero of poetry and drama was characterized as "fatal." The Prometheus of the symphonic poem is still chained to the crag, raging and defiant. Other composers, Goldmark and the more academic Bargiel, have attempted to express the scene in music. Has any one of them attained Aeschylean grandeur? Charles Lamb thought that the woe of King Lear could not be mimicked on the stage. Music may work a mightier spell than any display of acting. Do the Prometheus of Liszt and the Lear of Berlioz answer to the heroes of the dramatists?

Neither of the two works is representative of the composer at the height of his power. Berlioz evidently was more obsessed by the thought of Cordelia—possibly on account of his love for Miss Smithson, the actress—than by the storm, Lear and his madness. Yet the overture was worth hearing yesterday if only for the sake of Mr. Longy's beautiful playing of the pathetic solo for oboe. Liszt of the "Prometheus" had this advantage: he had been able to study the music of Berlioz for 20 years; but how inferior is "Prometheus," how barren of ideas, in comparison with "Tasso," "Mazeppa," "The Preludes," the "Faust" symphony, the two piano concertos! Nor does the fugue console one, whether it typifies Epimetheus or another. The brilliant performance only emphasized the emptiness of the music.

The prelude to "Parsifal" suffers more than other orchestral pages from Wagner's music dramas when it is played in the concert hall. There is need, for full effect, of the darkened theatre, the unseen players, the consequent suggestion of mystery, the anticipation of the drama to come.

Dr. Muck was warmly greeted on his entrance, and he and the orchestra were vigorously applauded throughout the concert, which will be repeated tonight.

The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Sibelius, "Finlandia"; Scriabin, "Poem of Ecstasy"; Beethoven, concerto for violin, Mr. Zimbalist, violinist; Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.

Standard Union
Brooklyn, N.Y. Oct. 7.

Despite the war, or perhaps because of the war, the coming season of music promises to be quite the most prosperous this country has ever known. This great prosperity will, to be sure, be confined to the larger organizations and the more famous artists. Last year was disastrous for young artists and those of mediocre quality, and the coming season promises to be even more so. The Boston Symphony Orchestra looks forward to the most successful season in its history. The five concerts it is to give in Brooklyn will be, as in past years, practically sold out. There will be only three soloists, Madame Melba coming in December, Fritz Kreisler in January, and Winifred Christie in February.

Transcript, Oct, 15,

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

AGAIN THE RECORD OF WEEK-END CONCERTS

Beethoven and Dr. Muck at Symphony Hall — Mr. McCormack Returns with Various Fresh Pieces—Sentiment Versus Sentimentality in His Singing—As New York Heard Mr. Havens—A Brass Quartet Formed—Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Zimbalist

EXCEPT in the quality of the music and the performance, the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening was as eventless as that of Friday afternoon. With like warmth, a like audience in numbers, pleasure and admiration applauded Dr. Muck when he first came to his place; renewed and intensified its clapping at the end of Beethoven's symphony in C minor; and at the close of the concert lingered to recall the conductor once more. The unfamiliar symphonic poem of Liszt, "Prometheus," and the scantily remembered overture of Berlioz to "King Lear" went by night much as thirty hours earlier they had gone by day. As it happened, however, the prelude to "Parsifal" and the playing of it seemed to make less deep impression upon the audience than they had on Friday afternoon. Then hearers, orchestra, conductor and, as it seemed, the composer himself, were at a height of emotional tension that is the boon of the high gods, descending not at call. So speedy a repetition was almost sure to fail to bring it.

For compensation the performance of Beethoven's symphony exceeded even that of Friday in tonal beauty and dramatizing eloquence. Confident of his orchestra, confident of himself, plainly kindled by a masterpiece of music expanding under his hand as by intrinsic freedom and force, Dr. Muck drove the first movement forward and upward with a dramatic progress, contrast and culmination that seemed of some idealized music-drama released for once from all handicap of mortal and fleshly singers. The second movement, as large and warm of voice in the proclamation and the progress of the melodies and the passion, preserved this dramatic continuity and was far from the songful intermezzo in the main course of the symphony that some over-sentimental and short-sighted conductors are prone to make of it. Highest of all went this dramatic propulsion and contrasting in the swelling sonorities, the striding progressions, the bursts of exulting song, the Titan-chords, blow upon blow, of the Finale. Is it not more eloquent, being freer, less labored and more unified in the matter and the means of expression, than even the Finale of the Choral Symphony and where is there aught in symphonic music to compare with it out side the finale of Brahms's symphony in the like key? To hear it, as it sounded on Saturday, was to listen to Beethoven as epical, as dramatic as Æschylus himself.

Star
Baltimore, Sept, 27

To Record Symphony Music.

A radical departure in its musical affairs will occur next week, when the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Karl Muck, will make phonograph records for a leading concern. The orchestra will begin in Boston its regular concert season on October 12. Its Baltimore season begins in November.

Post
Oct, 17, 1917

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT HARVARD TOMORROW

The first of the series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Sanders' Theatre at Harvard tomorrow evening. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct, and the soloist will be Miss Guiomar Novaes. The following programme will be given: Symphony No. 1, in E minor, opus 39, Sibelius; concerto for piano and orchestra in G major, No. 4, opus 58, Beethoven; overture, "King Lear," opus 4, Berlioz.

Transcript.
Oct, 15, 1917.

Items and Announcements

Only in Cambridge of the cities close to Boston, does the Symphony Orchestra regularly undertake concerts. By exception it went yesterday to Lynn to play in one of Father Supple's Sunday Concerts in a big movie house. Dr. Muck conducted through a programme comprising the fourth symphony of Tschaikowski, the first suite of Bizet's music to "L'Arlésienne" and other readily likable pieces.

Here follows in order and in detail, Mr. Kreisler's programme for his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon:

Sonata in G minor.....Tartini
Sarabande, Double and Bourrée in B minor, for violin alone.....Bach
Scottish Fantasia.....Bruch
Grave in C minor.....Friedemann Bach
Cavatina in E-flat major.....Beethoven
Minuet in D major.....Haydn
Rondo in D major.....Schubert
La Gitana (Arab-Spanish song of the Eighteenth Century, arranged by Kreisler).
Polichinelle (Serenade).....Kreisler
Waves at Play.....Grasse
Polonaise in A major.....Wieniawski

Messrs. Nappi, Jaenecke, Belgiorno and Kenfield of the brass choirs of the Symphony Orchestra have joined themselves together as the Symphony Brass Quartet, to give occasional concerts of novel music for trumpet, horn, trombone and euphonium. The first will befall at Steinert Hall, on Monday evening, Nov. 26.

Within a fortnight after Mr. Zimbalist's return to the Symphony Concerts next week, the violinist will be heard in Boston in a recital of his own—the first he has ventured here since his early years in the United States. It is announced for Saturday afternoon, Nov. 3, in Jordan Hall, and the programme traverses Franck's sonata for violin and piano; Bach's chaconne; Lalo's Spanish Symphony and four short pieces by Tor Aulin.

For the second time since Dr. Muck has led the Symphony Orchestra, it will undertake a concert in Chicago, on Friday evening, Feb. 1, during the annual journey westward.

Herald Oct. 14-1917

PLAYS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Efrem Zimbalist, Violinist, the Soloist with the Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 19 and 20.

Evening Star
Washington D.C. Sept. 23

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the National Theater, have been notified that the tickets for the series will be ready for delivery on and after Thursday, October 18, at Droop's music store. The subscription, according to Mrs. Wilson-Greene, who has the local management of the concerts, is quite equal to that of past years.

The concerts will be given, as usual, on Tuesday afternoons, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12, all of them at 4:30 o'clock. Three soloists are announced, Mme. Melba, who is on her way from Australia to this country; Winifred Christie, Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year.

Times
Brooklyn, Sept. 29.

Boston Symphony Plans.

Mme. Melba Will Be Soloist at First Concert in Academy of Music in December.

Renewals of subscriptions and new subscriptions have been received in large numbers by the Institute for the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy this coming season. Madame Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert, the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the Orchestra in Boston last fall. In January, the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

Telegraph
Philadelphia, Sept. 22.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

First Concert Will Be Given on November 1 at the Academy of Music.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city on Saturday evening, May 4.

Record
Philadelphia, Oct, 7.

* * *

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which had been in this city during the past week making records for the Victor Company in Camden, left for Boston last Friday evening, and tomorrow morning has its first rehearsal of the season. The first concerts will be on Friday and Saturday. The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in this city the coming season will open at Haly's ticket agency in Heppe's piano rooms a week from tomorrow. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December, Madam Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January, Kreisler will play, and in February the soloist will be Winifred Christie, a pianist of unusual qualities. The first concert will be on Monday evening, November 5.

Star
Baltimore, Sept. 28.

MUSIC LOVERS TO ENJOY BIG TREAT

Total of 21 Symphony Orchestra Concerts Will Be Held Here.

FINE LIST OF SOLOISTS

Baltimore will have 21 scheduled symphony orchestra concerts this season—the largest number in the city's history. There will be five by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor; five by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski, conductor; four by the Symphony Society of New York, Walter Damrosch, conductor, and seven by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Gustav Strube, conductor.

The dates of these concerts are:

Boston Symphony Orchestra—November 7, December 5, 1917; January 9, February 13 and March 13, 1918.

Philadelphia Orchestra — November 14, December 12, 1917; January 16, February 6 and March 6, 1918.

New York Symphony Orchestra—November 27, 1917; January 21, February 26 and April 4, 1918.

Baltimore Symphony Orchestra—October 19, November 16, December 28, 1917; January 25, February 15, March 22 and April 19, 1918.

The Boston organization will present three special soloists. They are Mme. Nellie Melba, Australian soprano; Miss Winifred Christie, Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler, violinist.

The Philadelphia association will feature Margarete Matzenauer, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Jacques Thibaud, violinist, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist.

Mr. Damrosch will present Mme. Galli-Curci, soprano; Percy Grainger, pianist, and Jascha Heifetz, violinist.

The list of Baltimore Symphony Orchestra soloists is not at hand.

Renewal subscriptions to the Boston concerts can be made until October 15. On that day the public sale begins. Season subscriptions to the Philadelphia and New York orchestras' concerts are on sale now to the public, and single-ticket sales for the former will begin October 9. Tickets for the concerts of the Baltimore orchestra will be sold singly for each concert, as formerly; season subscriptions are not accepted.

Advance subscriptions to the Boston Symphony concerts here are said to be about what they have been at this time in former years. Subscriptions to the Philadelphia and New York Symphony concerts are believed to be better than formerly.

In view of the fact that the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Josef Stransky, conductor, discontinued Baltimore from its itinerary last year through lack of desired support, the courage and financial venture of the most recent orchestras to visit Baltimore—the Philadelphia and the New York Symphony Orchestras—to enlarge their series of concerts here is considerable. They are highly deserving, and it is hoped their support will be ample.

Herald Oct - 13

37TH SYMPHONY SEASON OPENED

Audience Greets Dr. Karl Muck Warmly and Applauds Orchestra.

LISZT'S 'PROMETHEUS' GIVEN

By PHILIP HALE.

The first concert of the 37th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, overture to "King Lear"; Liszt "Prometheus," Symphonic poem No. 5; Wagner, Prelude to "Parsifal."

Liszt's "Prometheus" was performed for the first time at these concerts. The symphonic poem and the choral music for Herder's play were performed here in 1876 at a Liszt-Wagner concert conducted by Theodore Thomas. Liszt composed the symphonic poem in 1850, about 20 years after Berlioz raved over "King Lear" in Florence and wrote his overture to the tragedy; yet in 1850 Liszt was still a romanticist of the Parisian '30's. This is seen in the explanatory preface of "Prometheus." This preface contains sentences that recall Thackeray's burlesque of Bulwer's earlier novels. "Fate, Passion, Mystery, the Victim, the Avenger, the Hate that harms, the Furies that tear, the Love that bleeds, are not these with us still? Are not these the weapons of the Artist? the colors of his palette? the chords of his lyre?" This passage from "George De' Barnwell" might easily find place in Liszt's preface. If the Hugo of "Hernani" and the Dumas of "Antony" had written music it would have been in the manner of Berlioz and Liszt, and in 1850 Liszt was still a man of the '30's.

The rhetorical eloquence of one generation may well be only extravagance, hifalutin to the generations that follow. Would the House of Commons hear patiently today the speech of a Burke or a Sheridan? Would a jury listen in rapt attention to the summing up of a Rufus Choate? Would the solemn sentences of Webster, spoken by a man of lesser fame and less commanding personality, impress the Senate of today? The wild enthusiasm of Liszt and Berlioz is not easily understood by lovers of delicate tints, elusive rhythms, vague melodies and impressionistic effects. Even the contemporaneous countrymen of the two men were often frightened or bored by the heaven-defying compositions. And some in this century are still perplexed, disturbed, and find the "grandeur" circus-pomp; the pathos, bathos.

Yet there is no denying the genius and the sincerity of the two. They were terribly in earnest. What would music be today if Berlioz and Listz had not lived and worked in the face of discouragement that would have frozen the imagination of less heroic souls? Their greater works are more and more commanding as the years roll on, while compositions that for a month, a year, were hastily hailed as "epoch-making" are now dusty in libraries, or it dragged out into the concert hall and opera house are withered, wan, pitiable.

To Liszt the basic thought of the myth concerning Prometheus is that of misfortune and glory, and this thought must needs have a stormy, "fulgurante" expression. "Fulgurante" takes us back to the 30's, as the hero of poetry and drama was characterized as "fatal." The Prometheus of the symphonic poem is still chained to the crag, raging and defiant. Other composers, Goldmark and the more academic Bargiel, have attempted to express the scene in music. Has any one of them attained Aeschylean grandeur? Charles Lamb thought that the woe of King Lear could not be mimicked on the stage. Music may work a mightier spell than any display of acting. Do the Prometheus of Liszt and the Lear of Berlioz answer to the heroes of the dramatists?

Neither of the two works is representative of the composer at the height of his power. Berlioz evidently was more obsessed by the thought of Cordelia—possibly on account of his love for Miss Smithson, the actress—than by the storm, Lear and his madness. Yet the overture was worth hearing yesterday if only for the sake of Mr. Longy's beautiful playing of the pathetic solo for oboe. Liszt of the "Prometheus" had this advantage: he had been able to study the music of Berlioz for 20 years; but how inferior is "Prometheus," how barren of ideas, in comparison with "Tasso," "Mazeppa," "The Preludes," the "Faust" symphony, the two piano concertos! Nor does the fugue console one, whether it typifies Epimetheus or another. The brilliant performance only emphasized the emptiness of the music.

The prelude to "Parsifal" suffers more than other orchestral pages from Wagner's music dramas when it is played in the concert hall. There is need, for full effect, of the darkened theatre, the unseen players, the consequent suggestion of mystery, the anticipation of the drama to come.

Dr. Muck was warmly greeted on his entrance, and he and the orchestra were vigorously applauded throughout the concert, which will be repeated tonight.

The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Sibelius, "Finlandia"; Scriabin, "Poem of Ecstasy"; Beethoven, concerto for violin, Mr. Zimbalist, violinist; Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.

Standard Union
Brooklyn, N.Y. Oct. 7.

Despite the war, or perhaps because of the war, the coming season of music promises to be quite the most prosperous this country has ever known. This great prosperity will, to be sure, be confined to the larger organizations and the more famous artists. Last year was disastrous for young artists and those of mediocre quality, and the coming season promises to be even more so. The Boston Symphony Orchestra looks forward to the most successful season in its history. The five concerts it is to give in Brooklyn will be, as in past years, practically sold out. There will be only three soloists, Madame Melba coming in December, Fritz Kreisler in January, and Winifred Christie in February.

Transcript, Oct, 15,

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

AGAIN THE RECORD OF WEEK-END CONCERTS

Beethoven and Dr. Muck at Symphony Hall — Mr. McCormack Returns with Various Fresh Pieces—Sentiment Versus Sentimentality in His Singing—As New York Heard Mr. Havens—A Brass Quartet Formed—Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Zimbalist

EXCEPT in the quality of the music and the performance, the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening was as eventless as that of Friday afternoon. With like warmth, a like audience in numbers, pleasure and admiration applauded Dr. Muck when he first came to his place; renewed and intensified its clapping at the end of Beethoven's symphony in C minor; and at the close of the concert lingered to recall the conductor once more. The unfamiliar symphonic poem of Liszt, "Prometheus," and the scantily remembered overture of Berlioz to "King Lear" went by night much as thirty hours earlier they had gone by day. As it happened, however, the preludo to "Parsifal" and the playing of it seemed to make less deep impression upon the audience than they had on Friday afternoon. Then hearers, orchestra, conductor and, as it seemed, the composer himself, were at a height of emotional tension that is the boon of the high gods, descending not at call. So speedy a repetition was almost sure to fail to bring it.

For compensation the performance of Beethoven's symphony exceeded even that of Friday in tonal beauty and dramatizing eloquence. Confident of his orchestra, confident of himself, plainly kindled by a masterpiece of music expanding under his hand as by intrinsic freedom and force, Dr. Muck drove the first movement forward and upward with a dramatic progress, contrast and culmination that seemed of some idealized music-drama released for once from all handicap of mortal and fleshly singers. The second movement, as large and warm of voice in the proclamation and the progress of the melodies and the passion, preserved this dramatic continuity and was far from the songful intermezzo in the main course of the symphony that some over-sentimental and short-sighted conductors are prone to make of it. Highest of all went this dramatic propulsion and contrasting in the swelling sonorities, the striding progressions, the bursts of exulting song, the Titan-chords, blow upon blow, of the Finale. Is it not more eloquent, being freer, less labored and more unified in the matter and the means of expression, than even the Finale of the Choral Symphony and where is there aught in symphonic music to compare with it outside the finale of Brahms's symphony in the like key? To hear it, as it sounded on Saturday, was to listen to Beethoven as epical, as dramatic as Æschylus himself.

Star
Baltimore, Sept, 27

To Record Symphony Music.

A radical departure in its musical affairs will occur next week, when the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Karl Muck, will make phonograph records for a leading concern. The orchestra will begin in Boston its regular concert season on October 12. Its Baltimore season begins in November.

Post
Oct, 17, 1917

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT HARVARD TOMORROW

The first of the series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Sanders' Theatre at Harvard tomorrow evening. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct, and the soloist will be Miss Guiomar Novaes. The following programme will be given: Symphony No. 1, in E minor, opus 39, Sibelius; concerto for piano and orchestra in G major, No. 4, opus 58, Beethoven; overture, "King Lear," opus 4, Berlioz.

Transcript.
Oct, 15, 1917.

Items and Announcements

Only in Cambridge of the cities close to Boston, does the Symphony Orchestra regularly undertake concerts. By exception it went yesterday to Lynn to play in one of Father Supple's Sunday Concerts in a big movie house. Dr. Muck conducted through a programme comprising the fourth symphony of Tschaikowski, the first suite of Bizet's music to "L'Arlésienne" and other readily likable pieces.

Here follows in order and in detail, Mr. Kreisler's programme for his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon:

Sonata in G minor.....Tartini
Sarabande, Double and Bourrée in B minor, for violin alone.....Bach
Scottish Fantasia.....Bruch
Grave in C minor.....Friedemann Bach
Cavatina in E-flat major.....Beethoven
Minuet in D major.....Haydn
Rondo in D major.....Schubert
La Gitana (Arab-Spanish song of the Eighteenth Century, arranged by Kreisler).
Polichinelle (Serenade).....Kreisler
Waves at Play.....Grasse
Polonaise in A major.....Wieniawski

Messrs, Nappi, Jaenecke, Belgiorno and Kenfield of the brass choirs of the Symphony Orchestra have joined themselves together as the Symphony Brass Quartet, to give occasional concerts of novel music for trumpet, horn, trombone and euphonium. The first will befall at Steinert Hall, on Monday evening, Nov. 26.

Within a fortnight after Mr. Zimbalist's return to the Symphony Concerts next week, the violinist will be heard in Boston in a recital of his own—the first he has ventured here since his early years in the United States. It is announced for Saturday afternoon, Nov. 3, in Jordan Hall, and the programme traverses Franck's sonata for violin and piano; Bach's Chaconne; Lalo's Spanish Symphony and four short pieces by Tor Aulin.

For the second time since Dr. Muck has led the Symphony Orchestra, it will undertake a concert in Chicago, on Friday evening, Feb. 1, during the annual journey westward.

Advertiser
Oct, 17, 1917

SYMPHONY HEARD AT SANDERS TOMORROW

The first of the series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Sanders Theatre at Harvard tomorrow evening. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct, and the soloist will be Miss Guiomar Novaes. The following program will be given: Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Opus 39, Sibelius; Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in G Major, No. 4, Opus 58, Beethoven; Overture, "King Lear," Opus 4, Berlioz.

News
Baltimore Md. Sept. 22.

...TON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Lyric Theater the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler. The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year.

Enquirer
Philadelphia, Pa, Sept. 25.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city on Saturday evening, May 4.

Enquirer
Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in Philadelphia the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at Haly's Ticket Agency, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, a week from tomorrow, Monday, October 15. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December Madame Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January Kreisler will play and in February the soloist will be Winifred Christie. Miss Christie is a pianist of very unusual qualities. She is one of the very few women pianists who are womanly pianists. The first concert comes Monday evening, November 5.

Standard Union
Brooklyn, N.Y. Sept. 30

Renewals of subscriptions and new subscriptions have been received in large numbers by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences for the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy this coming season. Madame Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the orchestra in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts. The orchestra itself will be undergoing a very novel experience this coming week. Its entire personnel and Dr. Muck will be in Camden, N. J., where it will spend the week making records for the Victor Talking Machine. Several years ago it was agreed that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should make records whenever the Victor people believed that they were ready to do this successfully. Now it is the belief that orchestral records by a large orchestra can be made with good effect. The orchestra will return to Boston at the end of the week, and its regular season begins the following Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 12 and 13.

Evening Sun
Baltimore Md. Sept. 24

Time Limit For Tickets.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Concerts, which will be given in the Lyric theatre the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only this week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date will be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13. Three soloists are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city Saturday evening, May 4.

American
Baltimore, Sept. 30.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The subscription books for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Baltimore are now in the hands of W. A. Albaugh, who from this time on will have full charge of them. Madame Melba will be the first soloist of the season at the December concert. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

Times
Brooklyn, Sept. 6

MUSIC NOTES.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Despite War, Unusual Musical Prosperity Is Anticipated.

Despite the war, or perhaps because of the war, the coming season of music promises to be quite the most prosperous this country has ever known. This great prosperity will, to be sure, be confined to the larger organizations and the more famous artists. Last year was disastrous for young artists and those of mediocre quality and the coming season promises to be even more so.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra looks forward to the most successful season in its history. The five concerts it is to give in Brooklyn will be as in past years practically sold out. There will be only three soloists, Mme. Melba coming in December, Fritz Kreisler in January and Winifred Christie in February.

Press.
Philadelphia Oct. 7.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its season in Boston on next Friday and Saturday. The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in Philadelphia the coming season, will open at Haly's Ticket Office, 1119 Chestnut Street, Monday, October 15. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December, Madame Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January, Kreisler will play, and in February, the soloist will be Winifred Christie. Miss Christie is a pianist of very unusual qualities. She is one of the very few women pianists who are womanly pianists. The first concert comes Monday evening, November 6.

Public Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa. Sept. 22.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter who have not yet taken up their seats are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

Evening Sun
Baltimore
Sept, 29, 1917

MELBA TO SING HERE

Diva Will Be Soloist At First Boston Symphony Concert.

The subscription books for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Baltimore are now in the hands of W. A. Albaugh, who from this time on will have full charge of them.

Mme. Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season, at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia, and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the orchestra in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

The orchestra itself will be undergoing a very novel experience this coming week. Its entire personnel and Dr. Muck will make records for a talking machine. The regular season in Boston begins the following Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 12 and 13.

Traveler
Oct, 18, 1917

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Tonight at 8 in Sanders Theatre comes the first concert in the Cambridge series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The soloist will be Guiomar Novaes and the program comprises Sibelius's First Symphony in E minor, Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto in G major, and Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture.

Efram Zimbalist, Russian violinist, soloist at this week's Symphony concert, will play the Beethoven Concerto for violin and orchestra. The orchestral numbers comprise Sibelius's Symphonic Poem, "Finlandia"; Scriabin's Symphonic Poem, "Le Poeme de l'Extase" and Enesco's Roumanian Rhadsody.

Herald
Oct, 18, 1917

CONCERT NOTES

The first of the eight regular Symphony concerts given in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, will take place tonight at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be Guiomar Novaes. The program will comprise Sibelius's First Symphony, E minor; Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, G major, and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture.

Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinist, is the soloist at this week's Symphony concerts, tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Beethoven's Concerto. The orchestral numbers are Sibelius's "Finlandia," Scriabin's Symphonic Poem, "Le Poeme de l'Extase," and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody. The length of the concert is one hour and 45 minutes.

Advertiser
Oct, 28, 1917

REHEARSING FOR CHORAL CONCERTS

Singers Work Enthusiastically On Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The rehearsals of the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, have been in progress in Jacob Sleeper Hall, Boston University, since Sept. 12, the rehearsals coming once a week, the ladies in the afternoon and the men at 6 o'clock in the evening. So far, the women's and men's chorus have been rehearsing separately, but next Wednesday evening, Oct. 24, at 7.30 o'clock, will come the first full chorus rehearsal.

The enthusiasm with which these men and women are doing the work under the direction of Mr. Stephen Townsend is bringing very remarkable results, and the chorus is going to be a surprise to the Boston musical public.

There will be three full chorus rehearsals in Jacob Sleeper Hall on Oct. 24 and 31 and Nov. 7. Then there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the first on Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, and the second on Monday evening, Nov. 19. At this second rehearsal all the soloists will be present.

Mr. Ellis has not yet selected the soloists for the second concert, when Mahler's Second Symphony will be given, or for the third concert, when Bach's Passion music will be presented. At the first concert, as already announced, the soloists will be Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Monitor
Oct, 19, 1917

MUSIC

Boston Symphony in Cambridge

The first concert of the Cambridge series, given in Sanders Theater on Thursday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, was of unusual interest owing to the appearance of a new pianist, in the person of Miss Guiomar Novaes.

Miss Novaes is an artist of uncommon attainments, expressing an individuality in her work which at once carries one away from the possibility of measuring her musical equipment by the standing of any particular school of pedagogy, or even through a trace of nationalism. Her interpretation of Beethoven's fourth concerto was an exemplification of the universality of musical language spoken in its highest art-form, an interpretation which would always make a direct appeal, even to the unprepared musical thought. Her technical facilities, while something to be remembered, did not for a moment obscure the vital sense of individual freedom evidenced throughout the concerto. This young pianist has already a legato which is possessed by few pianists, and this was especially noticeable in the andante movement, which was played with rare poetic feeling. Dr. Muck's orchestral support was masterful and eminently satisfactory.

Of the Sibelius symphony, it cannot truly be said that it has a place among some of the great symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms or Tschaikowsky. The first and last movements have little to say in the way of inspiration, but rather leave one with an impression of musical idiosyncrasy, without point. Perhaps it is the almost surly atmosphere which seems to pervade these two movements, that offsets the possibility of their acceptance as symphony music worth while. The andante, however, is full of inspirational writing and wins unstinted approbation from the very beginning. The delicate tone shadings and especially the final diminuendo attained by the orchestra in this movement were noteworthy.

The overture to "King Lear," with its many varieties of mood and piquant coloring, is one of Berlioz' best pieces of orchestral writing, and Dr. Muck's intelligent and sympathetic reading of this, as well as of the symphony, left nothing to be desired.

The theater was well filled with an enthusiastic audience.

Standard Union
Oct, 14, 1917.

The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Brooklyn this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is now open at the box office of the Institute of Arts and Sciences, in the Academy of Music. The season of 1917 will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra itself and the thirtieth consecutive season in which the Orchestra has been a visitor to this city. This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any change in its personnel. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are that several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second, Mme. Melba will appear. In addition to her appearance in opera, she will give a limited number of concerts. Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Brooklyn during the coming winter will be at the January concert. The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with great success, and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts. Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription, as usual. A few, however, remain unsold. These may be obtained at the Institute box office in the Academy of Music.

Advertiser
Oct, 17, 1917

SYMPHONY HEARD AT SANDERS TOMORROW

The first of the series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at Sanders Theatre at Harvard tomorrow evening. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct, and the soloist will be Miss Guiomar Novaes. The following program will be given: Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Opus 39, Sibelius; Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in G Major, No. 4, Opus 58, Beethoven; Overture, "King Lear," Opus 4, Berlioz.

News
Baltimore Md. Sept. 22.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Lyric Theater the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler. The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year.

Enquirer
Philadelphia, Pa, Sept. 25.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Monday evenings, November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. Three concerts are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city on Saturday evening, May 4.

Enquirer
Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in Philadelphia the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at Haly's Ticket Agency, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, a week from tomorrow, Monday, October 15. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December Madame Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January Kreisler will play and in February the soloist will be Winifred Christie. Miss Christie is a pianist of very unusual qualities. She is one of the very few women pianists who are womanly pianists. The first concert comes Monday evening, November 5.

Standard Union
Brooklyn, N.Y. Sept. 30

Renewals of subscriptions and new subscriptions have been received in large numbers by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences for the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy this coming season. Madame Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the orchestra in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts. The orchestra itself will be undergoing a very novel experience this coming week. Its entire personnel and Dr. Muck will be in Camden, N. J., where it will spend the week making records for the Victor Talking Machine. Several years ago it was agreed that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should make records whenever the Victor people believed that they were ready to do this successfully. Now it is the belief that orchestral records by a large orchestra can be made with good effect. The orchestra will return to Boston at the end of the week, and its regular season begins the following Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 12 and 13.

Evening Sun
Baltimore Md. Sept. 24

Time Limit For Tickets.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Concerts, which will be given in the Lyric theatre the coming winter, who have not yet taken up their seats, are reminded that they have only this week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date will be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

As already announced, the concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13. Three soloists are announced. Madame Melba, Winifred Christie, that most interesting Scotch pianist, and Fritz Kreisler.

The orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, will return with exactly the same personnel it had last year. Although about a dozen of the younger men were liable for conscription, only two have been called and they were exempted. The orchestra begins its work in Boston Friday afternoon, October 12, and its season ends in the same city Saturday evening, May 4.

American
Baltimore, Sept. 30.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The subscription books for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Baltimore are now in the hands of W. A. Albaugh, who from this time on will have full charge of them. Madame Melba will be the first soloist of the season at the December concert. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

Times
Brooklyn, Sept. 6

MUSIC NOTES.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Despite War, Unusual Musical Prosperity Is Anticipated.

Despite the war, or perhaps because of the war, the coming season of music promises to be quite the most prosperous this country has ever known. This great prosperity will, to be sure, be confined to the larger organizations and the more famous artists. Last year was disastrous for young artists and those of mediocre quality and the coming season promises to be even more so.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra looks forward to the most successful season in its history. The five concerts it is to give in Brooklyn will be, as in past years practically sold out. There will be only three soloists, Mme. Melba coming in December, Fritz Kreisler in January and Winifred Christie in February.

Press.
Philadelphia Oct. 7.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its season in Boston on next Friday and Saturday. The general sale of tickets for the series of five concerts to be given in Philadelphia the coming season, will open at Haly's Ticket Office, 1119 Chestnut Street, Monday, October 15. As already announced, there will be soloists at three of the five concerts. In December, Madame Melba will sing and it is likely to be her only appearance of the year in this city. In January, Kreisler will play, and in February, the soloist will be Winifred Christie. Miss Christie is a pianist of very unusual qualities. She is one of the very few women pianists who are womanly pianists. The first concert comes Monday evening, November 6.

Public Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa. Sept. 22.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts which will be given in the Academy of Music the coming winter who have not yet taken up their seats are reminded that they have only next week in which to do so. The limit of reservations is set for Monday, October 1, and seats which are not taken up by that date may be disposed of by the management to other applicants. The renewal of subscriptions for the coming season is reported by the management in Boston to be quite equal to the renewals of last year.

Evening Sun
Baltimore
Sept, 29, 1917

MELBA TO SING HERE

Diva Will Be Soloist At First Boston Symphony Concert.

The subscription books for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Baltimore are now in the hands of W. A. Albaugh, who from this time on will have full charge of them.

Mme. Melba, who is to be the first soloist of the season, at the December concert, is due to arrive in Vancouver next Thursday. She has been spending the last six months at her home in Australia, and her first important work will be a series of appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. At the February concert the soloist is to be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had a most sensational success at her appearance with the orchestra in Boston last fall. In January the soloist will be Fritz Kreisler. There will be no soloist either at the November or March concerts.

The orchestra itself will be undergoing a very novel experience this coming week. Its entire personnel and Dr. Muck will make records for a talking machine. The regular season in Boston begins the following Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 12 and 13.

Traveler
Oct, 18, 1917

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Tonight at 8 in Sanders Theatre comes the first concert in the Cambridge series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The soloist will be Guiomar Novaes and the program comprises Sibelius's First Symphony in E minor, Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto in G major, and Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture.

Efram Zimbalist, Russian violinist, soloist at this week's Symphony concert, will play the Beethoven Concerto for violin and orchestra. The orchestral numbers comprise Sibelius's Symphonic Poem, "Finlandia"; Scriabin's Symphonic Poem, "Le Poeme de l'Extase" and Enesco's Roumanian Rhadsody.

Herald
Oct, 18, 1917

CONCERT NOTES

The first of the eight regular Symphony concerts given in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University, will take place tonight at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be Guiomar Novaes. The program will comprise Sibelius's First Symphony, E minor; Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, G major, and Berlioz's "King Lear" overture.

Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinist, is the soloist at this week's Symphony concerts, tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Beethoven's Concerto. The orchestral numbers are Sibelius's "Finlandia," Scriabin's Symphonic Poem, "Le Poeme de l'Extase," and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody. The length of the concert is one hour and 45 minutes.

Advertiser
Oct, 28, 1917

REHEARSING FOR CHORAL CONCERTS

Singers Work Enthusiastically On Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The rehearsals of the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, have been in progress in Jacob Sleeper Hall, Boston University, since Sept. 12, the rehearsals coming once a week, the ladies in the afternoon and the men at 6 o'clock in the evening. So far, the women's and men's chorus have been rehearsing separately, but next Wednesday evening, Oct. 24, at 7.30 o'clock, will come the first full chorus rehearsal.

The enthusiasm with which these men and women are doing the work under the direction of Mr. Stephen Townsend is bringing very remarkable results, and the chorus is going to be a surprise to the Boston musical public.

There will be three full chorus rehearsals in Jacob Sleeper Hall on Oct. 24 and 31 and Nov. 7. Then there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the first on Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, and the second on Monday evening, Nov. 19. At this second rehearsal all the soloists will be present.

Mr. Ellis has not yet selected the soloists for the second concert, when Mahler's Second Symphony will be given, or for the third concert, when Bach's Passion music will be presented. At the first concert, as already announced, the soloists will be: Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Monitor
Oct, 19, 1917

MUSIC

Boston Symphony in Cambridge

The first concert of the Cambridge series, given in Sanders Theater on Thursday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, was of unusual interest owing to the appearance of a new pianist, in the person of Miss Guiomar Novaes.

Miss Novaes is an artist of uncommon attainments, expressing an individuality in her work which at once carries one away from the possibility of measuring her musical equipment by the standing of any particular school of pedagogy, or even through a trace of nationalism. Her interpretation of Beethoven's fourth concerto was an exemplification of the universality of musical language spoken in its highest art-form, an interpretation which would always make a direct appeal, even to the unprepared musical thought. Her technical facilities, while something to be remembered, did not for a moment obscure the vital sense of individual freedom evidenced throughout the concerto. This young pianist has already a legato which is possessed by few pianists, and this was especially noticeable in the andante movement, which was played with rare poetic feeling. Dr. Muck's orchestral support was masterful and eminently satisfactory.

Of the Sibelius symphony, it cannot truly be said that it has a place among some of the great symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms or Tschaikowsky. The first and last movements have little to say in the way of inspiration, but rather leave one with an impression of musical idiosyncrasy, without point. Perhaps it is the almost surly atmosphere which seems to pervade these two movements, that offsets the possibility of their acceptance as symphony music worth while. The andante, however, is full of inspirational writing and wins unstinted approbation from the very beginning. The delicate tone shadings and especially the final diminuendo attained by the orchestra in this movement were noteworthy.

The overture to "King Lear," with its many varieties of mood and piquant coloring, is one of Berlioz' best pieces of orchestral writing, and Dr. Muck's intelligent and sympathetic reading of this, as well as of the symphony, left nothing to be desired.

The theater was well filled with an enthusiastic audience.

Standard Union
Oct, 14, 1917.

The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Brooklyn this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is now open at the box office of the Institute of Arts and Sciences, in the Academy of Music. The season of 1917 will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra its if and the thirtieth consecutive season in which the Orchestra has been a visitor to this city. This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any change in its personnel. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are that several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second, Mme. Melba will appear. In addition to her appearance in opera, she will give a limited number of concerts. Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Brooklyn during the coming winter will be at the January concert. The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with great success, and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts. Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription, as usual. A few, however, remain unsold. These may be obtained at the Institute box office in the Academy of Music.

Advertiser Oct 20, 1917

ZIMBALIST PLAYS VIOLIN CONCERTO

Soloist and Symphonic Poem by Scriabin are Features of Symphony Concert

"POEME DE L'EXTASE" WHISPERS AND ROARS

Musical Nightmare But Played With Technical Brilliance Under Dr. Muck

By LOUIS C. ELSON

PROGRAM

"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.....Sibelius
"Le Poeme de l'Extase," Symphonic Poem .....Scriabin
Violin Concerto.....Beethoven
Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist
Rhapsodie Roumaine.....Enesco

A lot of rhapsodical orchestral work, balanced by the greatest violin concerto ever written.

There is nothing new to say about Sibelius' "Finlandia." It is the very apotheosis of folk-song, yet not made of actual folk-melodies. This composer is so impregnated with the spirit of the music of his native land that his themes may readily be mistaken for actual folk-songs. We vibrate very readily with "Finlandia," for it is a song of Liberty, and it speaks of the freedom of one of the finest races on the earth, which has been enslaved by one of the most brutal autocracies. It looks just now as if the predictions made in this music were about to be fulfilled and the great triumph of the finale, which Dr Muck read in his most grandiose manner was like a mighty prophecy which was nearing fruition. Such a Hymn of Liberty was very appropriate to the present time of ferment, and was greatly applauded.

But we were brought back to earth by Scriabin's ecstatic poem—a musical nightmare. We cannot do better in this matter than to reprint what we said of this work seven years ago, and add that we have not in any degree changed our views upon a second hearing.

The ultra-moderns all resemble each other. When one of these extreme gentlemen comes at you with a "poem of ecstasy," you may be sure of one thing, he is going to use every known instrument, and he is going either to whisper vagueness at you, a la Debussy, or roar it at you, a la Richard Strauss. Scriabin did both. De Stendhal says that the radical works of one generation become the classical works of the next, in which case we extend our sympathy to the next generation. Some of the ecstasy was extremely bitter, but most of it reminded of the ecstasy of the too convivial gentleman who thought that the air was filled with blue monkeys with green eyes and scarlet tails, a kind of ecstasy that used to be sold in Russia at two roubles a bottle, but is now said to be abolished.

Let the reader remember that Beethoven has also pictured ecstasy in the finale of the ninth symphony and in the final duet of "Fidelio," and let him mentally compare his enraptured frenzy with the hurricanes and earthquakes of ecstasy here exploded, and he will understand the extreme distaste of the reviewer for Scriabin's "Poeme de l'Extase." It is almost entirely impressionistic. At intervals the composer shudders himself into a species of tonal epilepsy. The trumpeter plays until his lips are bloody, and his theme is of a most agonized kind of ecstasy. The first trumpet was amazingly well played.

All this we have written before, but a second hearing shows yet more clearly the skill in orchestration which Scriabin seems to be a master of. But true ideas, expressive of a lofty ecstasy, are not identifiable. It seems as if the present age, after the great classics and Wagner, were like the epoch in painting after Raphael Da Vinci and Michael Angelo, when a host of lesser lights arose, exploiting all the technical skill of their predecessors, but without their great ideas. Skillful the great moderns in music certainly are, technically wonderful, but lacking ideas. Even Richard Strauss, who once showed indications of inspiration, has become a disappointment.

The reading of the intensely difficult work was a triumph for Dr. Muck and all his men. Scriabin ought to be thankful that his diaphanous stuff was so well disguished that many may have thought it great. It was applauded, Dr. Muck twice recalled, and the orchestra compelled to rise; the wonderful technical display deserved it.

Then we rinsed out our ears with Beethoven's violin concerto, the greatest work of its kind. We believe the last time this was given in these concerts it was played in a lady-like style by Albert Spalding. We were glad to hear it restored at last to some of its masculinity. Mr. Zimbalist had a surety which was commendable. He played the work as if he loved it, and one could say, in a different sense from that implied in the Scriptures—"Efr[redacted] is joined unto his idols. Let him a[redacted]

The reviewer may c[redacted] t him alone as far as anima[redacted] goes, and can only praise the excellent ensemble, the freedom and abandon of the first movement, the breadth of the great four-noted figure which forms the ground-work here, the brilliant technique of the cadenza and the purity of tone. We always feel that the finale falls off considerably in power from the great beginning, but even here the brightness and vim made the movement electric. Such solos fit into these symphony concerts as into an appropriate frame, and do not jar upon the musical auditor as a thrilling and colarturing prima donna does. Yet even with the beauty of tone displayed we longed, at least in the first movement, for the grand virility of a Kreisler or an Ysaye. One cannot have two much emphasis in this most masculine movement. At the end Mr. Zimbalist was recalled so many times that we began to wonder if some encore fiends had possibly strayed into the gallery.

The concert which began in Finland ended in Rumania, the least and worst of the Allies. Here there was no especial song of Liberty to sing and no tyrannical fetters to break, and the music was by no means on the Sibelius level. But it was spicy and interesting, a good dessert to the musical banquet, and it was spicily played. The work is exciting from beginning to end. Piccolo, brasses and college tunes make a mixture that is more frankly and intelligibly ecstatic than Scriabin. It is almost brutally bacchanalian at times, and suggests that the happy peasantry had Slibovitszk at the feast. It emulated Scriabin in fortissimo effects, and therefore in this concert, in the orchestral numbers, deaf auditors enjoyed themselves. It had also numerous cadences. In this it resembled a modern prima donna with many successive "farewells." The composer "Oft bade farewell, yet was loth to depart," each cadence seeming to be the end, and the music starting up again after the auditor had reached for his hat and overcoat. Nevertheless, the "Rhapsodie Roumaine" is a most enjoyable work to the auditor who seeks relaxation—and one generally does after a modern program.

Brooklyn Citizen Oct, 14, 1917.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLANS.

Will Give Concerts in Brooklyn as Usual.

It is twenty-nine years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra began to give concerts in Brooklyn. The coming winter will make the thirtieth consecutive season in which it has been a visitor here. Its first concerts were given here in the spring of 1888, and since then the orchestra has come every year. This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any change in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are that several will be summoned in the second call whenever it comes. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Mme. Melba will appear.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Brooklyn during the winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist.

Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription, as usual. A few, however, remain unsold, and may be obtained at the Institute box office in the Academy of Music.

Post Oct. 20, 1917

ZIMBALIST HEARD WITH SYMPHONY

Battle Music of Sibelius Impresses Big Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

Efrem Zimbalist was soloist at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral compositions were Sibelius' "Finlandia," Scriabine's "Poem of Ecstasy" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" in A major.

The short piece of Sibelius is not inapropos of the times. It is a piece of battle music for patriots. Not but what the composer has written other battle music of a grander character in many pages of his wild symphonies and symphonic poems. Long before the world conflict, Sibelius, the Northman, was growling in his caves—"ancestral voices" prophesied war in his compositions, gigantic, elemental in their spirit and proportions. Finlandia, on the other hand is more of a piece for the public, for a celebration, or something of that kind. Its performance was forbidden for a time in Finland in the days of the old Russian regime, for it was feared that it would incite revolt.

IN POPULAR CHARACTER

When a man writes a piece for the people, he is emphatically careful, if he is a master of his medium, to write something which will be sincere, but which the people will understand. The almost popular character of "Finlandia" does not rob it of its power and distinction. The opening pages are perhaps the finest—the rumble of rebellion, the roaring of drums and double basses, the figure for the horns, from which the principal melody is hurled as a ball would be hurled from a cannon. Structurally, there is a splendid breadth and simplicity. A symphonist would perhaps use more refined material, but a piece that is, spiritually speaking by and for the people, should not be written as a symphony, and the best proof of the validity of this composition is the impression it made on the audience yesterday.

Dr. Muck's performance was an earnest and painstaking one. It is not to his discredit that with all the depth and breadth of his interpretation he remained far from the volcanic passion with which the composer himself invested this music when he directed its performance at the Norfolk (Connecticut) Music Festival of June, 1914.

Gorgeously Tinted

The tone-poem of Scriabine was heard for the second time at these concerts. At the first performance several seasons ago it was a hard nut to crack, and the reviewers of this city were widely divided in their opinions. Yesterday the music seemed more intelligible to the majority of hearers, which was probably due in part to Dr. Muck's superb performance—a performance in which the men vied with each other in carrying out the wishes of their leader. Witness the playing of Mr. Heim, the first trumpeter, whose upper lip suffered severely from the embouchure demanded by the prodigiously difficult part of his instrument.

Scriabine, whose recent death was a most serious loss to modern Russian music, was evidently a man of exceptional daring and originality. The wonder of the music heard yesterday is not its occasional evident shortcomings, but the things that the composer actually does accomplish as he throws his soul on the canvass. The music of the "Poem of Ecstacy" is very sensual. The orchestra fairly drips with color. We doubt if there has been a modern composer so enamoured of rich, gorgeous tinting as this Scriabine.

Big Line to Music

And yet he is more than a mere sensualist in tone. There is a very big line to his music. There are passages of elemental impressiveness, and the orchestra is a rainbow from the beginning to the end. The development of the ideas is for the greater part as novel and interesting as the ideas themselves, while, on the other hand, one noticed here and there such incongruities as could not but amaze one at all aware of the mighty things the composer was doing in other pages. Suddenly an idea or a phrase, instead of being developed, will be employed in sequences, repetitions of a figure, which make it ineffective before it is abandoned. Phrases and motives are sometimes clipped in a suspiciously academic manner into two four-measure patterns.

We do not know what Scriabine has accomplished in other of his great orchestral works, such as the tone-poem, "Prometheus"; we do not know how many more wonderful things than were discoverable in the "Poem of Ecstacy" at a second hearing might be revealed in the third. It is nevertheless evident that in this work the composer is experimenting and is not absolutely sure of his ground or of just what to do when he is obliged to leave all the formulae of the past behind him. Arrived at this jumping off-place, he sometimes plunges magnificently forward, with a vision well-nigh cosmic; but sometimes he drops into unconscious platitudes which the hearer bears with patience, knowing that it will not be long before the golden thread of inspiration again appears.

Ultra Modern Music

All in all, this tone-poem becomes for us one of the most interesting and stimulating of ultra-modern compositions. With the composer, the hearer trembles in the presence of things utterly new, and vast, and incommensurable. We sometimes think that an incomplete fragment of a vast conception means more to us and the future of art than the perfection of a recognized masterpiece.

Mr. Zimbalist gave a very sincere and idealistic performance of the Beethoven concerto. Would we had never to sit through its finale again! But his breadth and his feeling, his sure musicianship, the solid foundations of Mr. Zimbalist's now impressive virtuosity, commended him highly to the audience. It was a reverent, but an authoritative, most expressive and comprehending performance of great music. The audience recalled Mr. Zimbalist, a greater violinist today than ever, with much cordiality.

Times Brooklyn

Music Notes

Time passes so rapidly that it seems hardly possible that it is twenty-nine years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra began to give concerts in Brooklyn and that the coming winter will make the thirtieth consecutive season in which it has been a visitor here. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Mme. Melba will appear.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the Orchestra in Brooklyn during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the Orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal, the Orchestra acclaimed her a very remarkable artist. Last year, she played in Boston with the Orchestra with great success and this year, to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription as usual. A few, however, remain unsold. These may be obtained at the Institute Box Office in the Academy of Music.

The opening musical event of the

PROVIDENCE NEWS OCT. 13, 1917

The Ellis Concerts.

Providence is showing very practical appreciation of the series of Subscription Concerts which C. A. Ellis has announced for Infantry Hall this coming winter. The general public sale which has been in progress since last Monday has assumed most gratifying dimensions. Undoubtedly the moderate scale of subscription prices for these concerts has proved most attractive, for it would be difficult to find anywhere five concerts of such quality given by such artists, to say nothing of the three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so cheaply as Mr. Ellis is offering these to Providence.

As already announced, the concerts, five in number, will be given in Infantry Hall and the dates are October 30, December 18, January 15, February 12, and March 19. The first will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Geraldine Farrar as soloist. Miss Farrar has only two appearances in concert with the Orchestra this year, this one in Providence and one in Boston the preceding Sunday for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Orchestra. The second concert brings a violin recital by Fritz Kreisler, which will be followed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Rosamund Young, soprano, as soloist. Madame Louise Homer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch give the fourth concert, and the season will end with the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Anton Witek as soloist.

Globe Oct. 20, 1917

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT BRILLIANT

Two widely contrasting numbers made the Symphony concert of yesterday an unusual one—Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," a remarkable composition, played not as by a literalist, but with vision and with understanding, and following it a noble performance of the Beethoven concerto by Mr Zimbalist, in which Dr Muck and the orchestra shared. Both were supreme.

Played seven years ago by Mr Fiedler, Scriabin's score distressed many by its frenetic dissonances. Clashing sounds rather than a colossal psychic conflict then appeared its mission. But Scriabin's appreciation in his rhapsodic poem first of verse as of that in tone, that ecstasy is sweeping only in the degree that it is compounded of pain, demands something more than a screaming trumpet and the incessant shocks of quarrelsome tonalities rudely buffeted about in the orchestra.

Treatment of the gorgeous web of this score as a flat surface or as a literal translation could be only a caricature. Yesterday Dr Muck gave it depth, perspective, richness and boundless resource. There are tapestries wherein are lines of color which lend a hidden lustre before they appear, blending with what precedes and then with what follows.

Scriabin's myriad voices weave the fragments of his few themes, reechoing them in opulent fancy into a resplendent fabric, prodigal with colors, which are broken into countless tints and half tints as through a prism. There are accents and moods ecstatic and infernal. The use of stopped brass in trumpet, horn and trombone is eloquent of evil and that which ought not to be.

Appreciation of Rhythm

Like his compatriot, Stravinsky, whom he much resembles in harmonic sense, Scriabin has a demoniac appreciation for rhythm. There is the broad flow of orchestral song as of a great river, and when there is demand for an incisive, characterizing rhythmic theme, it is unerring. The sense of flight up a long-winged ascent to the hights of his climaxes is titanic, and for the epilogue the organ is employed upon an abyssmal pedal point to build up a climax, lifted off its crest, as though the scroll of Heaven were rolled up from mortal eyes.

The pervading thought of the poem is given as the "Ecstasy of Untrammelled Action, the Joy in Creative Activity." Modest Altschuler, the conductor of the Russian Symphony Orchestra of New York, who has brought out Scriabin's works in this country, including this poem, also the "Prometheus" with the lighting effects, assigns three diversions to the poem: 1. His soul in the orgy of love; 2. The realization of a fantastical dream; 3. The glory of his own art. As absolute music this tremendously dynamic score makes its own appeal. Whether it be excess of madness or not depends much upon the conductor.

The performance was one not soon to be forgotten. Dr Muck wove the infinitely detailed filaments of the mighty fabric with the imagination, with the adoration of sensuous beauty and proportion of a supreme colorist, where the artisan or craftsman would have daubed the canvas. The orchestra played like virtuosi. Mr Heim bore the terrific rigors of the needlessly difficult trumpet part with brilliant success.

Concerto by Zimbalist

Mr Zimbalist, no less the serious artist and musician than when he first played here, has matured and broadened in his mental and emotional grasp of great music. Technically he plays with such quiet mastery that the hearer is not aware that he is witnessing difficult feats, as in certain passages, including the double stopping, in the first cadenza. Concealing a superb technic, he played the familiar concerto with a spirit of veneration for its beauty, treading never upon excess of sentiment in the lovely song and its embellishments of the slow movement, nor detracting from the dignity of spirit in the last. The return to the theme after the cadenza in the first movement and the fine beauty of sustained line with which he resumed it were beyond praise.

Sibelius has palliated the bombast of much of his "Finlandia" by the rugged bardic simplicity and folk character of the song. In the allegro, the returned exile shouts as though his celebrations were mixed with strong drink.

Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody in A major closed the program.

Advertiser
Oct. 20, 1917

ZIMBALIST PLAYS VIOLIN CONCERTO

Soloist and Symphonic Poem by Scriabin are Features of Symphony Concert

"POEME DE L'EXTASE" WHISPERS AND ROARS

Musical Nightmare But Played With Technical Brilliance Under Dr. Muck

By LOUIS C. ELSON

PROGRAM

"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.....Sibelius
"Le Poeme de l'Extase," Symphonic Poem .....Scriabin
Violin Concerto.....Beethoven
Soloist, Efrem Zimbalist
Rhapsodie Roumaine.....Enesco

A lot of rhapsodical orchestral work, balanced by the greatest violin concerto ever written.

There is nothing new to say about Sibelius' "Finlandia." It is the very apotheosis of folk-song, yet not made of actual folk-melodies. This composer is so impregnated with the spirit of the music of his native land that his themes may readily be mistaken for actual folk-songs. We vibrate very readily with "Finlandia," for it is a song of Liberty, and it speaks of the freedom of one of the finest races on the earth, which has been enslaved by one of the most brutal autocracies. It looks just now as if the predictions made in this music were about to be fulfilled and the great triumph of the finale, which Dr Muck read in his most grandiose manner was like a mighty prophecy which was nearing fruition. Such a Hymn of Liberty was very appropriate to the present time of ferment, and was greatly applauded.

But we were brought back to earth by Scriabin's ecstatic poem—a musical nightmare. We cannot do better in this matter than to reprint what we said of this work seven years ago, and add that we have not in any degree changed our views upon a second hearing.

The ultra-moderns all resemble each other. When one of these extreme gentlemen comes at you with a "poem of ecstasy," you may be sure of one thing, he is going to use every known instrument, and he is going either to whisper vagueness at you, a la Debussy, or roar it at you, a la Richard Strauss. Scriabin did both. De Stendhal says that the radical works of one generation become the classical works of the next, in which case we extend our sympathy to the next generation. Some of the ecstasy was extremely bitter, but most of it reminded of the ecstasy of the too convivial gentleman who thought that the air was filled with blue monkeys with green eyes and scarlet tails, a kind of ecstasy that used to be sold in Russia at two roubles a bottle, but is now said to be abolished.

Let the reader remember that Beethoven has also pictured ecstasy in the finale of the ninth symphony and in the final duet of "Fidelio," and let him mentally compare his enraptured frenzy with the hurricanes and earthquakes of ecstasy here exploded, and he will understand the extreme distaste of the reviewer for Scriabin's "Poeme de l'Extase." It is almost entirely impressionistic. At intervals the composer shudders himself into a species of tonal epilepsy. The trumpeter plays until his lips are bloody, and his theme is of a most agonized kind of ecstasy. The first trumpet was amazingly well played.

All this we have written before, but a second hearing shows yet more clearly the skill in orchestration which Scriabin seems to be a master of. But true ideas, expressive of a lofty ecstasy, are not identifiable. It seems as if the present age, after the great classics and Wagner, were like the epoch in painting after Raphael Da Vinci and Michael Angelo, when a host of lesser lights arose, exploiting all the technical skill of their predecessors, but without their great ideas. Skillful the great moderns in music certainly are, technically wonderful, but lacking ideas. Even Richard Strauss, who once showed indications of inspiration, has become a disappointment.

The reading of the intensely difficult work was a triumph for Dr. Muck and all his men. Scriabin ought to be thankful that his diaphanous stuff was so well disguished that many may have thought it great. It was applauded, Dr. Muck twice recalled, and the orchestra compelled to rise; the wonderful technical display deserved it.

Then we rinsed out our ears with Beethoven's violin concerto, the greatest work of its kind. We believe the last time this was given in these concerts it was played in a lady-like style by Albert Spalding. We were glad to hear it restored at last to some of its masculinity. Mr. Zimbalist had a surety which was commendable. He played the work as if he loved it, and one could say, in a different sense from that implied in the Scriptures—"Efr[redacted] is joined unto his idols. Let him a[redacted]

The reviewer may c[redacted] t him alone as far as anima[redacted] goes, and can only praise the excellent ensemble, the freedom and abandon of the first movement, the breadth of the great four-noted figure which forms the ground-work here, the brilliant technique of the cadenza and the purity of tone. We always feel that the finale falls off considerably in power from the great beginning, but even here the brightness and vim made the movement electric. Such solos fit into these symphony concerts as into an appropriate frame, and do not jar upon the musical auditor as a thrilling and colarturing prima donna does. Yet even with the beauty of tone displayed we longed, at least in the first movement, for the grand virility of a Kreisler or an Ysaye. One cannot have two much emphasis in this most masculine movement. At the end Mr. Zimbalist was recalled so many times that we began to wonder if some encore fiends had possibly strayed into the gallery.

The concert which began in Finland ended in Rumania, the least and worst of the Allies. Here there was no especial song of Liberty to sing and no tyrannical fetters to break, and the music was by no means on the Sibelius level. But it was spicy and interesting, a good dessert to the musical banquet, and it was spicily played. The work is exciting from beginning to end. Piccolo, brasses and college tunes make a mixture that is more frankly and intelligibly ecstatic than Scriabin. It is almost brutally bacchanalian at times, and suggests that the happy peasantry had Slibovitszk at the feast. It emulated Scriabin in fortissimo effects, and therefore in this concert, in the orchestral numbers, deaf auditors enjoyed themselves. It had also numerous cadences. In this it resembled a modern prima donna with many successive "farewells." The composer

"Oft bade farewell, yet was loth to depart," each cadence seeming to be the end, and the music starting up again after the auditor had reached for his hat and overcoat. Nevertheless, the "Rhapsodie Roumaine" is a most enjoyable work to the auditor who seeks relaxation—and one generally does after a modern program.

Brooklyn Citizen
Oct. 14, 1917

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLANS.

Will Give Concerts in Brooklyn as Usual.

It is twenty-nine years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra began to give concerts in Brooklyn. The coming winter will make the thirtieth consecutive season in which it has been a visitor here. Its first concerts were given here in the spring of 1888, and since then the orchestra has come every year. This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any change in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are that several will be summoned in the second call whenever it comes. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Mme. Melba will appear.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Brooklyn during the winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist.

Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription, as usual. A few, however, remain unsold, and may be obtained at the Institute box office in the Academy of Music.

Post
Oct. 20, 1917

ZIMBALIST HEARD WITH SYMPHONY

Battle Music of Sibelius Impresses Big Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

Efrem Zimbalist was soloist at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral compositions were Sibelius' "Finlandia," Scriabine's "Poem of Ecstasy" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" in A major.

The short piece of Sibelius is not inapropos of the times. It is a piece of battle music for patriots. Not but what the composer has written other battle music of a grander character in many pages of his wild symphonies and symphonic poems. Long before the world conflict, Sibelius, the Northman, was growling in his caves—"ancestral voices" prophesied war in his compositions, gigantic, elemental in their spirit and proportions. Finlandia, on the other hand is more of a piece for the public, for a celebration, or something of that kind. Its performance was forbidden for a time in Finland in the days of the old Russian regime, for it was feared that it would incite revolt.

IN POPULAR CHARACTER

When a man writes a piece for the people, he is emphatically careful, if he is a master of his medium, to write something which will be sincere, but which the people will understand. The almost popular character of "Finlandia" does not rob it of its power and distinction. The opening pages are perhaps the finest—the rumble of rebellion, the roaring of drums and double basses, the figure for the horns, from which the principal melody is hurled as a ball would be hurled from a cannon. Structurally, there is a splendid breadth and simplicity. A symphonist would perhaps use more refined material, but a piece that is, spiritually speaking by and for the people, should not be written as a symphony, and the best proof of the validity of this composition is the impression it made on the audience yesterday.

Dr. Muck's performance was an earnest and painstaking one. It is not to his discredit that with all the depth and breadth of his interpretation he remained far from the volcanic passion with which the composer himself invested this music when he directed its performance at the Norfolk (Connecticut) Music Festival of June, 1914.

Gorgeously Tinted

The tone-poem of Scriabine was heard for the second time at these concerts. At the first performance several seasons ago it was a hard nut to crack, and the reviewers of this city were widely divided in their opinions. Yesterday the music seemed more intelligible to the majority of hearers, which was probably due in part to Dr. Muck's superb performance—a performance in which the men vied with each other in carrying out the wishes of their leader. Witness the playing of Mr. Heim, the first trumpeter, whose upper lip suffered severely from the embouchure demanded by the prodigiously difficult part of his instrument.

Scriabine, whose recent death was a most serious loss to modern Russian music, was evidently a man of exceptional daring and originality. The wonder of the music heard yesterday is not its occasional evident shortcomings, but the things that the composer actually does accomplish as he throws his soul on the canvass. The music of the "Poem of Ecstacy" is very sensual. The orchestra fairly drips with color. We doubt if there has been a modern composer so enamoured of rich, gorgeous tinting as this Scriabine.

Big Line to Music

And yet he is more than a mere sensualist in tone. There is a very big line to his music. There are passages of elemental impressiveness, and the orchestra is a rainbow from the beginning to the end. The development of the ideas is for the greater part as novel and interesting as the ideas themselves, while, on the other hand, one noticed here and there such incongruities as could not but amaze one at all aware of the mighty things the composer was doing in other pages. Suddenly an idea or a phrase, instead of being developed, will be employed in sequences, repetitions of a figure, which make it ineffective before it is abandoned. Phrases and motives are sometimes clipped in a suspiciously academic manner into two four-measure patterns.

We do not know what Scriabine has accomplished in other of his great orchestral works, such as the tone-poem, "Prometheus"; we do not know how many more wonderful things than were discoverable in the "Poem of Ecstacy" at a second hearing might be revealed in the third. It is nevertheless evident that in this work the composer is experimenting and is not absolutely sure of his ground or of just what to do when he is obliged to leave all the formulae of the past behind him. Arrived at this jumping off-place, he sometimes plunges magnificently forward, with a vision well-nigh cosmic; but sometimes he drops into unconscious platitudes which the hearer bears with patience, knowing that it will not be long before the golden thread of inspiration again appears.

Ultra Modern Music

All in all, this tone-poem becomes for us one of the most interesting and stimulating of ultra-modern compositions. With the composer, the hearer trembles in the presence of things utterly new, and vast, and incommensurable. We sometimes think that an incomplete fragment of a vast conception means more to us and the future of art than the perfection of a recognized masterpiece.

Mr. Zimbalist gave a very sincere and idealistic performance of the Beethoven concerto. Would we had never to sit through its finale again! But his breadth and his feeling, his sure musicianship, the solid foundations of Mr. Zimbalist's now impressive virtuosity, commended him highly to the audience. It was a reverent, but an authoritative, most expressive and comprehending performance of great music. The audience recalled Mr. Zimbalist, a greater violinist today than ever, with much cordiality.

Times Brooklyn

Music Notes

Time passes so rapidly that it seems hardly possible that it is twenty-nine years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra began to give concerts in Brooklyn and that the coming winter will make the thirtieth consecutive season in which it has been a visitor here. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Mme. Melba will appear.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the Orchestra in Brooklyn during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the Orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal, the Orchestra acclaimed her a very remarkable artist. Last year, she played in Boston with the Orchestra with great success and this year, to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

Nearly all seats for the season have been taken by subscription as usual. A few, however, remain unsold. These may be obtained at the Institute Box Office in the Academy of Music.

The opening musical event of the

PROVIDENCE
NEWS
OCT. 13, 1917

The Ellis Concerts.

Providence is showing very practical appreciation of the series of Subscription Concerts which C. A. Ellis has announced for Infantry Hall this coming winter. The general public sale which has been in progress since last Monday has assumed most gratifying dimensions. Undoubtedly the moderate scale of subscription prices for these concerts has proved most attractive, for it would be difficult to find anywhere five concerts of such quality given by such artists, to say nothing of the three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so cheaply as Mr. Ellis is offering these to Providence.

As already announced, the concerts, five in number, will be given in Infantry Hall and the dates are October 30, December 18, January 15, February 12, and March 19. The first will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Geralding Farrar as soloist. Miss Farrar has only two appearances in concert with the Orchestra this year, this one in Providence and one in Boston the preceding Sunday for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Orchestra. The second concert brings a violin recital by Fritz Kreisler, which will be followed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Rosamund Young, soprano, as soloist. Madame Louise Homer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch give the fourth concert, and the season will end with the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Anton Witek as soloist.

Globe
Oct. 20, 1917

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT BRILLIANT

Two widely contracting numbers made the Symphony concert of yesterday an unusual one—Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," a remarkable composition, played not as by a literalist, but with vision and with understanding, and following it a noble performance of the Beethoven concerto by Mr Zimbalist, in which Dr Muck and the orchestra shared. Both were supreme.

Played seven years ago by Mr Fiedler, Scriabin's score distressed many by its frenetic dissonances. Clashing sounds rather than a colossal psychic conflict then appeared its mission. But Scriabin's appreciation in his rhapsodic poem first of verse as of that in tone, that ecstasy is sweeping only in the degree that it is compounded of pain, demands something more than a screaming trumpet and the incessant shocks of quarrelsome tonalities rudely buffeted about in the orchestra.

Treatment of the gorgeous web of this score as a flat surface or as a literal translation could be only a caricature. Yesterday Dr Muck gave it depth, perspective, richness and boundless resource. There are tapestries wherein are lines of color which lend a hidden lustre before they appear, blending with what precedes and then with what follows.

Scriabin's myriad voices weave the fragments of his few themes, reechoing them in opulent fancy into a resplendent fabric, prodigal with colors, which are broken into countless tints and half tints as through a prism. There are accents and moods ecstatic and infernal. The use of stopped brass in trumpet, horn and trombone is eloquent of evil and that which ought not to be.

Appreciation of Rhythm

Like his compatriot, Stravinsky, whom he much resembles in harmonic sense, Scriabin has a demoniac appreciation for rhythm. There is the broad flow of orchestral song as of a great river, and when there is demand for an incisive, characterizing rhythmic theme, it is unerring. The sense of flight up a long-winged ascent to the hights of his climaxes is titanic, and for the epilogue the organ is employed upon an abyssmal pedal point to build up a climax, lifted off its crest, as though the scroll of Heaven were rolled up from mortal eyes.

The pervading thought of the poem is given as the "Ecstasy of Untrammelled Action, the Joy in Creative Activity." Modest Altschuler, the conductor of the Russian Symphony Orchestra of New York, who has brought out Scriabin's works in this country, including this poem, also the "Prometheus" with the lighting effects, assigns three diversions to the poem: 1. His soul in the orgy of love; 2. The realization of a fantastical dream; 3. The glory of his own art. As absolute music this tremendously dynamic score makes its own appeal. Whether it be excess of madness or not depends much upon the conductor.

The performance was one not soon to be forgotten. Dr Muck wove the infinitely detailed filaments of the mighty fabric with the imagination, with the adoration of sensuous beauty and proportion of a supreme colorist, where the artisan or craftsman would have daubed the canvas. The orchestra played like virtuosi. Mr Heim bore the terrific rigors of the needlessly difficult trumpet part with brilliant success.

Concerto by Zimbalist

Mr Zimbalist, no less the serious artist and musician than when he first played here, has matured and broadened in his mental and emotional grasp of great music. Technically he plays with such quiet mastery that the hearer is not aware that he is witnessing difficult feats, as in certain passages, including the double stopping, in the first cadenza. Concealing a superb technic, he played the familiar concerto with a spirit of veneration for its beauty, treading never upon excess of sentiment in the lovely song and its embellishments of the slow movement, nor detracting from the dignity of spirit in the last. The return to the theme after the cadenza in the first movement and the fine beauty of sustained line with which he resumed it were beyond praise.

Sibelius has palliated the bombast of much of his "Finlandia" by the rugged, bardic simplicity and folk character of the song. In the allegro, the returned exile shouts as though his celebrations were mixed with strong drink.

Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody in A major closed the program.

23 Herald Oct, 20, 1917

SYMPHONY GIVES SECOND CONCERT

"Finlandia," "Poem of Ecstasy" and Violin Concerto on Program.

WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Sibelius, "Finlandia"; Scriabin, "The Poem of Ecstasy"; Beethoven, violin concerto (Mr. Zimbalist, violinist); Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.

Last week we heard the overture to "King Lear," by Berlioz, and Liszt's "Prometheus," inferior works of great composers. Yesterday the "Finlandia" of Sibelius was performed. Is it wise, is it reverential to put the lesser, the mediocre or poor works of celebrated men on the programs? No lover of Coleridge, Keats, De Quincey, Byron, Balzac—the list might be indefinitely extended—wishes to possess the complete works of any one of them. Curiosity was gratified when "Prometheus" was played, for there had been only one performance of the symphonic poem, and that was some years before the Boston Symphony Orchestra came into being. "Prometheus" was as unknown to the audience as Liszt's "Hamlet," "Heroide funebre" or "Von der Wiege bis zum Grabe." But the "Finlandia" of Sibelius had been performed at these concerts at three public rehearsals and three concerts during the last nine years. The interest in the music was political rather than musical, for, as we are informed, it evoked such enthusiasm in Finland by reason of its "national sentiment" that its performance was prohibited at the time of a conflict between the Russian empire and Finland. Well, the Tsar is now in Siberia pondering the vanity of life, and Finland has behaved badly since the revolution. The symphonic poem, as the music of an oppressed and outraged nation, has now, perhaps, an ironical significance. Meanwhile more important works of Sibelius, works more characteristic of him, which have been heard in other American cities, are still unknown in Boston.

Enesco's first Roumanian Rhapsody has been performed here at three sets of concerts within five years. It is pleasant music, not without tonal monotony; it is, as the London Times remarked a few years ago, "an attractive work for a miscellaneous program on a warm evening;" but does the familiarity with it repay the hearer? Are the other rhapsodies of the composer not worthy of performance? Are there not compositions by native Frenchmen, as yet unknown here, but performed in New York and Chicago, that might please Bostonians?

Is it necessary to hear Beethoven's violin concerto every year? It was played at these concerts in 1910, 1912, 1914, 1915, early in 1917, not to mention the many performances before 1910. Should the concerto be regarded as a hardy annual? No doubt violinists consider the performance a solemn duty. They wish to show what they can do with it—or what they can do to it. They wish to show that they are not afraid of it; that they are serious minded, not mere fiddlers, eager to tickle easy ears. Any great work suffers from undue familiarity. Dwellers at the foot or on the flanks of mountains do not realize the dignity, the majesty of the eternal hills. Old Moritz Hauptmann, a conservative of the conservatives, protested years ago at the too frequent performances of Beethoven's symphonies at the Gewandhaus concerts. Mr. Zimbalist gave a pleasingly lyrical performance, not a highly imaginative, re-creative interpretation.

Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy" was brought out here seven years ago. Mr. Fiedler than gave a hap-hazard, slambang performance of the singular and at times interesting composition. Victor Hugo has said that agony when at its height is mute. Some yesterday wished no doubt that this were true of ecstasy. Is the music really ecstatic? There are anthropological sociologists who find extreme voluptuousness in physical pain. Mantegazza has a chapter on this subject, a chapter that is not for the "jeune fille." We are told that Scriabin in this music wished to express the ecstasy of untrammelled action, the joy in creative activity. Many pages, however, show that his creative activity brought to him yearnings, fits of despondency; that he toiled in anguish; at least, so the music sounded to us, and the title seemed a misnomer; for a few minutes of hullabaloo at the end did not flatly contradict all that had gone before. Biographers of Scriabin discuss solemnly the question whether his music grew out of his theosophy—for he was a theosophist, in spite of Mr. Altschuler's letter—or whether his theosophical views were inspired by his music. This question is not a momentous one. Let the poem be wrote, and the title, be put aside; there are fine and original passages in the composition, and there is certainly untrammelled action. The themes themselves are not important, not expressive, not significant enough to warrant the extravagant development and the polyphonic complexity. There is also irritating repetition.

Dr. Muck and the orchestra gave a remarkable reading of the work. It may here be said that Dr. Muck, even when he conducts music that is too familiar, common—one is tempted to add "and unclean"—gives freshness to that which is shopworn and glorifies that which is inherently ordinary by his interpretative genius.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Brahms, Symphony, No. 4; Rachmaninoff, "The Island of the Dead"; Debussy, Symphonic Suite, "Printemps."

Traveler Oct, 24, 1917

Dr. Muck's program for the third pair of Symphony concerts, Oct. 26 and 27, will be Brhams's fourth symphony, Rachminoff's symphonic poem, "The Isle of Death," and Debussy's symphonic suite, "Printemps." There will be no soloist.

Transcript, Oct, 19, 1917

THE CONCERT-RECORD

Miss Novaes Plays with the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge—Her Rare Qualities as Musician and Virtuosa—Sibelius's First Symphony Again

THE Symphony Orchestra returned to Cambridge last evening with a programme not only delightful and eventful, but compiled particularly for the occasion. It contained only one number so far played or announced in Boston—Berlioz's overture to "King Lear." The other orchestral piece was the first symphony of Sibelius, which, it seems, has always been carefully singled out for Cambridge in past seasons, whereby a great fondness has grown for it there. Further, the Cambridge people are so complaisant with soloists as to greet one at all times with no shade of regret, whereas the Bostonians have showed their strong liking for an initial concert purely orchestral. Hence Miss Guiomar Novaes, the pianist assisted the orchestra, with the high repute and the high vogue that she gained last year, justly to herald her. Only once, hitherto, and in recital has she played hereabouts and those who had not heard her play, could not have had a more characteristic introduction than through the pages of Beethoven's Concerto in G major. If a woman choose that piece in the face of endless showy possibilities, you may almost presume her to be the finest kind of an artist. It is, perhaps, by virtue of its persuasive loveliness and placid repose the woman's concerto "par excellence," as "The Emperor" is the man's.

Miss Novaes confirmed the supposition by her performance. Her calm assurance and self-possession, unruffled alike before orchestra and applause, proved the mask of solid musicianship, complete mastery of her instrument, and response to the stiller depths of poetry which the music calls forth. She made the concerto no contest in keyboard galloping, but interpolated the ornament of the first and last parts as it was intended—delicately cut, subdued, unostentatious. Such playing is the clearest possible test and proof of technical skill. When the softest music holds the attention most closely; when every note is distinct and faultless; when the pianist misses nothing in the shadings of the pianissimo passages, in the minutely graduated rise and fall which is the breath of life in Beethoven's music, in the whisperings into silence before the orchestra; then there is no bald display of virtuosity, but plainly enough the firmest control of fingers, and a muscular precision that no roaring chord may demand. Only in the cadenzas must conditions change, and let us suppose that Miss Novaes took them merely as a duty.

The music proper seemed peculiarly to suit Miss Novaes's nature. She took it as slowly as anyone could, even beyond the wont of Dr. Muck, but, since the music always touches upon the form of dialogue, the recurring suggestion of contrast tended to heighten the effectiveness. In the slow portion she lingered jealously over every chord, extracting the utmost of its poetry and prolonging the hushed spell of her part. As an individual she did not overstep the license of the solo passages, being guided by rare emotional intuition to poetic accord with the composer. Moreover, there was a mutual enrichment of personality between composer and pianist; while Dr. Muck could not be in any degree at variance with Beethoven so truly interpreted. The suspense and the lovely magic of the music held the audience from beginning to end in the silence of full subjection. It is open to question whether there lives among women pianists any to sound more deeply the poetic significance of the Concerto in G minor.

As for the remainder of the programme, the symphony of Sibelius is a delight to bring forth once and again. In spite of direct and even obvious appeal, surface beauties, and "early influences," the first charm of the music does not wear away. Now, the pungent, racial characteristics attract as much by familiarity as by novelty. There is still intense pleasure in the eloquently melodic themes which make the music sing as one listens, and persist in the memory afterwards. Perhaps there is a binding passage or two, a rather too "correct" contrapuntal manipulation which Sibelius might now improve upon in the light of his present maturer and more individual style. But the spontaneous melody, the plaint of the slow movement, the grotesque and sturdy fancy of the scherzo, the frenzies of accumulating rhythm and sound, the captivating oddities and twists in orchestral development—all glorify this first symphony of Sibelius. They remain in the fourth, but in the greatly changed aspect of stylistic growth and maturity.

The overture to "King Lear" will stand no such test of endurance—indeed, a single week seems a long life. One, two and even three hearings bring much pleasure—also satiety. To wander with Berlioz before the sunlit Italian sea, to share his ardent and immoderate enthusiasm in the discovery of a masterpiece (there is no more than that of "King Lear" in the music), to follow him through his rambling joy of musical creation, also newly found and as yet innocent of any sense of selection and rejection; this is entertaining to an extent, but one soon becomes impatient at too much staying in youthful and haphazard paths. Yet there are degrees, even in mediocrity. Surely no one would ask for more of "Prometheus" for a long time to come!

J. N. B.

Traveler Oct, 20, 1917

Symphony Plays to First Sold Out House of Season

Full measure and running over was the offering to patrons of the Symphony concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows: Sibelius, "Finlandia"; Scriabin, "The Poem of Ecstacy"; Beethoven, violin concerto (Mr. Zimbalist, violinist); Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.

And what a concert it was! Sibelius, Scriabin, Beethoven and Enesco all on one program and with that sterling artist Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinst, for soloist. Small wonder that the audience became more and more enthusiastic as the concert progressed. Small wonder that Dr. Muck was thrice recalled at the intermission and Zimbalist so many times after his number that doubt began to be felt about the concert being finished. Memories of such a concert are to be treasured.

The beoutiful "Finlandia" was grandly played. Scriabin, ever riotous, fairly outdoes himself in "Ecstasy." Beethoven, soloist and orchestra, proved a happy combination in the concerto, a grand work, superbly given. Then came more riot with Enesco. It can be said of Enesco, however, that his "spree" leaves a better taste in the mouth that Scriabin's.

It was fitting, therefore, that the "sold out" sign, so familiar whenever the orchestra plays away from home and becoming more and more so at Symphony Hall, should make its debut for the season yesterday afternoon.

Sun Oct, 14, 1917, Baltimore, Md.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERTS

THIS year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric Theatre on Wednesday evenings. The dates are November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. For the first time in its history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck, despite all prophecies to the contrary, will be the conductor as no other arrangement had been contemplated. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia, primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago.

REHEARSING FOR CHORAL CONCERTS

Singers Work Enthusiastically On Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The rehearsals of the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, have been in progress in Jacob Sleeper Hall, Boston University, since Sept. 12, the rehearsals coming once a week, the ladies in the afternoon and the men at 6 o'clock in the evening. So far, the women's and men's chorus have been rehearsing separately, but next Wednesday evening, Oct. 24, at 7.30 o'clock, will come the first full chorus rehearsal.

The enthusiasm with which these men and women are doing the work under the direction of Mr. Stephen Townsend is bringing very remarkable results, and the chorus is going to be a surprise to the Boston musical public.

There will be three full chorus rehearsals in Jacob Sleeper Hall on Oct. 24 and 31 and Nov. 7. Then there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the first on Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, and the second on Monday evening, Nov. 19. At this second rehearsal all the soloists will be present.

Mr. Ellis has not yet selected the soloists for the second concert, when Mahler's Second Symphony will be given, or for the third concert, when Bach's Passion music will be presented. At the first concert, as already announced, the soloists will be: Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Republican Oct, 11, 1917 - Springfield, Mass.

100 MALE VOICES IN CHORUS

Coming With the Boston Symphony to Sing Liszt's "Faust"

One of the most interesting events of the musical season in Springfield will be the last concert of the Ellis course, on Wednesday evening, February 27. The program will consist of the magnificent "Faust" symphony of Franz Liszt. For this purpose not only will the entire personnel of 100 men belonging to the Boston symphony orchestra be brought to Springfield, but a male chorus of 100 voices will also come, and Arthur Hackett, the distinguished young tenor, will sing the solo passages in the choral ending.

The musical sensation of New York's last season of music was the performance in Carnegie hall on Thursday evening, March 15, of this immense work. Its performance takes an hour and 15 minutes, and after many experiments Dr Muck came to the conclusion that there was no music which could go on the same program with it, unless it be entirely overshadowed, and, moreover, the symphony itself was sufficient for any evening of music.

It is not an exaggeration to say that New York was fairly swept off its feet by this performance of the "Faust" symphony. Not only was the orchestral performance magnificent in every detail, but such conservative papers as the New York Evening Post said that New York had never heard such choral singing as these Boston men gave. The chorus that will be employed in Springfield will be the same as appeared four times in Boston last year and once in New York.

Dr Muck is the fortunate possessor of the only score of the symphony in existence, which has the revisions and corrections made by Liszt in the last year of his life, while he was living with his daughter Cosima Wagner in Baireuth. He gave the first two performances of this symphony in Boston in January, 1915, and these were so highly successful that they were repeated in April, making four performances in Boston for that season. He placed this symphony on the program of the Christmas concerts in Boston last year with a new male chorus which had been organized for the occasion by Stephen Townsend of Boston. At this performance Mr Hackett was the tenor. In every respect the performance rose above the remarkably high standard of those of the two seasons previous, and their success was sensational. Again they were repeated in March just previous to the memorable New York concert.

American
Oct, 14, 1917 Baltimore, Md.

Plans For The Boston Symphony Concerts

MADAME MELBA.

THE sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Baltimore this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at Albaugh's Ticket Agency tomorrow (Monday morning), October 15. The season 1917 will be the thirty-seventh of the Orchestra itself and the thirty-third consecutive season in which the Orchestra has been a visitor to this city. Its first appearance here was in the spring of 1885 and since 1888 the number of concerts given each winter has never been less than five.

This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings. The dates are November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. For the first time in its history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second draft whenever that comes. Dr. Muck, in spite all prophecies to the contrary, will be the conductor as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the Orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second, Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring and in addition to her appearances in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the Orchestra in Baltimore during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the Orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal, the Orchestra acclaimed her a very remarkable artist. Last year she played in Boston with the Orchestra with great success and this year, to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

FRITZ KREISLER.

Record
Oct, 22, 1917

24

DR. CARL MUCK

Every music lover of Boston has one clear duty—and that duty is to attend the performances which the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives occasionally to benefit its pension fund. This duty is always a pleasure especially for those who, not being regular subscribers to the Symphony concerts, are able to hear the orchestra only on rare occassions.

The term, pension fund, explains it. It is a fund which makes possible pensions to men of the orchestra when age robs them of their usefulness as orchestral players. It has frequently been said of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the orchestra itself was its best soloist. This is true—there is no visiting virtuoso who robs the orchestra of its great glory. The visiting artist, however, makes for variety. The visiting artist also—it is a fact beyond dispute—makes for large box office receipts.

This year the orchestra has for soloist for its pension fund concert, which comes Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall, no less distinguished an artist than Miss Geraldine Farrar. Long since Miss Farrar volunteered her services for a concert which would benefit the orchestra but her various engagements in opera house, concert hall and motion picture studio have prevented her from appearing. Now, at last, a date has been found that suits both the prima donna and the orchestra.

For this Sunday concert Dr. Muck and Miss Farrar have agreed to make as popular a program as possible. Miss Farrar will sing Elizabeth's Song of Welcome from "Tannhauser," and three orchestrated songs by Wagner, "Schmerzen," "Im Triebhaus" and "Traeume." The orchestra will play the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," the funeral music from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the "Pathetic Symphony," one of the most popular not only in Russian, but in all music.

Certainly a program made up entirely of Wagner and Tschaikowsky, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and with Miss Farrar as soloist should greatly benefit the pension fund.

Transcript, Oct, 23, 1917

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRAS AND THE NEW TAX

Some Signs of a Sulking and Evasive Attitude That Does the Controlling Powers Little Credit—The Dilemma of the Managers Over Small Recitals—Delays at the Symphony Concerts of Friday Afternoons—The Emotional Hyperbole of Skriabin—Mr. Kreisler, New Pieces and Familiar Powers

THE controlling powers—directors, guarantors, managers—of symphony orchestras in the United States may hardly take a more mistaken course than to try to evade the war-tax soon to be levied on tickets to such concerts. Already the air is thick with rumors that one or another of them will raise a test-case under the new revenue law and that the rest will watch the litigation with a warmly benevolent interest. In some cities and States, it appears, such orchestras now escape local taxation on the ground that they are "educational institutions" not conducted for profit. The Federal act makes a similar exemption and some believe or profess to believe that symphony concerts fall within it. In strict legality perhaps they may, since few or none such series in the United States yield a profit and since the assertion that the public performance of music in opera house or concert-room is "educational" has become one of the unchallenged platitudes of a much- enduring time.

On the other hand, every man Jack of us who is paying his share in the new war-taxes, and usually paying it willingly, knows that at least two-thirds or three-quarters of the audiences that attend symphony concerts from Boston to San Francisco are a well-to-do public quite as able to bear the increased cost of their tickets as are the rest of us to bear that of many another necessity or luxury. He knows also, and often out of honest personal experience, that this public seeks the halls of music on a Friday afternoon or a Saturday evening for the pleasure it anticipates, without a thought of the much touted "education" it is about to receive. If there is one public more than another that should accept gracefully the tax upon admission to entertainments, it is the public frequenting opera houses and concert halls. For almost wholly, it consists of the well-to-do or of those who so enjoy the pleasures of music that they are willing to endure many economies to purchase them. The truth is that in attitude toward the new tax the managers of music are cutting a poor figure beside the managers of players. With one accord the directors of the theatres have accepted the new tax cheerfully and loyally and prepared to cooperate in the collection of it from the public; whereas not a few of the directors of concerts and opera sit grumbling and foreboding in their offices, rolling "test-cases" as a soft morsel under their tongues, mumbling over the "educational" fallacy and generally waiting for the Government to move upon them, as surely and righteously it will. If this is not a variety of "Slacking," then it is hard to name it.

The Real Managerial Dilemma

In one respect, however—and in all fairness be it said—the managers of concerts face an incidental outcome of the new tax on admissions, unlike any that threatens the producers of plays. Concerts by the Kreislers or the McCormacks of music will still fill halls to the doors, tax or no tax on the tickets. Concerts by singers or virtuosi of less wide vogue, but with an established public, like Mr. Elman or Mr. Gabrilowitsch, Mme. Culp or Miss Hempel, are equally secure. On the other hand, the recitals of singers, pianists and violinists with their way still to make to a dependable public, and yet more the recitals of beginners, stand in curious jeopardy. To increase and widen the number of hearers for these rising talents the manager usually makes a generous distribution of free tickets: for the unknown singer or player, trying fortune in New York, Boston or Chicago, he knows no other way—and indeed there is no other way—to assemble even a slender audience.

Whether the habitual recipients of these "tickets of favor," as the Parisians call them, will be willing to pay the tax upon them remains to be seen. The managers believe that they will be reluctant to do so, while since such tickets often run into twenties, fifties and hundreds, they are loth to pay it themselves or, finally, out of "their artist's" scanty pocket. Yet these singers, pianists and violinists often deserve a hearing, while in some instances they are clearly on the way to no small accomplishment and, ultimately, to that most blessed of all artistic possessions in the managerial view, a "following." They can hardly be expected to play or sing to emptier benches than they do now; while if an audience were invited to hear them and so to escape taxation, the listening company might be smaller than it would be even with free tickets taxed. And there, on the very sharp horns of a dilemma the managers at present are.

To these repinings and plaints, one more of a different sort and more nearly touching the Symphony Concerts in Boston, may be added becomingly. Letters reach this department from subscribers to the concerts of Friday afternoons saying that they are now deprived of the pleasure of the last number on the programme because of a gradual setting back of the hour of beginning and a gradual lengthening of the intermission. The complainants, like many other listeners of Friday afternoon, dwell at some distance from Boston, and, as a rule, have need to catch certain trains homeward. They approve the ostensible length of the concert—an hour and forty-five minutes or even two hours—since, were that the actual duration, they could readily reach their station. But, as they assert, the performance seldom begins before twenty minutes to three, instead of the appointed two-thirty; while the nominal intermission of ten minutes usually extends to fifteen, and has been known to last through twenty.

The managerial presumption is that the audience welcomes this longer intermission, as it probably does, unless there are time-tables threatening in the middle distance. It also believes and with reason, that it is better to begin a concert five or ten minutes beyond the appointed hour than to interrupt it for almost as many, while the inevitable late-comers are seated. At the concerts of Saturday evening, at which no appreciable part of the audience comes from a considerable distance, the late beginning and the longer pause work well. On Friday afternoons, however, there are hearers from various cities of remoter New England by no means so well content.

Skriabin a Second Time

By inference from the conversation of last Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in those debated and sometimes debateful intermissions, it is not likely that Skriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy" will be repeated "by general request" at a subsequent pair of Symphony Concerts. Yet, beyond peradventure to hear it for a second or a third time, with the perceptions more at ease with Skriabin's procedure and so the more sensitive to his expressive intent with the music, is to receive at moments no little impression of the fervor of his emotion welding his means to his end and infusing the tone-poem with beauty or exalting it to power. Of such, for example, are the measures that begin it, as in a tremor of darksome expectation into which tonal radiance fitfully flickers and pierces—the light of the spirit penetrating and illuminating the shadows of doubt and striving and then ever ascendant—a conception as dear to Skriabin in all his semi-pagan music as it was to the more conventionally devout Franck. Again, once the ear accepts the idiom of Skriabin, there is no small emotion, no slight delineative power in those middle pages of "The Poem of Ecstasy" in which the goading trumpet-motive splinters upward through the orchestral turmoil beneath and hangs glowing above it, the goal of the quest of the music that whips it into new strivings or caresses it for the instant with the contrast of beauty and reward.

It is easy to say that the massive sweep of the climax in the tone-poem is an old story in these days when the diatonic surge of Strauss is a commonplace of the concert-room. Yet, attentively heard, this climax of Skriabin begins in germ in the music, scores of measures before it noticeably gathers and mounts. Each bar adds, as it were, a streamlet to the emotional tide; there are advances and recessions not merely to play on the nerves of the hearer in the chromatic Wagnerian fashion, but like to a passion of will pent in the music, bursting through it, and finally flooding it, to know, for a bare instant, the peace of ethereal calm. Whatever the effect of the tone-poem upon hearers disposed to carp at ultra-modern music and to resent what seems to their poised and genteel souls, Slavic hyperbole of emotion and expression, there are musicians in [illegible] not hear "The Poem of Ecstasy" without the tears with which, as a tale of Moscow [illegible], Skriabin wet the score.

Record
Oct. 22, 1917

Globe
Oct, 21, 1917

Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" Played This Week

For the third pair of Symphony concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening there will be no soloist. The symphony will be Brahms' Fourth, a work which is constantly growing in general appreciation and popularity.

For the other two numbers Dr Muck has chosen Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Isle of Death," and Debussy's symphonic suite, "Printemps." It will be remembered that Rachmaninoff's splendid work was first done here several years ago by the composer himself and later in the same season by Mr Fiedler. Dr Muck revived it two years ago with much success.

Debussy's "Printemps" is not to be confounded with his "Rondes de Printemps," which have been played here both by Mr Fiedler and Dr Muck. This suite was composed in Rome in February, 1887, and was originally written for orchestra, pianoforte and chorus without words.

It was Debussy's second envoi from Rome, where the composer had gone as the winner of the Prix de Rome. Debussy finally prepared an orchestral score from this work—the one which will be played here—in 1913.

Sun
Oct. 14, 1917 New York

Boston Won Anyway.

The Boston season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened very brilliantly with its first pair of concerts on October 12 and 13. The beginning of a new season finds the prestige of Dr. Muck's organization undiminished.

There is the usual story to tell of the New York concerts. For both series, the evenings and the afternoons, Carnegie Hall is entirely sold out for the season and there are several hundred sorely disappointed music lovers who were unable to secure accommodations. The opening concerts will be given in the first week of November.

25 Republic
Springfield, Mass, Oct, 10,

Ticket Sale for Ellis Concerts

The sale of season tickets for the Ellis concerts in the Auditorium opens at Otto Baab's music house, Elm street at 9 o'clock this morning and the large advance sale gives promise of an excellent demand. With more artists, all chosen from the best available talent on the American concert stage, and the greater variety of the concerts themselves the season promises to be even more popular than were the concerts last year. The last concert in the series, February 27, with the Boston symphony orchestra of 100 men and a male chorus of 100 picked voices, under Dr Muck will be a distinct novelty and should prove as much of a sensation as the same combination did in New York last winter. The artists for the first concert Wednesday evening the 31st, are Mabel Garrison, soprano, Sophie Braslau, contralto, Giovanni Martinelli tenor, and Arthur Middleton, basso, all of the Metropolitan opera company. Fritz Kreisler is the soloist for the second concert November 28 and Mme Louise Homer and Gabrilowitsch are the artists for the third concert January 10.

Technical High School Notes

Post
Oct, 21, 1917

The announcement of the performance of Rachmaninoff's tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead," after Boecklin, at the Symphony concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, brings to mind a surprising statement in Mr. Montagu-Nathan's last book on present-day composers of Russia. In the chapter on Rachmaninoff, Mr. Montagu-Nathan remarks that "The Isle of the Dead" was composed after Rachmaninoff's tour of America in 1909-10, and that it is far from a sympathetic commentary on Boecklin's famous picture. As a matter of fact, the first performance of "The Isle of the Dead" took place under Rachmaninoff's direction at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Dec. 18 and 19, 1910. And if Mr. Montagu-Nathan has been no more careful in his estimate of the quality of the tone poem than he has of the date of its composition, it need not surprise us that he under-rates what will surely be ranked as one of Rachmaninoff's finest compositions. We think the subject chosen by the composer was one peculiarly apposite to his temperament.

We still remember the profound impression made by Mr. Rachmaninoff, an exceedingly simple but impressive personality, and his music, when it was played under his baton. There was a profound melancholy, a reflectiveness, a sombre, detached element in this music and its performance, which neither Mr. Fiedler nor Dr. Muck has so far been able to achieve with the composition in any like degree. One remembered then, and realized the force of Boecklin's own remark, that to understand his picture thoroughly, one must come under its spell so that one would be startled by a knock at the door. Silence, someone said, could only be portrayed in music by means of three brass bands! There is silence in the picture of Boecklin. There is silence and all that it implies in Rachmaninoff's music. Of this music, which is not so striking thematically as other compositions by this composer, it might be said, as Renan said so happily of Turgenieff, that "the reveries of centuries had amassed themselves about its heart." Even the treatment of the Dies Irae is not as the entrance of a terrifying apparition, but rather the intensification of a noble and contemplative mood. An extraordinary piece of music! A mood conveyed as it could only be conveyed, perhaps, by this of all the arts—and not a composition to be jauntily dismissed in a paragraph of a book of generalities about Russian composers.

Brahms' fourth symphony will also be played at the Symphony concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Discussion as to Brahms' Prussianism or anti-Prussianism has been proceeding with heat in London. The London Times of Aug. 29 printed this letter on the subject from Sir David Hunter Blair:

"The writer of your little obituary notice of Robert von Mendelssohn, who had, we are told, nothing German about him except his name, describes him as 'the friend of so many of Germany's best—Clara Schumann, Joachim and Brahms—none of whom, happily, lived to see the wreck of their ideals.' With regard to Brahms, one would rather like to know what ideal of his has been wrecked by the present policy, attitude and action of Germany, which is presumably what the writer refers to. Brahms was a great musician and a German (though not a Prussian). His music is eternal, and independent of the limits of place and time. But his personal ideals were German through and through, and his dislike and contempt for England were notorious and invincible all through his life, which almost coincided with the long reign of Queen Victoria. He never set foot in England; he twice refused a degree from an English university, and his letter declining to write a work for a great English festival, though sometimes cited as humorous, was simply offensive. Brahms' English biographers have almost entirely glossed over his hatred of England, one of the best known of them naively stating that he would not visit us because he dreaded being lionized and made much of. And I remember at a university musical club meeting much indignation being wasted on a member who objected to an English club contributing to a memorial to a man, however eminent, who detested England and all her works. Once more, what ideal cherished by Brahms has been wrecked in the present upheaval of Europe? One would really like to

Transcript, Oct, 20, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THE CONTRASTS OF A RANGING PROGRAMME

Sonorous and Stately Sibelius, Exotic and Fiery Enesco, for Forepiece and Afterpiece—Between, Beethoven According to Mr. Zimbalist and, for Music of Genius, Skriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy"

ACCUSTOMED, even favorite, pieces began and ended the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon. In themselves, to most that heard them familiarly, they brought no new sensation; but the performance of both proved conductor and orchestra, thus early in the season, at the top of their powers and full of mettle. The broad sonorities with which Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia" begins, were magnificent to hear in depth, richness and mellow amplitude of tone; keen was the rhythming of the succeeding passage; then chorus-like, but with unerring aptitude for the several parts, the orchestra sang the composer's warm melody—his own, yet of the folk; and so ascended under Dr. Muck's stimulating hand to the large progressions and ceremonial eloquence of the close. There is no record that Sibelius designed and wrote the piece for any other end than to please and express himself. Yet, contrary to most of his music, obviously written in intent personal release of impulse and imagining to closely sympathetic and enkindled ears, "Finlandia" sounds as though it were devised and felt as music for large and stately occasion, to be the voice, less of individual, than general, emotion, to stir a great and various company. It is of Sibelius, publicly "doing his bit," as it were, for the Finnish passion of nationality—not of Sibelius brooding, picturing, tossing and tormented tone-poet, writing a universal music out of his own Northern spirit.

Again in Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, at the end of the concert, the rhythmic verve and precision of the orchestra, the flash and flicker of its tonal color, its nervous zest of flying pace, the sting it gave to the repetitions, the taut spring at which it held the suspensions, stirred the audience and glorified the music. No doubt the piece is fittingly Roumanian; the sharp voice of gypsy fiddles, the shrill shriek of frenzied piccolos, the alternate languors and furies of primitive melody and rhythm, the hammering repetitions sound through the rhapsody, as though Bucharest were both making and hearing it. Enesco's handling is as simple, naked and repetitious; only he flings over his wayside tunes and snapping rhythms vivid patches of instrumental and harmonic color and drives his orchestra as fast and hard as virtuosi may be sped. Where composer ends, conductor, here in Boston, begins, heating the elementary fires and the glowing trappings of the music, until they flame out of the crucible of tingling nerves and excited artistry. Once more the listener had good reason to speculate upon the other two and strangely unprocurable rhapsodies of the set. No Roumanian girl on a fete day always wears the same ribbons; so presumably in the second and the third piece Enesco does not always sound flaming scarlet.

Equally of the orchestra at its ready and ranging best, were the fineness, suavity, sensibility and grace of undulating tone that it and the conductor brought to Mr. Zimbalist's version of Beethoven's concerto for violin. Rarely, in Symphony Hall, has it sounded in such degree as a gently mellifluous, exquisitely spun, elegantly bedecked music—the fine and final flower, as it seemed, of salon pieces for eighteenth-century virtuosi, the last return of Beethoven to the Mozartian matter and manner that, as the fourth symphony also proves, he had at command in 1806, no less than his own bolder, freer, deeper idiom. Often, perhaps too often, and within easy recollection, the concerto has been played in recent years at the Symphony Concerts, while on each occasion the music has reflected the image of the violinist with Dr. Muck submissively and expertly holding the glass at whatever angle the virtuoso willed. In nearly every other familiar music of Beethoven's riper years, Beethoven is Beethoven. By exception in this particular concerto, he outdoes even St. Paul, becoming all things to all men—or rather violinists. Mr. Hess's nervous energy used to make it vivid and vivacious, Mr. Spalding, last winter, embroidered it upon the air in exact and edgeless pattern; Mr. Witek is wont to mould it in larger phrase, warmer transition, freer motion; Mr. Kreisler wrapped it in the lustrous velvet of his tone; glamored what is intrinsically an eighteenth-century salon piece for an artful and graceful violinist, with his own poetic sensibility, his own felicity of style.

Mr. Zimbalist, in his turn, seems to hear the violin part of the concerto as a strand of flowing, delicately modulated, soft-hued, subdued and mellowed sound that the fused voices of the violin and the orchestra are weaving into the expanding pattern of the whole. Accordingly, as he measured the tone of his bow and strings, so Dr. Muck measured the tone of the assembled instruments. The long introduction became as suave and airy preluding; the violinist's "passage-work" and cadenza in the first movement as light filigree upon a tonal background as adeptly shaded; violinist and orchestra sang the songful passages in intimate introspective voice; the slow movement was linked sweetness drawn into the smoothest and subtlest of euphonies; the finale was gently rhythmed, elegantly paced, half-tinted. The listener heard violinist, conductor and orchestra as he might hear a singer when for the exercise of her most adroit artistries she subdues her voice by half. The pattern of the music became as embroidered arabesque—Beethoven in watercolor. Dr. Muck, Mr. Zimbalist, the band behind them, might have been at the other end of a music-room in twilight.

Grant this notion of the concerto, which Dr. Muck loyally and acutely accepted with pliant proportioning of tone, pace and accent to the will of the violinist, which the audience followed with the raptest of listening and the warmest of applause, and Mr. Zimbalist plays his part to perfection—even on a day when damp burrows into intonation. No hearer seemed more rapt than he—conscious only of violin, music, and the ends he sought. His voice insinuated itself into the concerto rather than entered it—soft, round, undulating, finely modulated, gently colored, superlatively supple and subtle. As the orchestral voices continued the design of the music, his, blending with them, ornamented it with a plastic and placid loveliness, or taking the melody to itself, it spun phrase out of phrase into an edgeless, jointless strand of tone in subdued flow, of subdued brightness. The cadenza, so played, became as music of fanciful and not displayful filament; the transitions were meltings of one voice into many. The embroidery of the slow movement brought like lovely and astute euphonies, like grace of phrase, like sustaining of the silken thread of the music, however finely spun. The deftness of rhythm, the fluency of phrase, the gossamer delicacy of gleaming tone made the finale a music of light and air. Nowhere did Mr. Zimbalist miss the sentiment; nowhere did he fall short of due elegance; seldom has the concerto seemed so adroit, smooth-surfaced, mellifluous to an artful violin. Yet all this loveliness was miniature, a little dry, somewhat studied, a Beethoven by no means lifeless, but hushed, smoothed, graced, beyond even the necessities of a Mozartean virtuoso music.

Skriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy," virtually played for the first time here, since Mr. Fiedler made a sorry and bewildered botch of it seven years ago, maintained these contrasts of a highly diversified programme. The orchestra had mastered a piece, exacting in the compass it requires of many an instrument, in unexpected interval, in intricate weaving of parts and voices. Dr. Muck sought only to find unclouded and undiminished speech for a Skriabin whose voice and whose passion are all his own. The audience heard intent, sometimes puzzled, sometimes stirred, never unimpressed and at the end heartily applausive. To listen coolly, detachedly, analytically, was to hear a music of impeccable, even orthodox form, unspringing from a few vivid motives, creating itself out of itself, however intensive or changeful the mood. Seldom in it does the fit means to the desired end seem to evade Skriabin. Yet so to hear it was also to note occasional strange fashioning of chords and stranger derivations from them, harmonies that to academic ears are rather dissonances, and an instrumental color singular in persistent and significant use of the trumpets and subtle in the division and sub-division of the strings—a color that was less definable tonal tint for tonal tint than an iridescent mantle over the whole. Never was this color merely imposed; always it was intrinsic in the substance and the passion of the music. Constructively, Skriabin had a mind as well as emotions, and skill no less than sensation. Grant him his inch of individuality and there is no questioning the ell of music into which he logically expands it. Call him mad, as some of his Russian detractors used to do, but there is expert method in the madness.

To hear not only mentally and analytically, but in emotional response and yielding to the personal revelation, as it seemed, of the tone-poem, was to experience a strangely painful music. Chaikowski, brooding over temperamental foreboding, restlessness and woe, found comfort when in music he had released to the world his passion and pain. Skriabin, consumed by introspective ardors, aspirations, struggles, sensations, found like solace when in music he had laid bare and even intensified these spiritual agonies and conflicts. The trumpet motive that soon flames across "The Poem of Ecstasy," soars up and down within it, pierces pits of despair, irradiates heights of desire—the imperious call of will and masterdom—sinks deeper and deeper into the ear and imagination. As it haunts the tone-poem, so it haunts the listener. The ear hears it as the Miltonic eye saw the comet, engrossed, effaced. There is genius, in the narrower sense of the word, in the invention and the enforcement of it.

The rest seems manifold and agonized struggle to attain the dominion over self that this motive embodies. It is an entirely self-contained, wholly logical, even formally orthodox music; yet hear it all a-whirr with tremulous desire for spiritual release and confidence; shrieking high, sharp, thin as in a frenzy of such aspiration; thickening into tense insistence; groping darkly toward the goal; shining for an instant in the radiance of it; thrust back; scaling the air anew with incredible lightness; caressing the vision as in sensuous intoxication; mounting, mounting, mounting until it is caught into the final might and majesty of this universal will; swaying for an instant—another stroke of genius—in ethereal calm; then clasped anew by that resistless dominance. A music that aches upon the receiving senses; that racks the heart; that is anything, everything, but the ecstasy naming it; that to the non-Slavic mind works almost a horror at such piteous yet pitiless self-revelation; but a music that, like or mislike, denounce or extol, only genius—not talent—writes, stripped, bleeding, unashamed. H. T. P.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Brahms, Rakhmaninov and Debussy on Dr. Muck's Programme—Mr. Kreisler Anew—Music for Two Pianos—Miss Renard's and Miss Miller's Recitals

WITH a single exception, familiar pieces fill Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next. It begins with the fourth symphony, in E minor, of Brahms—the symphony with a Finale in intricate but spirited variations—in the biennial repetition now the lot of his larger compositions as established classics. It proceeds with the tone-poem of Rakhmaninov, "The Isle of the Dead," thrice heard in pairs of Symphony Concerts, since it was first led there by the composer. So, here and elsewhere, by grave beauty, austere voice of mourning and longing and recurring hint at the mystery of death has it established itself in the modern repertory. The third and less familiar number is Debussy's youthful suite, "The Spring," written while he was a student at Rome in 1887, and subsequently revised and rescored by the composer in 1913. It runs in clear melody and chromatic languors, summoning throughout poetized Italian atmosphere.

Mr. Kreisler Returns

At Symphony Hall, tomorrow afternoon, for the beginning of the annual series of Sunday Concerts, Mr. Kreisler, the violinist,

Post, Oct, 21, Continued

This letter was answered by Sir Charles Villiers Stanford in the Times: "Sir David Hunter Blair had not, as far as I am aware, the only direct means of ascertaining Brahms's attitude to this country—personal knowledge of the man. I am one of the few left who had that privilege. I state positively that Sir David Hunter Blair and his University Club friend are entirely wrong, and, from ignorance, of course, took a wholly false view of his opinions. I know why Brahms did not come for an English degree, and have his letter (written in very different terms from what Sir David imagines) in my possession now. I also know the reasons why he wrote the letter to a 'great English festival,' which, so far from being offensive, was a model of well-deserved and subtle irony; but I refrain from specifying the reasons for it, because to do so would involve personal matters which are none to creditable to ourselves and are best left buried with the protagonists. The naivete to which Sir David alludes is so obviously intended for me that I feel compelled to reply thus: He may consider the dislike of social publicity naif, but it still happily exists in some men who are too big to care for it, and Brahms was one of these. He shared with Beethoven an admiration for this country which, like Beethoven, he never could face the journey to see. His scathing condemnation of Prussian policy at the time of the Chino-Japanese war, expressed in no measured terms at a grand ducal state dinner, is on record. He loved his country, but to hazard the guess that he despised and detested ours is to cast an unwarrantable slur both upon his memory and upon his judgment."

Traveler
Oct, 20, 1917.

Three Choral Concerts.

Rehearsals of the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, have been in progress in Jacob Sleeper Hall since Sept. 12, under the direction of Stephen Townsend.

Mr. Ellis has not yet selected the soloists for the second concert when Mahler's Second Symphony will be given, or for the third concert when Bach's Passion music will be given. At the first concert the soloists will be Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Programmes in Prospect

Two familiar and one unfamiliar piece fill Dr. Muck's programme for the third pair of Symphony Concerts on Friday, Oct.

Transcript Oct 18

26, and Saturday, Oct. 27. The familiar numbers are Brahms's symphony in E minor, No. 4, in biennial repetition, and Rakhmaninov's tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead," now established in the modern repertory by virtue of grave beauty and high imagining. The unfamiliar number is Debussy's youthful and graceful suite for orchestra, "The Spring."

Wagner and Tschaikovski, Dr. Muck, Miss Farrar and by no means incidentally the Symphony Orchestra, will divide the programme of the concert for its Pension Fund on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 28, in Symphony Hall as specified hereunder:

Symphony in B minor, No. 6, "The Pathetic" ..... Tschaikovski
Air, "Dich, Theure Halle!" from "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Miss Farrar.
"Good-Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" ... Wagner
Songs with orchestra:
Im Triebhaus-Schmerzen-Träume ..... Wagner
Miss Farrar.
Siegfried's Funeral Music from "Götter-dammerung" ..... Wagner

TRAVELER

PROVIDENCE, SEPT. 30, 1917

The Ellis Concerts.

It is an interesting and notable fact that practically all of the subscribers to last year's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence have retained their seats for the Ellis subscription concerts which will take the place of the Symphony concerts. To be sure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes three times under the new management, and the other two concerts are special ones of unusually high quality.

The general sale of subscription tickets for the Ellis concerts will open at Seddon's news stand in the Butler Exchange Monday morning, Oct. 8.

The preliminary announcements of the concerts are most interesting. They will be given, of course, in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evenings, as the Boston Symphony concerts in the past have been given. The dates are Oct. 30, Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12 and March 19.

The course will have a most brilliant opening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Geraldine Farrar as soloist. With the exception of her appearance the following Sunday in Boston with the orchestra at the pension fund concert, this will be her only appearance with the orchestra this season. She will give a few concerts during October before her season opens at the Metropolitan Opera House, in which company she will spend the entire winter.

The second concert brings a violin recital by Fritz Kreisler, whose name nowadays seems sufficient to fill any hall in which he may choose to play. Mr. Kreisler has had a good rest during the summer, and his art should be more wonderful than ever.

The third concert brings the second appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Miss Rosamund Young, soprano, as soloist.

Louise Homer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch will give the fourth concert.

Finally comes the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Anton Witek as soloist.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS
Oct. 11, 1917

100 MALE VOICES IN CHORUS

Coming With the Boston Symphony to Sing Liszt's "Faust"

One of the most interesting events of the musical season in Springfield will be the last concert of the Ellis course, on Wednesday evening, February 27. The program will consist of the magnificent "Faust" symphony of Franz Liszt For this purpose not only will the entire personnel of 100 men belonging to the Boston symphony orchestra be brought to Springfield, but a male chorus of 100 voices will also come, and Arthur Hackett, the distinguished young tenor, will sing the solo passages in the choral ending.

The musical sensation of New York's last season of music was the performance in Carnegie hall on Thursday evening, March 15, of this immense work. Its performance takes an hour and 15 minutes, and after many experiments Dr Muck came to the conclusion that there was no music which could go on the same program with it, unless it be entirely overshadowed, and, moreover, the symphony itself was sufficient for any evening of music.

It is not an exaggeration to say that New York was fairly swept off its feet by this performance of the "Faust" symphony. Not only was the orchestral performance magnificent in every detail, but such conservative papers as the New York Evening Post said that New York had never heard such choral singing as these Boston men gave. The chorus that will be employed in Springfield will be the same as appeared four times in Boston last year and once in New York.

Dr Muck is the fortunate possessor of the only score of the symphony in existence, which has the revisions and corrections made by Liszt in the last year of his life while he was living with his daughter Cosima Wagner in Baireuth. He gave the first two performances of this symphony in Boston in January, 1915, and these were so highly successful that they were repeated in April, making four performances in Boston for that season. He placed this symphony on the program of the Christmas concerts in Boston last year with a new male chorus which had been organized for the occasion by Stephen Townsend of Boston. At this performance Mr Hackett was the tenor. In every respect the performance rose above the remarkably high standard of those of the two seasons previous, and their success was sensational. Again they were repeated in March just previous to the memorable New York concert.

RECORD, OCT. 11, 1917

From Symphony Hall comes the announcement that Mr. Kreisler will play there Sunday, Oct. 21. The popular Mr. McCormack arrives in Boston just one week ahead of Mr. Kreisler, his friend and popularity rival. McCormack sings this Sunday at the Boston Opera House.

For the second pair of Symphony concerts, Oct. 19 and 20, the program will be: Sibelius, Finlandia, symphonic poem; Scriabin, Poeme de l'extase, symphonic poem; Beethoven violin concerto, d maj. op 61; Zimbalist, soloists; Enesco, Rhapsodie Roumaine, A maj. op 11, No. 1.

AMERICAN
Oct. 24, 1917

Creatore to Appear With Opera Here

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

As was the case last season, the new musical year is full of opportunity for the American musician. The United States has moved into the foremost place in the musical world. Where there is a legitimate demand for symphony concerts and for opera, these ambitious examples of musical art are to continue uninterruptedly. Whereas in Europe they are suffering from partial eclipse, here they are still the order of the day—thanks chiefly to wealthy patrons, to whom, as of old, the general musical public owes more than it is wont to acknowledge.

Here in Boston the Symphony season has made its usual auspicious start. Boston's brilliant orchestra will also, it is said, enjoy its customary generous patronage in other cities. There will be a short opera season here next month by the new company appearing under the direction of the spectacular yet talented Creatore. Later on the Chicago Opera Company will make its first appearance here under the joint initiative of Cleofanti Campanini and Charles A. Ellis. There are no other operatic prospects. But there is really no occasion for them. Experience has proved that a little opera goes a long way in Boston. The shadow of the Metropolitan Opera House rests constantly upon our Modern Athens.

Between the Symphony concerts and the numerous recitals already announced, local music-lovers will have an opportunity to hear most of the big artists of the day outside of the galaxy of stars confined to the temple of music on Broadway. The Symphony prospectus is brilliant with stars. But what is equally striking, it is liberally sprinkled with the names of budding artists who belong primarily to the New World. It may be that the season will also bring forth some worthy American compositions—not futile imitations of Debussy, which are not worth the paper they are written on, but imaginative works befitting the public's love of melody—which quality is after all the chief charm of the classics—and the free spirit of the country, which our song composers have so far sensed better than their more pretentious confreres.

* * *

POST, OCT. 24, 1917

THREE CHORAL CONCERTS

The rehearsals of the choral part of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, have been in progress in Jacob Sleeper Hall, Boston University, since Sept. 12, the rehearsals coming once a week, the ladies in the afternoon and the men at 6 o'clock in the evening. So far, the women's and men's chorus have been rehearsing separately, but next Wednesday evening, Oct. 24, at 7:30 o'clock, will come the first full chorus rehearsal.

There will be three full chorus rehearsals in Jacob Sleeper Hall on Oct. 24, 31 and Nov. 7. Then there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the first on Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, and the second on Monday evening, Nov. 19. At this second rehearsal all the soloists will be present.

Mr. Ellis has not yet selected the soloists for the second concert when Mahler's Second Symphony will be given. At the first concert, as already announced, the soloists will be Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

MONITOR
- Oct, 20, 1917 -

ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus assembled by Stephen Townsend indicate preparations which are not always possible with choral programs. The singers and the orchestra are to have two full rehearsals together, the first date being Nov. 14, and the second Nov. 19, when the four soloists will take part. The public performance will take place in Symphony Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 20.

AMERICAN
Oct. 21, 1917

Zimbalist and Symphony Share Public Approval

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Efrem Zimbalist, the young Russian violinist who now makes his home in this country, shared the honors of this week's Symphony concerts with the orchestra over which Dr. Muck presides with unfailing effectiveness. Two ovations marked the opening concert—one for Zimbalist's remarkably graceful performance of the Beethoven concerto in D major and the other for the orchestra's brilliant scaling of the dizzy heights of Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy."

The concerto calls for the very qualities that distinguish Zimbalist's playing. Suavity of tone and precise technique gave fame to the musician for whom the piece was written. In these features of his art, Zimbalist stands below none of the other violinists of the day. He played, yesterday, as in the house of friends, with the utmost charm, and was recalled at least half a dozen times after the performance.

The orchestra glorified Scriabin's strange tone poem. The work itself may be popular in 1950 or so, when Futurism will be taught in every kindergarten. It isn't any ordinary ecstasy that Scriabin pictures. It is more like a maudlin seventh heaven. But the manner in which it was performed, yesterday, was brilliant in the extreme.

The program opened with a Sibelius tone poem, "Finlandia," which is one of the Finnish composer's most interesting works, and it closes with Enesco's highly colored "Rumanian Rhapsody," a piece full of bright themes and thrilling crescendoes. The performance sparkled all the way.

TRANSCRIPT
- Oct. 25, 1917 -

Programmes in Prospect

At the Symphony Concerts of next week Dr. Muck purposes to revive the much mooted fourth symphony of Sibelius, originally heard here three years ago and then surprising the public with an ultra-modern idiom in which the composer had not hitherto written. Some listeners followed the first three movements with fairly clear sense of contents, progress, mood; but the finale left nearly every hearer baffled. Indisputably, there are beauty and power in the symphony, but both of a sort that repetition clarifies and intensifies. The other numbers of the programme are Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture and Saint-Saëns's amiable concerto in G minor for piano, in which Miss Frances Nash, a newcomer to the Symphony Concerts, will play the solo part.

Record
- Oct, 29, 1917 -

At the Symphony concerts, next week, Dr. Muck will play Brahms' Fourth Symphony, Rachmaninoff's "The Isle of Death" and Debussy's symphonic Suite, "Printemps."

Traveler
Oct, 26, 1917

Tomorrow afternoon's Symphony program will be as follows: Brahms's symphony No. 4; Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead" (after Boecklin's picture); Debussy's symphonic suite, "Spring."

AMERICAN
Oct. 27

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" Played

Globe Oct 27

Dr Muck Gives Noble Performance of Brahms' Symphony

Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," a noble score in the Russian literature of the orchestra, has been conducted here twice, after a manner by Mr Fiedler, once prior to yesterday, by Dr Muck and at its first hearing in Boston eight years ago in December by the composer himself. Another hearing is welcome. It recalls with fresh poignancy the sombre cypresses pointing heavenward like spires and craggy rocks beneath them in Boecklin's haunting picture—the sea with the eternal rhythm of its waves, the boat propelled by its lonely ferryman, but for the silent figure kneeling beside the shrouded figure, the silence as of centuries which broods over all unbroken save by these bearers of the dead.

Unlike Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, with its homage to Tschaikowsky, notwithstanding its unmistakably characteristic passages, this score after Boecklin's painting does not show tinsel with wear. In expression as in subject, it is as a thing which has been and will be, enduring, eternal. The use of the Dies Irae in the last pages is not that of religious drama, of ritual or service to be played or sung, but as a terrible hymn of the ages, of the day of doom, of that which preceded man and will live long after he has met his Maker.

The spirit of the work is ever a sublimated thing, awesome, portentious, transporting. Becoming obvious in a material profile, it would lose the great mystery of its stillness, a spell which the painter said must rest so deep as to be broken with a start should a door suddenly be opened.

Dr Muck favored yesterday a more positively outlined reading, a quicker and more absolute molding of phrase than memory recalls of him before. In the ascending mass of tone toward the superb climaxes he finds undoubtedly a greater pomp and its corresponding majesty. For some this is less the spirit of the painting than would be a development more inevitable if less perceptible, until the topmost crests of the climaxes seem a part of the silence which holds prisoner the island and its dead.

Dr Muck and the orchestra gave a noble reading and performance of Brahms' fourth symphony. The introspective cast of this music, its pervading seriousness, ascetic even in the whimsical, its dramatic breadth and fervor at its hight in the last movement, the hint of the sensuous East in the song of the slow movement—all were as some great drama in tone, unfettered by text, eloquent in feeling. Appreciative applause followed for conductor and orchestra.

Debussy's early suite "Printemps," graceful music, diatonic and barely prophetic of the later augmented triad, pages with a melodic idea here or turn in expression there, which might have fallen out from the score of "Manon" or "Werther," found Dr Muck happily inclined and both movements were played exquisitely.

POST, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1917

Major Higginson on Symphony Players

The following letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to a friend in reference to the Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, and various assertions concerning both, has been made public by the recipient:

"Your kind letter of Oct. 10 is before me.

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year, and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract. The tickets were sold as usual, that is, very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York and more are asked for. Sunday, here, all the seats and standing room were taken. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

"From the outstart, the one object of the orchestra has been only art. Apparently this is satisfactory to the public.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra, and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters, alleging this or that, and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck, who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurance has come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra—this in reply to a question about the matter.

"At the beginning of the war I said to the orchestra members that the situation was difficult for them and that the life of the orchestra depended upon their good temper and patience with regard to each other. They have all behaved perfectly, and in this matter Dr. Muck has been of the greatest assistance. In short, all these men have fulfilled their part, and the government says their slate is clean. Shall I fail in my part?

"For 36 years the orchestra has given comfort and pleasure to many people. If it stops, it will be for all time, for I can never build it up again.

"Supposing I dismissed all the men. How are they going to live? Somebody must employ them if they can find a place. Today they are aiding the education of the community through lessons and through concerts. Are they not doing more good than they can possibly do harm? They know very well that they are being watched. If we in this [illegible] of employ Germans, where can they go and what can they do?

"Let me repeat. There are in the orchestra various nationalities; there are a considerable number who are American citizens and liable to draft; there are a certain number who are not American citizens.

"Once more. I have run down cruel accusations, and simply say they are lies.

"Another point. The letter in the New York Times requires that the orchestra should play the 'Star Spangled Banner.' Why should it? The programmes are made in the summer as the conductor thinks best, for in many years I have never interfered with the programmes. Supposing that the 'Star Spangled Banner' were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any of the musicians? If you are living in Berlin or Vienna, would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans, and if you did, do you suppose that anybody would believe you?

"Now, you are welcome to repeat any of this to anybody. I do not write it as information for you or anybody else in particular, but because I know you as a gentleman of high standing and a member of a family which I have known since I was a boy. My own opinion is that if I backed out from this work now I should be a sneak.

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "H. L. HIGGINSON."

27 HERALD
– Oct. 27, 1917 –

SYMPHONY GIVES THIRD CONCERT

Rachmaninoff's "The Island of the Dead" Has a Place on Program.

WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, took place in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows: Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Rachmaninoff, symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead"; Debussy, symphonic suite, "Spring."

Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem seeks to express in music the picture of the same name by Arnold Boecklin. The mood of this picture is one of awful quiet; a stillness, like that found by Swinburne in the garden of Proserpine:

Then star nor sun shall waken,
Nor any change of light;
Nor sound of waters shaken,
Nor any sound or sight;
Nor wintry leaves nor vernal,
Nor days nor things diurnal;
Only the sleep eternal
In an eternal night.

But this Russian composer saw other things in the picture that the idle spectator does not see; probably they escaped the painter himself.

For in Rachmaninoff's music there is the suggestion of the last great day, the Day of Wrath, with the dead before the Judgment Seat. And on this island are despairing, tormented, shrieking souls, miserable and infinite wailing, hands outstretched in defiant and impotent rage. Puccini might envy certain pages of this music for the second act of his "Tosca."

Could Rachmaninoff have succeeded in a symphonic poem "to Boecklin's picture" without a betrayal of the painter? No composer of ordinary sense and controlled imagination would attempt to write music for Poe's prose poem "Silence." It is true that a French musician, Cabaner, once said: "To express silence in music I should need three brass bands," but from his music that we have seen it is safe to believe that Cabaner was more brilliant and original in paradox than in composition. Any piece truly illustrative of Boecklin's picture would necessarily be very short, for the imitative monotony would soon vex the hearer. No, there was need of a strong contrast, of a tumultuous middle section. To excuse this on aesthetic grounds the fancy of the composer outstripped that of the painter.

When Rachmaninoff conducted this symphonic poem in Boston, the reading of the whole was more subdued. The lamentation was less poignant; the entrance of the "Dies Irae" was a hint of the burial, not of the terrible day beyond the grave. Nor was the general effect of the music lessened thereby; on the contrary, the mood of the picture was strongly reproduced by what might paradoxically be called the stillness of the performance. The ferryman rowed noiselessly; the sea was calm; no shriek of woe came from the white figure near the coffin. Dr. Muck's rendering, on the other hand, was intensely emotional and dramatic.

While the second movement of Brahms' fourth symphony is among the most beautiful and human of his works, the other movements are autumnal and austere, at times granitic. There is nothing in this symphony so demoniacal in energy and compelling in appeal as the first movement of Brahms' first symphony and the first of the third; nothing so noble and inspiring as the introduction to the final of the first. Too many pages in this fourth symphony show the composer the slave of formalism. As Ernest Newman well says: "The danger of a transmitted classical technic in any art is that now and then it tempts its practitioners to talk—and allows them to talk quite fluently—when they have really nothing of vital importance to say."

The concert would have been complete if it had ended with the music of Rachmaninoff. Two compositions of the length and importance of the symphony and the symphonic poem are enough. Debussy's suite, though an early work, is hardly a hat and overcoat piece.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Sibelius, Symphony No. 4; Saint-Saens, Concerto No. 2 for the piano (Frances Nash, pianist); Beethoven, overture, Lenore, No. 3.

POST
– Oct. 27, 1917 –

AUTUMN MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Brilliant Performance of Brahm's Fourth

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, was the most interesting and perhaps, also, the most brilliantly interpreted, thus far, of the programmes of the season. Brahm's fourth symphony, with its autumnal mood and coloring; Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead," after the famous pictures of Boecklin, and Debussy's charming suite, "Printemps," made the list.

To each of its items Dr. Muck brought his finest gifts as an interpreter, and the implicit obedience and response of the players to his wishes. There was no soloist, which was well, since the performance of any soloist would have compared poorly with the eloquence of the orchestra.

DR. MUCK'S ARTISTRY

The symphony of Brahms towers higher with the passing of the years. The E minor symphony, long considered the most austere of the four that Brahms composed, is likely to outlast certain of its predecessors, in former years more popular. The noble melancholy, the cool beauty, the originality of this music, and the superb mastery of its structure, give it a unique place in orchestral literature. The performance was so eloquent that it would be folly to discuss it from the interpretative point of view. Seldom has the art of the conductor been more impressive.

Similarly with the playing of Rachmaninoff's tone poem. Unless memory entirely fails us, Dr. Muck's conception of this music has altered somewhat since his last performance of it in November, 1915. Formerly the composition had with Dr. Muck a more objective and literally effect character than it had when the composer conducted the initial performance at the Boston Symphony concerts of Dec. 18 and 19, 1909. A contemplative, mystical quality was more evident in Rachmaninoff's interpretation than in Dr. Muck's. But yesterday the conductor's feeling was so deep and so faithful to the intention of the composer that every hearer communed with his spirit. This spirit is rather of the calm, the mystery, the majesty of death, than the hyper-emotionalism of, for instance, Tschaikowsky when he thought of the end that meets all. True, the poem is wildly dramatic, but the passage makes only the more impressive the pervading darkness of coloring and solemnity of mood. In no other pages of which we know has Rachmaninoff attained such profound and majestic expression.

The audience was deeply impressed by this music, which today may well have double significance for anyone, in any land. The early suite of Debussy was none the less welcome, if only as a fortunate contrast to what had gone before. This music shows occasional immaturity in the development of the ideas, which do not expand in a manner always logical and continuous in thought, but it is delicious music none the less, full of youth, genius and the loveliness of nature. Already in this early work there is original instrumentation, the sensitive coloring, the feeling for unconventional harmony, the spirit of a young man, a new talent, with much to say. The concert was an engrossing one, one to be treasured in the memory.

Advertiser Nov. 1, 1917

HIGGINSON BACKS MUCK ON ANTHEM

Will Drop Symphony Orchestra "If Public Goes Too Far," He Says

BIG RUMPUS OVER PROVIDENCE CONCERT

Dept. of Justice Takes Up Refusal to Play "Star Spangled Banner"

The Boston Symphony Orchestra may be disbanded and Symphony Hall may be sold, according to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the world-famous musical organization, as a result of the rumpus that has arisen over the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence on Tuesday night. Maj. Higginson backs up the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, for not including the National anthem in his program. When informed that Thomas Howick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice, had sent a special report to Washington yesterday recommending that the orchestra be prohibited by the Government from giving any concerts anywhere unless "The Star Spangled Banner" is played at each, he said:—

"If the public goes too far in this thing, I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which probably would mean its disorganization. And if it should break up, I don't believe it would ever be reorganized. It might also mean that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now. I do not propose to have the public interfere with the program of the orchestra."

Maj. Higginson said that he intended to write to the Department of Justice himself; that he had talked with high Government officials and that none of them had anything derogatory to say about any member of the orchestra.

"I suppose Dr. Muck is pro-German," he said. "He couldn't very well be anything else, if he is honest."

"For 30 years," said the Major, "I have been selling a certain thing, to wit, high class music. It is so advertised and everybody knows what to expect."

"My contracts with my players call for a certain number of weeks of art music, after which I say to them there will be popular concerts in which you may play if you wish. It is all in the contract.

"I could not, without breaking it, have the program changed. As a matter of fact, I have nothing to do with the program. It is made up by Dr. Muck during the summer and goes through the winter as it is.

"Some people in Providence are trying to make trouble. I have almost decided as a result to give up the Providence concerts altogether.

Exonerates Muck

"Last night we received some requests from people to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' at Providence. We looked up the lists of the subscribers to the concert and found that none of those who requested the National Anthem were on the list. As a result we decided not to play the piece. It would have been out of place in the program, which was a purely harmonic one. Dr. Muck had nothing to do with it.

"I have been to the highest authorities in Washington, to former U. S. Dist. Atty. Anderson and to the Secret Service concerning stories about Dr. Muck. I find that there is absolutely nothing against him.

"Mr. Anderson told me something about the card index system in which all suspicious persons of German origin are listed. They had nothing concerning the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

Out of Place

"In the matter of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they ask me why we shouldn't play it.

"I ask, why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Maj. Higginson in conclusion stated that the audience at Providence Tuesday night was large and enthusiastic, and that there was no hint of any trouble of any sort.

Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra pointed out one feature of Tuesday evening's troubles emphatically.

"Dr. Muck knew nothing of the requests to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' until after the concert was over," he said. "When I received the communication asking that we play the National Anthem I consulted our Providence subscription books and found not the name of one subscriber on the list of the those who requested that it be played."

According to Mr. Ellis, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was advised that there was trouble brewing at Providence Tuesday evening. When they got there, therefore, they did not continue the sale of tickets. It is said that many persons in Providence, who are anti-Muck, were among those not obtaining tickets and that this helped to fan unpleasant feelings.

Resolutions condemning the orchestra and Dr. Muck "for his deliberately insulting attitude" were adopted yesterday by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Providence police commission were requested by the City Council to refuse further permission for concerts there during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

While the concert in Providence on Tuesday night was under way a reporter asked Manager Ellis if the orchestra would play the "Star Spangled Banner."

"I think not" Mr. Ellis replied. "The Boston Symphony Orchestra played it every night for 10 weeks during the pop concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, where it was appropriate. We have announced our program for tonight and people have purchased their tickets to hear this program, and I think it will be well worth hearing."

"You say the orchestra played the national anthem in the Pop concerts. Did Dr. Muck lead?"

"He does not lead the Pop concerts," was the answer.

"Has he ever led 'The Star Spangled Banner'?"

"I do not know."

PENSION CONCERT

Capacity Audience Enjoys Feast of Music

Globe Feb. 28

Geraldine Farrar Casts Her Spell as of Old—Dr Muck Conducts

A Tschaikowsky-Wagner program played by the Symphony Orchestra at the season's first concert for the pension fund, Dr Muck conducting, with Geraldine Farrar as soloist, making what was said to be her only appearance in Boston this year, called out a great audience to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, limited only by the capacity of the house.

Tschaikowsky and Wagner have made a strong team for these pension fund programs. When it was not the "pathetic" symphony it was the fifth; yesterday, the former. Is the appeal of this neurotic score as powerful now as a half-dozen years ago?

Yesterday the applause was desultory, half-hearted; nor was this any reflection upon the performance. There was the personal element of approval for Dr Muck as he returned and again with emphasis when he beckoned the men to stand with him. The performance was one of Slavic spirit, yet not underscoring the frenzy of the final allegro, which with repetition becomes more and more like the march of the tin soldiers, nor yet the dripping melancholy of what precedes and follows.

Here is prostrated and published grief. The mourner, hearing his own sobs, redoubles them lest they subside. It has been a question how long the emotional hysteria of this music would conceal its banality, a trait apparent most of all in the superficial scherzo, which tricks the ear with the rhythmic figure in 5-4 which might grace some salon caprice.

If the public should lose its liking for Tschaikowsky, who would take his place? There are the Strauss tone poems—Don Juan, or possibly "Hero's Life." Why not the gorgeous poems of Rimsky-Korsakow—"Antar" or "Scherezade," music not threadbare, and infinitely superior in content to this morbid symphony unworthy of the composer of the fourth symphony, or of "Romeo and Juliet," or of the "Tempest."

Miss Farrar, her voice more mellowed particularly through the medium and below, and often golden, sang Elizabeth's greeting to the hall of song from "Tannhaeuser," a group of songs by Franz, Schumann, Moussorgsky, Grieg and Gretschaninov with piano, and the three Wagner songs—"Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen" and "Traeume" with orchestra. In these, particularly in the first and third of the latter, her art recalled the day when she was heard more frequently here in song interpretation. It was a marked and curious thing that, although pressed even to insistence by her audience, Miss Farrar did not sing an extra number nor in English. Her texts were in German.

The performance of the "Good Friday" music from "Parsifal" and the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods," by Dr Muck and the orchestra, is familiar, and of its accustomed quality yesterday—ecstatic the one, and the other, noble.

Globe Nov. 1, 1917.

Record Oct, 31, 1917.

Traveler, Oct, 31, 1917

Globe Oct, 31, 1917.

MAJ H. L. HIGGINSON DEFENDS SYMPHONY

Says National Anthem Has No Place in Art

When Dr Muck Goes, Orchestra Will Go Too, Founder Declares

Maj Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, expressed considerable indignation yesterday over anonymous communications he has received "making false accusations against members of the orchestra" and abusing Dr Karl Muck, the director, for failing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the weekly concerts.

"When a man or a woman—for many of them are women," said he, "sends an anonymous letter accusing some man, it is like sticking a dirk in a man's back. They have a notion they are going to test my loyalty.

"I'm under contract with these men, and owe them an obligation, knowing that they have no other way of supporting their families or of earning their living.

"For several decades I have given my time so that Boston might have this orchestra, but when Dr Muck goes, the orchestra will go, and Symphony Hall, which it costs me $13,000 to $18,000 a year to maintain, may be sold.

"Now as to 'The Star Spangled Banner,' why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. If it did it would be played. Last Summer during our Summer concerts with the two-thirds orchestra we played that and 'America' every night, and those who went there know it. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging—it was because our contracts have arranged for Dr Muck to conduct at the Winter concerts.

"Those were popular concerts. These are not—they are art concerts and 'The Star Spangled Banner' has no place at them.

They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play that anthem. Supposing you were in Germany and got up and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the guardhouse and watch him.'

"These people may think that playing the anthem will assist the spirit of patriotism.

"Now as to the members. I have received assurances from three sources of our Government that there are no imputations against any of our musicians. One high officer assured me that under no conditions should I dismiss the orchestra.

"I am under contract with public and musicians for concerts of a certain kind, arranged for long ago. I have never meddled with the art side. I owe the public something as to the kind of concerts and these men something as to employment. There is nothing against them now—they are earning their bread. If I dismiss them where have they to go? Straight to the enemy's camp and into mischief."

BOSTON ORCHESTRA MAY BE BARRED IN PROVIDENCE

PROVIDENCE, Oct 31—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for ignoring the request to play the "Star Spangled Banner" last night, can play here no more, it was strongly intimated by the Police Commission today. The request was made by representatives of 10 organizations.

The Rhode Island Council of Defense, at a meeting today, condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude," and requested the Police Commission to refuse further licenses for concerts during the war, "when conducted by Karl Muck."

Agent Howick of the Department of Justice said he would make a full report of the episode to Washington and recommend that further concerts by the organization anywhere in the United States be forbidden unless the National Anthem is made a part of each program.

The Police Commissioners, through Chairman Presbrey, announced today that it was too early to anticipate how they would act on Dr Muck's application for another concert.

"We have reason to believe," he said, "that there will be opposition to such a license, and if a petition, which we understand is being circulated, is presented to us protesting against such a license we will give it most serious consideration."

Commissioner McCaffrey said significantly: "And you might say that this board is made up of three full-fledged Americans."

Frieda Hempel, agreeing to sing the National anthem, was granted a concert license today.

ORCHESTRA DID NOT REFUSE TO PLAY ANTHEM

Star Spangled Banner Not Requested by Subscribers

Denial of the story that the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert last night in Providence was made this morning by C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who said that it is an attempt of some Providence people to "start trouble."

Mr. Ellis returned to Boston today. He said that he received a telegraphic request signed by a number of Providence women urging that the National Anthem be played at the concert. Mr. Ellis said that as none of the names signed to the telegram had subscribed to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, said he knew nothing of the request.

"During our Pop concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number, and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the number was not played.

"Dr. Muck knew nothing of the request and did not refuse to play the National Anthem. Our program was not at all Germanic, the first half of the program being Tschaikowsky's Symphony and the second part a mixture of numbers by French, Hungarian and German composers."

The request that Dr. Muck conduct his orchestra in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" was made early yesterday by eight prominent Rhode Island women officials of prominent musical clubs and by the

Post Oct, 31, 1917

STIR OVER NATION'S ANTHEM

Not on Programme, Audience Wanted Muck to Play It

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 30.—Failure tonight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first of a series of Tuesday night concerts in Infantry Hall, despite the fact that several of the State's most prominent women and the chairman of the Rhode Island Liberty Loan Committee had requested it, has caused much adverse comment in this city. Dr. Muck stated tonight that he knew nothing of the request, and certainly had not refused to play the anthem.

NOT ON PROGRAMME

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, when interviewed at the close of the concert, admitted receiving the requests

Put Symphony's Refusal to Play National Anthem up to Federal Authorities

Department of Justice Agent Reports on Incident at Providence.

RECOMMENDS ORCHESTRA BE HELD TO ACCOUNT

A special report to Washington on the failure of Boston Symphony orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence last night, despite the request of responsible persons, was made today by Thomas Howick, Providence special agent of the department of justice.

He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited by the government from giving concerts anywhere unless the natnoial anthem is played at each.

Mr. Nowick was deluged with complaints from all parts of Rhode Island today because of the refusal of the orchestra officials to play the national air. A storm of protest has been aroused. It is expected patriotic societies all over Rhode Island will pass resolutions condemning the organization.

An effort to secure a statement today from Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and for many years the principal backer of the orchestra, had a negative result.

At the request of a reporter for the Traveler the matter was laid before Mr. Higginson. His secretary reported that the major did not care to make any statement. He was told that the Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad of the Park Street Church had declared publicly in this city last night that Symphony Hall is the only public hall in Boston where the Stars and Stripes are not displayed; that Dr. Karl Muck is decidedly pro-German and should not be permitted to earn a living under the Star Spangled Banner if he declines to lead the orchestra in playing it.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, turned down the request of Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the Rhode Island Liberty Loan committee, and eight prominent women that the national anthem be played. Mr. Ellis said the anthem was not on the program and as it is never interpolated in concerts given by the orchestra in Boston, he said, there was no reason why it should be done in Providence.

According to today's issue of the Providence Journal officials of the Symphony Orchestra expected trouble last night. Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston went to Providence because of that expecta-and explained the failure to comply with them by stating that the "Star Spangled Banner" was not on the programme; that the programme was made up entirely of classical pieces and that the "Star Spangled Banner" was never interpolated by the orchestra in Boston concerts, and that, consequently, there was no reason why it should be in Providence.

(Continued on Page Seven, Column 3.)

Post Oct 31, 1917

The request that Dr. Muck conduct his orchestra in the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" was made early today by eight of this State's leading women, officials of musical clubs of more than local importance, and by the chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island. The request of the women was made in a telegram sent to Mr. Ellis and which Mr. Ellis admitted tonight he had received. It read:

"The undersigned earnestly request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall."

Those who signed the telegram were: Mrs. Emma W. Childs, president of the Chopin Club; Mrs. Harold J. Gross, president of the Monday Morning Club; Mrs. George S. Matthews, vice-president of the MacDowell Club and chairman of the musical committee of the Rhode Island Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Mary S. Winsor, president of the Schubert Club; Miss Virginia Anderson, president of the Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs. George Hale, president of the Northeastern District, National Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs. James E. McConnell, president of the Chaminade Club, and Mrs. Gilbert C. Carpenter, vice-president of the same organization.

Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the State Liberty Loan committee, sent a wire similar to that of the women. Mr. Ellis admitted receiving it, but, in accordance with precedent, the anthem was not played.

Geraldine Farrar was the soloist of the evening.

There will be a different story on Saturday night, for Frieda Hempel who is to be the soloist, has been notified that she may not appear unless she gives an enthusiastic rendition of "The Star

Dr. Karl Muck

Major Higginson's Caution to Players

AN interesting sidelight on the controversy brought about by the failure of the Boston Symphony orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert in Providence last night is found in a newspaper article published soon after the world war got under way. It is stated that at the first rehearsal of the orchestra that season Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and principal benefactor of the orchestra, addressed the members of the organization, who represented all the warring nations of Europe, and "urged them to guard carefully against anything that might offend persons of nationalities other than their own."

[illegible] ent [illegible] ject [illegible] to what might happe[illegible] an American conductor in Berlin, supposing there was one there outside of a war prison or an internment camp; and he was desired to play "Deutschland über Alles"—and refused. Major Higginson draws a picture of a man in Germany who gets up and cheers the Kaiser; and thinks this so ostentatious that they would say, "Put that man into the guardhouse and watch him." But it is not difficult to imagine that an American in Germany (however difficult to imagine one at large at the present time in Germany) who refused to cheer the Kaiser or to sing or play "Deutschland über Alles" on occasions when it was expected and universally demanded, would not be likely to get so far as the guardhouse. It is one of the things we are proud of that America is not Germany, and that we do not act in the German way about everything.

***

But the national hymn ought to be played at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's series, as it was at the opening of the New York Symphony Orchestra's and the New York Philharmonic's series, and as it doubtless will be at the first night of the opera. Now was the one time of all others when it was highly advisable for both Dr. Muck and Major Higginson to waive their objections to the national anthem on the score of its musical imperfection and as an intruder in a strictly symphonic program. The national hymn takes only a very few minutes out of the evening. Its shortcomings as music do not infect or invalidate the rest of the program in the slightest degree, in the minds of an audience accustomed to hearing it as a prelude to any important undertaking of the spirit.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Major Higginson will have found any general demand in New York for the elimina-

YMPHONY DOES NOT PLAY U. S. ANTHEM

This Despite Request of Providence Women

But Hempel Wires She Will Sing the "Star Spangled Banner"

Special Dispatch to the Globe

PROVIDENCE, Oct 30—Although specially requested to do so in a telegram sent to C. A. Ellis in Boston early this morning by a number of prominent women of this city, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the first concert of the Ellis series, given in Infantry Hall tonight, did not play the "Star Spangled Banner."

The chairman of the Police Commission had previously announced that all musicians visiting this city must play the anthem, and no later than this afternoon the application of Mme Frieda Hempel to give a concert here next Sunday night was tabled, because it was believed she would not sing it. A telegram received from her tonight, however, stated that she would do so.

The matter of further licenses for the Boston Symphony to play here will come up before the commission tomorrow.

The telegram sent to Mr Ellis this morning was signed by the following: Mrs Emma Winslow Childs, president of the Chopin Club; Mrs Harold J. Gross, president of the Monday Morning Club; Mrs George S. Mathews, vice president of the MacDowell Club, and chairman of the musical committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Mary S. Winsor, president of the Shubert Club; Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, president of the Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs George Hail, president of the Northeastern District, National Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs James E. McConnell, president of the Chaminade Club; Mrs Gilbert C. Carpenter, vice president of the Chaminade Club, and Thomas H. West Jr, chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island.

The telegram read: "The undersigned request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall."

The concert given by the Boston musicians consisted of a program of Russian, Hungarian and German music. Miss Geraldine Farrar, the soloist, sang two Wagnerian selections, both in German.

Between 100 and 150 persons who tried to purchase tickets at the door were refused, although there were some vacant seats at the rear. The only comment Mr Ellis would make in regard to this was: "We have sold all the seats we care to sell."

Dr Carl Muck conducted the concert.

Dr A. Z. Conrad, a Boston minister, speaking at a Billy Sunday dinner here tonight, made a brief attack on the Boston Symphony. Referring to Dr Muck he said: "Any man who is content to live under the 'Star Spangled Banner' but will not play it should not be permitted to stay in this country and earn his living here. The only public hall in the city of Boston where the Stars and Stripes are not displayed is Symphony Hall."

As Mr Ellis stepped off the special symphony train at the Back Bay Station last night, he was asked if Dr Carl Muck had declined to lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence.

He replied: "He did not refuse to play it. He was not asked to play it. He knew nothing about the matter. I received several telegrams this morning from persons who were not subscribers, and who were not there this evening, but as they were not subscribers I paid no attention to them."

Globe Nov. 1, 1917.

Record Oct, 31, 1917.

Traveler, Oct, 31, 1917

Globe Oct, 31, 1917.

MAJ H. L. HIGGINSON DEFENDS SYMPHONY

Says National Anthem Has No Place in Art

When Dr Muck Goes, Orchestra Will Go Too, Founder Declares

Maj Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, expressed considerable indignation yesterday over anonymous communications he has received "making false accusations against members of the orchestra" and abusing Dr Karl Muck, the director, for failing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the weekly concerts.

"When a man or a woman—for many of them are women," said he, "sends an anonymous letter accusing some man, it is like sticking a dirk in a man's back. They have a notion they are going to test my loyalty.

"I'm under contract with these men, and owe them an obligation, knowing that they have no other way of supporting their families or of earning their living.

"For several decades I have given my time so that Boston might have this orchestra, but when Dr Muck goes, the orchestra will go, and Symphony Hall, which it costs me $13,000 to $18,000 a year to maintain, may be sold.

"Now as to 'The Star Spangled Banner,' why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. If it did it would be played. Last Summer during our Summer concerts with the two-thirds orchestra we played that and 'America' every night, and those who went there know it. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging—it was because our contracts have arranged for Dr Muck to conduct at the Winter concerts.

"Those were popular concerts. These are not—they are art concerts and 'The Star Spangled Banner' has no place at them.

They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play that anthem. Supposing you were in Germany and got up and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the guardhouse and watch him.'

"These people may think that playing the anthem will assist the spirit of patriotism.

"Now as to the members. I have received assurances from three sources of our Government that there are no imputations against any of our musicians. One high officer assured me that under no conditions should I dismiss the orchestra.

"I am under contract with public and musicians for concerts of a certain kind, arranged for long ago. I have never meddled with the art side. I owe the public something as to the kind of concerts and these men something as to employment. There is nothing against them now—they are earning their bread. If I dismiss them where have they to go? Straight to the enemy's camp and into mischief."

BOSTON ORCHESTRA MAY BE BARRED IN PROVIDENCE

PROVIDENCE, Oct 31—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for ignoring the request to play the "Star Spangled Banner" last night, can play here no more, it was strongly intimated by the Police Commission today. The request was made by representatives of 10 organizations.

The Rhode Island Council of Defense, at a meeting today, condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude," and requested the Police Commission to refuse further licenses for concerts during the war, "when conducted by Karl Muck."

Agent Howick of the Department of Justice said he would make a full report of the episode to Washington and recommend that further concerts by the organization anywhere in the United States be forbidden unless the National Anthem is made a part of each program.

The Police Commissioners, through Chairman Presbrey, announced today that it was too early to anticipate how they would act on Dr Muck's application for another concert.

"We have reason to believe," he said, "that there will be opposition to such a license, and if a petition, which we understand is being circulated, is presented to us protesting against such a license we will give it most serious consideration."

Commissioner McCaffrey said significantly: "And you might say that this board is made up of three full-fledged Americans."

Frieda Hempel, agreeing to sing the National anthem, was granted a concert license today.

ORCHESTRA DID NOT REFUSE TO PLAY ANTHEM

Star Spangled Banner Not Requested by Subscribers

Denial of the story that the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert last night in Providence was made this morning by C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who said that it is an attempt of some Providence people to "start trouble."

Mr. Ellis returned to Boston today. He said that he received a telegraphic request signed by a number of Providence women urging that the National Anthem be played at the concert. Mr. Ellis said that as none of the names signed to the telegram had subscribed to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, said he knew nothing of the request.

"During our Pop concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number, and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the number was not played.

"Dr. Muck knew nothing of the request and did not refuse to play the National Anthem. Our program was not at all Germanic, the first half of the program being Tschaikowsky's Symphony and the second part a mixture of numbers by French, Hungarian and German composers."

The request that Dr. Muck conduct his orchestra in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" was made early yesterday by eight prominent Rhode Island women officials of prominent musical clubs and by the

Post Oct, 31, 1917

STIR OVER NATION'S ANTHEM

Not on Programme, Audience Wanted Muck to Play It

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 30.—Failure tonight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first of a series of Tuesday night concerts in Infantry Hall, despite the fact that several of the State's most prominent women and the chairman of the Rhode Island Liberty Loan Committee had requested it, has caused much adverse comment in this city. Dr. Muck stated tonight that he knew nothing of the request, and certainly had not refused to play the anthem.

NOT ON PROGRAMME

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, when interviewed at the close of the concert, admitted receiving the requests

Put Symphony's Refusal to Play National Anthem up to Federal Authorities

Department of Justice Agent Reports on Incident at Providence.

RECOMMENDS ORCHESTRA BE HELD TO ACCOUNT

A special report to Washington on the failure of Boston Symphony orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence last night, despite the request of responsible persons, was made today by Thomas Howick, Providence special agent of the department of justice.

He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited by the government from giving concerts anywhere unless the natnoial anthem is played at each.

Mr. Nowick was deluged with complaints from all parts of Rhode Island today because of the refusal of the orchestra officials to play the national air. A storm of protest has been aroused. It is expected patriotic societies all over Rhode Island will pass resolutions condemning the organization.

An effort to secure a statement today from Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and for many years the principal backer of the orchestra, had a negative result.

At the request of a reporter for the Traveler the matter was laid before Mr. Higginson. His secretary reported that the major did not care to make any statement. He was told that the Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad of the Park Street Church had declared publicly in this city last night that Symphony Hall is the only public hall in Boston where the Stars and Stripes are not displayed; that Dr. Karl Muck is decidedly pro-German and should not be permitted to earn a living under the Star Spangled Banner if he declines to lead the orchestra in playing it.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, turned down the request of Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the Rhode Island Liberty Loan committee, and eight prominent women that the national anthem be played. Mr. Ellis said the anthem was not on the program and as it is never interpolated in concerts given by the orchestra in Boston, he said, there was no reason why it should be done in Providence.

According to today's issue of the Providence Journal officials of the Symphony Orchestra expected trouble last night. Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston went to Providence because of that expecta-and explained the failure to comply with them by stating that the "Star Spangled Banner" was not on the programme; that the programme was made up entirely of classical pieces and that the "Star Spangled Banner" was never interpolated by the orchestra in Boston concerts, and that, consequently, there was no reason why it should be in Providence.

(Continued on Page Seven, Column 3.)

Post Oct 31, 1917

The request that Dr. Muck conduct his orchestra in the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" was made early today by eight of this State's leading women, officials of musical clubs of more than local importance, and by the chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island. The request of the women was made in a telegram sent to Mr. Ellis and which Mr. Ellis admitted tonight he had received. It read:

"The undersigned earnestly request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall."

Those who signed the telegram were: Mrs. Emma W. Childs, president of the Chopin Club; Mrs. Harold J. Gross, president of the Monday Morning Club; Mrs. George S. Matthews, vice-president of the MacDowell Club and chairman of the musical committee of the Rhode Island Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Mary S. Winsor, president of the Schubert Club; Miss Virginia Anderson, president of the Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs. George Hale, president of the Northeastern District, National Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs. James E. McConnell, president of the Chaminade Club, and Mrs. Gilbert C. Carpenter, vice-president of the same organization.

Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the State Liberty Loan committee, sent a wire similar to that of the women. Mr. Ellis admitted receiving it, but, in accordance with precedent, the anthem was not played.

Geraldine Farrar was the soloist of the evening.

There will be a different story on Saturday night, for Frieda Hempel who is to be the soloist, has been notified that she may not appear unless she gives an enthusiastic rendition of "The Star

Dr. Karl Muck

Major Higginson's Caution to Players

AN interesting sidelight on the controversy brought about by the failure of the Boston Symphony orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert in Providence last night is found in a newspaper article published soon after the world war got under way. It is stated that at the first rehearsal of the orchestra that season Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and principal benefactor of the orchestra, addressed the members of the organization, who represented all the warring nations of Europe, and "urged them to guard carefully against anything that might offend persons of nationalities other than their own."

Something entirely [illegible] to what might happen to an American conductor in Berlin, supposing there was one there outside of a war prison or an internment camp; and he was desired to play "Deutschland über Alles"—and refused. Major Higginson draws a picture of a man in Germany who gets up and cheers the Kaiser; and thinks this so ostentatious that they would say, "Put that man into the guardhouse and watch him." But it is not difficult to imagine that an American in Germany (however difficult to imagine one at large at the present time in Germany) who refused to cheer the Kaiser or to sing or play "Deutschland über Alles" on occasions when it was expected and universally demanded, would not be likely to get so far as the guardhouse. It is one of the things we are proud of that America is not Germany, and that we do not act in the German way about everything.

***

But the national hymn ought to be played at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's series, as it was at the opening of the New York Symphony Orchestra's and the New York Philharmonic's series, and as it doubtless will be at the first night of the opera. Now was the one time of all others when it was highly advisable for both Dr. Muck and Major Higginson to waive their objections to the national anthem on the score of its musical imperfection and as an intruder in a strictly symphonic program. The national hymn takes only a very few minutes out of the evening. Its shortcomings as music do not infect or invalidate the rest of the program in the slightest degree, in the minds of an audience accustomed to hearing it as a prelude to any important undertaking of the spirit.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Major Higginson will have found any general demand in New York for the elimina-

YMPHONY DOES NOT PLAY U. S. ANTHEM

This Despite Request of Providence Women

But Hempel Wires She Will Sing the "Star Spangled Banner"

Special Dispatch to the Globe

PROVIDENCE, Oct 30—Although specially requested to do so in a telegram sent to C. A. Ellis in Boston early this morning by a number of prominent women of this city, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the first concert of the Ellis series, given in Infantry Hall tonight, did not play the "Star Spangled Banner."

The chairman of the Police Commission had previously announced that all musicians visiting this city must play the anthem, and no later than this afternoon the application of Mme Frieda Hempel to give a concert here next Sunday night was tabled, because it was believed she would not sing it. A telegram received from her tonight, however, stated that she would do so.

The matter of further licenses for the Boston Symphony to play here will come up before the commission tomorrow.

The telegram sent to Mr Ellis this morning was signed by the following: Mrs Emma Winslow Childs, president of the Chopin Club; Mrs Harold J. Gross, president of the Monday Morning Club; Mrs George S. Mathews, vice president of the MacDowell Club, and chairman of the musical committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Mary S. Winsor, president of the Shubert Club; Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, president of the Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Cluts; Mrs George Hail, president of the Northeastern District, National Federation of Musical Clubs; Mrs James E. McConnell, president of the Chaminade Club; Mrs Gilbert C. Carpenter, vice president of the Chaminade Club, and Thomas H. West Jr, chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island.

The telegram read: "The undersigned request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall."

The concert given by the Boston musicians consisted of a program of Russian, Hungarian and German music. Miss Geraldine Farrar, the soloist, sang two Wagnerian selections, both in German.

Between 100 and 150 persons who tried to purchase tickets at the door were refused, although there were some vacant seats at the rear. The only comment Mr Ellis would make in regard to this was: "We have sold all the seats we care to sell."

Dr Carl Muck conducted the concert.

Dr A. Z. Conrad, a Boston minister, speaking at a Billy Sunday dinner here tonight, made a brief attack on the Boston Symphony. Referring to Dr Muck he said: "Any man who is content to live under the 'Star Spangled Banner' but will not play it should not be permitted to stay in this country and earn his living here. The only public hall in the city of Boston where the Stars and Stripes are not displayed is Symphony Hall."

As Mr Ellis stepped off the special symphony train at the Back Bay Station last night, he was asked if Dr Carl Muck had declined to lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence.

He replied: "He did not refuse to play it. He was not asked to play it. He knew nothing about the matter. I received several telegrams this morning from persons who were not subscribers, and who were not there this evening, but as they were not subscribers I paid no attention to them."

29 Advertiser - Oct, 29, 1917.

FARRAR SINGS AT PENSION CONCERT

Orchestra Plays Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony and Wagner Numbers

WOMEN HEARERS KNIT AS MUSICIANS PLAY

By LOUIS C. ELSON

Program

Pathetic Symphony.....Tschaikowsky
"Elizabeth's Greeting to the Hall"..Wagner
Soloist, Geraldine Farrar
"Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal"..
..... Wagner
Songs with piano.
Mme. Farrar
Siegfried Funeral Music.....Wagner
Three Songs with Orchestra.....Wagner
Mme. Farrar

One does not seek for faults in a Symphony Pension Fund Concert, for it is almost as worthy a cause as buying a Liberty Bond. But if faults were sought, none could be found, with such an orchestra playing Wagner under the direction of Dr. Muck. But with one custom that is creeping into our orchestral concerts (especially the Friday afternoon ones) one may find decided fault. The overzealous and ultra-patriotic ladies are beginning to bring their knitting! They never ply their needles in time with the conductor, and one cannot help watching the play of their fingers to the detriment of the music. It is about as out of place to knit at a Symphony Concert as it was out of place for the Tricoteuses of the French Reign of Terror to knit around the guillotine. It is decidedly impolite to intrude this new feature upon an auditor who wishes to enjoy his music in tranquillity.

Tschaikowsky's symphonic tears do not wear quite as well as the grief of Brahms in his Requiem or of Beethoven in his Funeral March in the Eroica, but the tragic note is inspiring, and one is thankful that he did not become ugly in his lamentations, as many moderns do. The Pathetic symphony makes a direct appeal to everybody, and is never enigmatical. The 5-4 movement, with its amazing organ-point, is always attractive, and does not lose interest, neither does the third movement with its conflict of themes of grief and glory. It was read rather as a Tragic than a pathetic work, and received a thrilling performance.

We trust that it is not derogatory to say that we like Mme. Farrar better upon the operatic stage than upon the concert platform, for the delicate German Lieder and Russian and Norwegian songs, which she gave, are as out of place in Symphony Hall as an attempt to smell a violet at a 50-foot distance. We were glad to see one of Franz's songs upon the list. This most gentle master of delicate touches and beautiful melodies is being pushed aside and forgotten in "These most brisk and giddy-paced times,"

And one may thank Mme. Farrar for bringing him occasionally to the attention of the public. He is a Schubert plus great contrapuntal knowledge.

In the Wagner songs with orchestra Mme. Farrar was more in her proper element. Yet we do not think that the three songs of Wagner, under Wesendonchian inspiration, wear very well. "Traeume" is a love-song with the thermometer in the nineties. When Elena Gerhardt sang here last she gave the less known "Stehe Still," of this set of songs, and it is better than any of the three given yesterday afternoon, if only for a change.

Mme. Farrar sang her first number of the concert with superb effect, with breadth and dramatic power. "Thou Dearest Hall," with which the aria begins, is not an allusion to the coming Government tax on concert tickets, but a lofty greeting to the hall of the Minnesingers, and a great work altogether. It won tremendous applause.

The Wagner numbers by the orchestra were of course nobly read and played. A very large audience was in attendance and the pesion fund must derive some substantial pecuniary benefit from the occasion, for every available space in Symphony Hall was occupied.

American - Oct, 28, 1917

Music Season Is Opening Well, Despite War

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

So far as patronage is concerned, the music season of 1917-18 has started about the same as usual. It is evident that popular attractions will fare as well as ever, notwithstanding the war clouds.

This afternoon, for instance, the Symphony Orchestra pension fund concert will be given before a capacity audience. The seats were all gone a week ago. Miss Farrar is to make her only appearance of the season, having volunteered her services. Her name is still a power to conjure with in the musical world, particularly in Boston and in New York.

Another great attraction is the "Pathetic" symphony of Tschaikowsky, which the Symphony Orchestra has always played in prodigious style and which has consequently never failed to draw a crowd.

Two weeks ago John McCormack sang here to the biggest audience he ever faced in Boston. This was another striking proof of the enthusiasm of the musical public, even when war taxes and Liberty Loans and the high cost of living in general are making an extraordinary drain on purses. The Symphony matinees are seemingly as popular as ever and the audiences seen at Symphony Hall on Saturday nights are almost, if not quite, as large as they have been ever since the orchestra was moved uptown.

Kreisler played to a full house a week ago and will undoubtedly fare fully as well when he returns next month. It is the same with the brilliant Galli-Curci, and Paderewski is assured of throngs if he finds time to appear here in recital.

Popularity—that is the question. That will be the deciding factor this season, as in previous seasons. Strong offerings will lose little if any of their drawing power because of the world war—at least, not in the immediate future.

* * *

Yvette Guilbert announces that she will give during this season one recital in Boston which will take place at Jordan Hall on the evening of Wednesday, November 14, when she will present a new repertory. Mme. Guilbert has written a letter to Boston expressing her love for France and her joy in interpreting its song.

"I am her modern troubadour," she declares. "I will sing of her heroic epochs, of her love of God, her knights and her crusades, the ancestral legends of her beloved cottage hearths, the refrains of our good old Normans, the roundelays, the dances, the Vaux de Vire, the pagan songs of our Bretons. France has a magnificent garden of songs which no war in the world can ever destroy.

* * *

Next Tuesday afternoon Steinert Hall will witness the first appearance this season of Heinrich Gebhard, the well-known pianist, of this city. His program, as ever, is interesting, and will include the French Suite in E major by Bach; Cloches, a trayers les feuilles, Poissons d'or, General Lavine, La Terasse des audiences de clair de lune, and Jardins sous la pluie, by Debussy; "Prelude, Aria et Final," by Cesar Franck; Waltz Op. 42, and Impromptu in F Sharp by Chopin, "Dance Characteristique," by Tschaikowsky, and Verdi-Liszt's "Rigolette-Fantasy."

* * *

The general subscription sale of seats for the three choral concerts to be given in Symphony Hall this Winter under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, will open at the box office of Symphony Hall next Wednesday morning, October 31. In the meantime mail orders are being received.

These three concerts make quite the most important departure in the work of the Symphony Orchestra in many years. Mr. Stephen Townsend has organized and is now training a chorus of three hundred and fifty specially chosen singers.

The first concert will be given Tuesday evening, November 20, and the principal work will be Beethoven's Ninth Choral Symphony, which will enlist the entire orchestra, the entire chorus, and the soloists will be Friede Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

* * *

Of all the younger singers who appeared here in the Spring of 1916 with the Metropolitan Opera company none made so deep an impression on lovers of good singing as Mabel Garrison. Miss Garrison, in a few years, has made her way to the foremost rank of concert singers, while at the same time she holds a very important place in the Metropolitan Opera company.

Another young singer who has appeared here in concert and whose future is assured is Sophie Braslau, the contralto. Miss Breslau belongs to that rapidly disappearing race, the true contralto. Hers is a voice of very musical beauty, and she has not yet at least attempted to force it upward for dramatic parts.

Another singer who at his first appearances here made a profound impression is Arthur Middleton, bass. It was Toscanini who made the statement that Middleton had the finest basso cantante he had ever heard.

These three singers are to appear in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, November 4, at 3:30. They will sing groups of songs and various excerpts from operas. The program will be announced in a few days.

S

Transcript Oct, 31, 1917-

RESOLUTIONS CONDEMN DR. MUCK AND SYMPHONY

RHODE ISLAND COUNCIL OF DEFENCE RESENTS REPORTED REFUSAL TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM—WANTS MUCK BARRED AS CONDUCTOR

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defence. The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the Department of Justice would make a detailed report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its programme.

American Oct, 29, 1917

Geraldine Farrar Pleases Audience at Pension Concert

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Geraldine Farrar's appearance as soloist lent unusual interest to the pension fund concert given yesterday by the Symphony Orchestra. It was announced as her only appearance in Boston this season. This was enough to draw out her admirers.

They gave her a warm greeting, gasped for a moment at the wondrous, silver-embroidered green gown she wore, commented on her radiant beauty and so-glad-to-be-with-you-again manner, and took great pleasure in everything she sang.

Her efforts in the main were delightful. The second act of "Tannhaeuser" was truly joyous, tenderly eloquent, and not a mechanical exhibition of voice and stage deportment. In spite of the fact that it betrayed her weak high tones, she sang the aria beautifully, as only an imaginative artist could do.

She was happier still in the three Wagner songs she sang with the orchestra, "Im Treibhous," "Schemerzen" and Traeume," and in the little songs with piano accompaniment, played by Richard Epstein. She is a gifted interpreter of the lyric muse, and proved it once more.

The "sold-out" house was also attracted by the extraordinary orchestral program, which included Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony, the "Good Friday Magic," from "Parsifal," and the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods," selections all performed in superlatively fine fashion. Dr. Muck and his men made it a performance that would have taken Petrograd and Bayreuth by storm.

Herald Oct, 29, 1917.

SYMPHONY AIDS PENSION FUND

Geraldine Farrar, Soloist of the Concert, Idol of the Big Audience.

PROGRAM IS LUGUBRIOUS

At the first concert for the season of the Symphony orchestra in aid of its pension fund given in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon, Geraldine Farrar was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Symphony in E minor, No. 6, "Pathetic," Tschaikowsky; Aria, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhaeuser," act II., Wagner; Good Friday Magic from "Parsifal," Wagner; Songs, with piano, "Stille Sicherheit," Franz; "Volksliedchen," Schumann; "Sternlein," Moussorgsky; "Erstes Begegnen," Grieg; "Schneeglockchen," Gretschaninov; Funeral Music from "Dusk of the Gods," Wagner; "Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen," "Traume," Wagner.

This concert was announced as the only appearance of Miss Farrar in Boston this year, so her admirers were out in full force. The hall was filled. The audience gave Dr. Muck and the Symphony players hearty greeting and applauded their numbers with vigor, but it seemed determined to make the occasion one of personal triumph for Miss Farrar and fairly showered her with the tribute of acclaim. Repetition of each of her numbers was insistently demanded, but, as Symphony rules forbade this, she could only acknowledge the calls with abundant repetition of her customary bows.

Program of Solemnity.

Her singing differed in no marked degree from its usual characteristics and that it mightily pleased her hearers was evident, though there were those present who wished that she had chosen a few lighter songs for some of her numbers. For with the exception of the Tannhaeuser aria and Schumann's "In My Garden in Hat So Green" her songs were heavy, even doleful. Her costume, as usual, what there was of it, deserved description, but this is not the place for it.

If Miss Farrar's selections might be om TRIBUNE

ldress: Providence, R. I.

te 4 1917

Providence is showing very practical appreciation of the series of subscription concerts which C. E. Ellis has announced for Infantry Hall this coming winter. The general public sale which has been in progress since last Monday has assumed most gratifying dimensions. Undoubtedly the moderate scale of subscription prices for these concerts has proved most attractive, for it would be difficult to find anywhere five concerts of such quality given by such artists, to say nothing of the three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so cheaply as Mr. Ellis is offering these to Providence.

As already announced, the concerts, five in number, will be given in Infantry Hall and the dates are October 30, December 18, January 15, February 12 and March 19. The first will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Geraldine Farrar as soloist. Miss Farrar has only two appearance in concert with the Orchestra this year, this one in Providence and one in Boston the preceding Sunday for the benefit of the pension fund of the orchestra. The second concert brings a violin recital by Fritz Kreisler, which will be followed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Rosamund Young, soprano, as soloist. Madame Louise Homer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch give the fourth concert, and the season will end with the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Anton Witek as soloist.

[illegible] concert under the auspices of

- Transcript, Oct, 24, 1917 -

CONCERT CALENDAR

Dr. Muck's First Choral Concert with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony——Mme. Guilbert Once Only—Mr. Elman and Mr. Kreisler for Violinists—The Return of "The Flonzaleys"—Mr. Grainger, Mr. Levitzky, Mr. Copeland and Other Pianists—Mr. Fox's Notable Programme

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces for single and united voices by three of the younger singers of the Metropolitan Opera House, viz.: Miss Garrison, whose voice, skill, animation and charm commended her when she last sang with the company; Miss Braslau, opulent of voice and feeling, and Mr. Middleton, sonorous bass.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 8, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Miss Margaret Nikoloric, pianist of Balkan blood and Viennese training.

Thursday evening, Nov. 8, in Jordan Hall, a concert of songs by Miss Rosamond Young, a youthful and promising soprano of this town.

Thursday evening, Nov. 8, in Tremont Temple, the first in the annual course of concerts there, with John Finnegan, tenor; Marie O'Connell, soprano; and Rae Kilmer, harpist sharing in it. The proceeds will go to the 101st Regiment, U. S. A., composed of units from the militia of Massachusetts.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 10, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mischa Levitzki, born and practised pianist, as he seemed at his début last year by grace of technical skill, clear and individual grasp upon his music and warm yet poised temperament.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Elman, the notable violinist of opulent technique, breadth and warmth of tone, propulsive power and songfully sentimental feeling.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 13, in Symphony Hall, a concert open to the public as well as to subscribers, by the excellent men's choir of the Apollo Club, under the able Mr. Mollenhauer and with Miss Stoddart, soprano, and Mr. Alberini, baritone, for "assisting artists." Light part-songs, graver numbers, war-time pieces and operatic airs fill the programme.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, in Jordan Hall, Mme. Yvette Guilbert for her only appearance in Boston this season, in familiar and unfamiliar pieces from her stores of centuries of French song—all transmitted to her hearers through her inexhaustible ability for characterization in tones and impression.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 15, in Jordan Hall, a concert of novel music, for the most part, ultra-modern, by Félix Fox, pianist, and Emil Férir, first viola-player of the Symphony Orchestra. They will be heard together in a piece by the English composer, Bridge. Other numbers by Blanchet, Aubert, Sévérac, Fauré and Skriabin stand on the programme.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the second of the annual series of concerts by the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Roland Hayes, the admirable colored tenor, assisted by Mr. H. T. Burleigh, the notable colored composer. Mr. Hayes will be heard in operatic numbers, songs by Strauss, Duparc and other composers, and in "Negro Spirituals," to which Mr. Burleigh will play the piano part.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the admired pianist and composer and Mrs. Lafayette Goodbar, soprano at which the singer will be heard in sundry recently written songs of the composer.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 16, in Symphony Hall, the fifth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Moses Boguslawski, Russian pianist, well received at his first appearance in Boston last winter. This time he will play a resurrected sonata from Weber; Schumann's "Scenes from Childhood"; Liszt's six Caprices after Paganini and short pieces by Schubert, Chopin and other hands.

Saturday evening, Nov. 17, in Symphony Hall, the fifth of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Kreisler, most sought among the violinists of this day and deservedly, for personality and poise, skill and sensibility, tone, taste and style.

Monday evening, Nov. 19, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Percy Grainger for the profit of the Boston Chapter of the Red Cross. In the uniform of a bandsman of the Coast Artillery, he will not be the less a pianist of lively and individual feeling for his music, no little zest of rhythm and a spirited invention of his own. Besides, he is a personality that many watch with pleasure.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, in Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts in which a chorus of large dimensions and assiduous training will join forces with the Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck. At it, for the first time in America, he will conduct a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, unheard in Boston for six years. Miss Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House; Miss Keyes, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Middleton form the solo quartet.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 21, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Copeland, the familiar pianist, whose skill, taste, sensibility, command of tonal color and quest of novel pieces annually commend him. The Parisians and the Spaniards of the present day will not be lacking on his programme.

Thursday evening, Nov. 22, in Jordan Hall, the first of the annual series of chamber concerts by the Flonzaley Quartet—this season with a new viola-player—long established with this public by the beauty of fused or parted tone, sensibility to instrumental song, perfection in ensemble and warm but discriminating sense of style.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 23, in Symphony Hall, the sixth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 24, in Jordan Hall, a concert of operatic pieces and songs by Mrs. Helen Allen Hunt, long familiar and sought as a resident singer of voice and skill.

Saturday evening, Nov. 24, in Symphony Hall, the sixth of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

American, Nov. 1, 1917

WILL NOT PLAY ANTHEM IN N. Y., SAYS MUCK

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week.

In his statement Dr. Muck made the following remark:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Dispatches from Providence, where failure of the orchestra to play the national air last Tuesday night gave rise to the present discord, said today that the Rhode Island Council of Defence had asked the Providence Police Commission to "refuse permits for further concerts during the war when conducted by Karl Muck."

The Council condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude."

WILL INSIST ON ANTHEM.

The Providence Art Club has resolved that the orchestra "would better not appear" in Providence until the orchestra and its leader "prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for."

Special Agent Howick of the Department of Justice declared he would make full report of the Providence matter, recommending that further concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra be barred in Washington unless "The Star Spangled Banner" is made part of each program.

Now a Manhattan angle to the issue develops. The Philharmonic Orchestra of New York, Joseph Stransky conductor, and the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damroch conductor, began their Manhattan seasons with "The Star Spangled Banner."

A letter written by a woman and published in a New York newspaper, says:

"No doubt the Boston orchestra is as loyal as our musicians, but it is persistently said that Dr. Muck refuses to conduct the national anthem. That sort of a thing may be accepted without question in other places, but not in New York."

Dr. Muck was shown this letter today. He said:

SAYS ART COMES FIRST.

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts. I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be, as it has always been, to give the music-loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American

Monitor Oct, 29, 1917

MUSIC

Pension Fund Concert

First Pension Fund Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Karl Muck conducting and with Mme. Geraldine Farrar, soprano, assisting; afternoon of Oct. 28. The orchestra played the following selections: Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6 ("Pathetic"); Wagner, Good Friday music from "Parsifal" and funeral music from "Götterdämmerung." The soprano sang Wagnerian selections with orchestra, as follows: "Dich theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser;" songs, "Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen" and "Träume." She sang songs with piano, Richard Epstein playing the accompaniments, as follows: "Stille Sicherheit," Franz; "Volksliedchen," Schumann; "Sternlein," Moussorgsky; "Erstes Begegnen," Grieg; "Schneeglöckchen," Gretschaninoff.

The "Pathetic" symphony of Tschaikowsky and a Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seem to go hand in hand most of the time; nevertheless, this ever-popular symphony loses none of its charm with the concert-going public, as was strongly evidenced by the lively appreciation manifested by the audience at Sunday's concert. With an organization like the Boston Symphony, having numerous performances of this particular symphony to its credit, one might almost be inclined to believe, after hearing yesterday's performance, that in this case "familiarity breeds contempt"; not that the symphony was played indifferently, but rather that Dr. Muck's interpretation was of a more or less perfunctory character. A side-step from the beaten track of traditional rendition of any musical composition is always welcome and refreshing, and one cannot help but call to mind, in connection with this same symphony, the visit, a few years ago of Arthur Nikisch with the London Symphony Orchestra, when on that occasion he dared to establish, for the time being at least, his own "tradition" with the "Pathetic," startling the pedants perhaps, but winning an artistic triumph, just the same.

In the Good Friday music from "Parsifal," the orchestra attained its highest artistic mood, and in the funeral music from "Götterdämmerung" one's admiration for Wagner as a master of orchestration was quickened when listening to the maximum of sonority reached in the tone mass of this piece.

Mme. Farrar's art, while elusive and disappointing at times, is sufficiently interesting in some respects to keep an audience enthusiastic to the last. Just how much of this is attributable to histrionic ability or to vocal attainment, it might be difficult to say. Her work, however, from a purely vocal standpoint, would seem to lack virility, falling short in actual tonal capacity and resonance, especially noticeable in the aria and songs with orchestra. Mme. Farrar knows how to interpret and there is unmistakable finesse to all her efforts.

Richard Epstein provided the piano accompaniments to the five songs most artistically.

Herald Oct, 2, 1917

30

WAR TAX NOW IMPOSED ON SYMPHONY RUSH SEATS

As is generally understood, the patrons of the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts will, beginning with the concert this afternoon, have to pay the war tax on their admission to the hall. As the tax demands one cent in every 10 cents, there will be on every admission to the second balcony a tax of three cents. Thus the total cost for the second balcony of the Symphony concerts beginning this afternoon will be 28 cents. It is a difficult sum to handle, but arrangements have been made at Symphony Hall to expedite matters as much as possible. It will help greatly, however, if those intending to come to the concert bring with them the three cents in change.

From EVENING POST

Address: New York City

Date

Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE home season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened with its first pair of concerts on October 12 and 13. The beginning of a new season finds the prestige of this great organization undiminished. There is the usual story to tell of the New York concerts. For both series, 88 the evenings and the afternoons, Carnegie Hall is entirely sold out for the season, and there are several hundred disappointed music-lovers who were unable to secure accommodations. The opening pair of concerts will be given in the first week of November, Thursday evening, November 8, and Saturday afternoon, November 10.

Traveler Oct, 29, 1917

Geraldine Catches Eye in Sunday Concert

Daring Gown Shares Interest with Voice—All Songs In German.

Mme. Geraldine Farrar-Tellegen in an amazingly daring gown sang nine songs in German at the Symphony Orchestra's pension fund concert yesterday afternoon. Not one song in English, French or Italian was on the program for her only Boston appearance this season.

Two numbers of the program were airy folk songs, but the others were doleful to correspond with the dirge-like affairs that formed the orchestra's part of the entertainment.

The sombreness of the musical part of the program, however, was more than offset by madame's raiment. She surprised the audience at first by entering the opposite door from Dr. Karl Muck, and it was not until she turned to bow to the orchestra that the full effect was realized. It is reported that the current style in stage disarray is to reveal a shapely back rather than contour of limb. If this be true the madame is surely in the front rank in following the dictates of fashion. Any one from Melrose who believed that Geraldine had only a voice was disillusioned. She has a back. The whole of it was on view, and instead of encores madame came forth again and again to bow. She walked to the door with back to the audience. She tried to back out once, but her long train caused her to stumble on a projecting piece of the orchestra's platform.

The gown was of green and there was a large gift of roses to furnish a greater contrast. It was of the orthodox depth in front, which was considerable and which emphasized the still greater depth elsewhere. The skirt just swept the ground, undoubtedly because that is the style and not because the charms concealed were not in keeping with those revealed.

Far be it from us to urge a boycott of German music, but just why an American singer who is adept in English songs as well as the feature arias of the operas of our allies, France and Italy, should give us an all-German program when her country is at war with Germany isn't clear. She was trained in Germany and was a favorite of royalty there. Was the madame desiring to flaunt sympathy with Germany at the home town folks the only time they will hear her in the first year of our war with Germany?

- Transcript, Oct, 27, 1917 -

Monitor
Oct, 29, 1917

Herald
Oct, 2, 1917

38

CONCERT CALENDAR

Dr. Muck's First Choral Concert with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony——Mme. Guilbert Once Only—Mr. Elman and Mr. Kreisler for Violinists—The Return of "The Flonzaleys"—Mr. Grainger, Mr. Levitzky, Mr. Copeland and Other Pianists—Mr. Fox's Notable Programme

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces for single and united voices by three of the younger singers of the Metropolitan Opera House, viz.: Miss Garrison, whose voice, skill, animation and charm commended her when she last sang with the company; Miss Braslau, opulent of voice and feeling, and Mr. Middleton, sonorous bass.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 8, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Miss Margaret Nikoloric, pianist of Balkan blood and Viennese training.

Thursday evening, Nov. 8, in Jordan Hall, a concert of songs by Miss Rosamond Young, a youthful and promising soprano of this town.

Thursday evening, Nov. 8, in Tremont Temple, the first in the annual course of concerts there, with John Finnegan, tenor; Marie O'Connell, soprano; and Rae Kilmer, harpist sharing in it. The proceeds will go to the 101st Regiment, U. S. A., composed of units from the militia of Massachusetts.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 10, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mischa Levitzki, born and practised pianist, as he seemed at his début last year by grace of technical skill, clear and individual grasp upon his music and warm yet poised temperament.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Elman, the notable violinist of opulent technique, breadth and warmth of tone, propulsive power and songfully sentimental feeling.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 13, in Symphony Hall, a concert open to the public as well as to subscribers, by the excellent men's choir of the Apollo Club, under the able Mr. Mollenhauer and with Miss Stoddart, soprano, and Mr. Alberini, baritone, for "assisting artists." Light part-songs, graver numbers, war-time pieces and operatic airs fill the programme.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, in Jordan Hall, Mme. Yvette Guilbert for her only appearance in Boston this season, in familiar and unfamiliar pieces from her stores of centuries of French song—all transmitted to her hearers through her inexhaustible ability for characterization in tones and impression.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 15, in Jordan Hall, a concert of novel music, for the most part, ultra-modern, by Félix Fox, pianist, and Emil Férir, first viola-player of the Symphony Orchestra. They will be heard together in a piece by the English composer, Bridge. Other numbers by Blanchet, Aubert, Sévérac, Fauré and Skriabin stand on the programme.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the second of the annual series of concerts by the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Roland Hayes, the admirable colored tenor, assisted by Mr. H. T. Burleigh, the notable colored composer. Mr. Hayes will be heard in operatic numbers, songs by Strauss, Duparc and other composers, and in "Negro Spirituals," to which Mr. Burleigh will play the piano part.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the admired pianist and composer and Mrs. Lafayette Goodbar, soprano at which the singer will be heard in sundry recently written songs of the composer.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 16, in Symphony Hall, the fifth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Moses Boguslawski, Russian pianist, well received at his first appearance in Boston last winter. This time he will play a resurrected sonata from Weber; Schumann's "Scenes from Childhood"; Liszt's six Caprices after Paganini and short pieces by Schubert, Chopin and other hands.

Saturday evening, Nov. 17, in Symphony Hall, the fifth of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Kreisler, most sought among the violinists of this day and deservedly, for personality and poise, skill and sensibility, tone, taste and style.

Monday evening, Nov. 19, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Percy Grainger for the profit of the Boston Chapter of the Red Cross. In the uniform of a bandsman of the Coast Artillery, he will not be the less a pianist of lively and individual feeling for his music, no little zest of rhythm and a spirited invention of his own. Besides, he is a personality that many watch with pleasure.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, in Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts in which a chorus of large dimensions and assiduous training will join forces with the Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck. At it, for the first time in America, he will conduct a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, unheard in Boston for six years. Miss Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House; Miss Keyes, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Middleton form the solo quartet.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 21, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mr. Copeland, the familiar pianist, whose skill, taste, sensibility, command of tonal color and quest of novel pieces annually commend him. The Parisians and the Spaniards of the present day will not be lacking on his programme.

Thursday evening, Nov. 22, in Jordan Hall, the first of the annual series of chamber concerts by the Flonzaley Quartet—this season with a new viola-player—long established with this public by the beauty of fused or parted tone, sensibility to instrumental song, perfection in ensemble and warm but discriminating sense of style.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 23, in Symphony Hall, the sixth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 24, in Jordan Hall, a concert of operatic pieces and songs by Mrs. Helen Allen Hunt, long familiar and sought as a resident singer of voice and skill.

Saturday evening, Nov. 24, in Symphony Hall, the sixth of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

American, Nov. 1, 1917

WILL NOT PLAY ANTHEM IN N. Y., SAYS MUCK

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week.

In his statement Dr. Muck made the following remark:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Dispatches from Providence, where failure of the orchestra to play the national air last Tuesday night gave rise to the present discord, said today that the Rhode Island Council of Defence had asked the Providence Police Commission to "refuse permits for further concerts during the war when conducted by Karl Muck."

The Council condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude."

WILL INSIST ON ANTHEM.

The Providence Art Club has resolved that the orchestra "would better not appear" in Providence until the orchestra and its leader "prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for."

Special Agent Howick of the Department of Justice declared he would make full report of the Providence matter, recommending that further concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra be barred in Washington unless "The Star Spangled Banner" is made part of each program.

Now a Manhattan angle to the issue develops. The Philharmonic Orchestra of New York, Joseph Stransky conductor, and the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damroch conductor, began their Manhattan seasons with "The Star Spangled Banner."

A letter written by a woman and published in a New York newspaper, says:

"No doubt the Boston orchestra is as loyal as our musicians, but it is persistently said that Dr. Muck refuses to conduct the national anthem. That sort of a thing may be accepted without question in other places, but not in New York."

Dr. Muck was shown this letter today. He said:

SAYS ART COMES FIRST.

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts. I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be, as it has always been, to give the music-loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American

MUSIC

Pension Fund Concert

First Pension Fund Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Karl Muck conducting and with Mme. Geraldine Farrar, soprano, assisting; afternoon of Oct. 28. The orchestra played the following selections: Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6 ("Pathetic"); Wagner, Good Friday music from "Parsifal" and funeral music from "Götterdämmerung." The soprano sang Wagnerian selections with orchestra, as follows: "Dich theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser;" songs, "Im Treibhaus," "Schmerzen" and "Träume." She sang songs with piano, Richard Epstein playing the accompaniments, as follows: "Stille Sicherheit," Franz; "Volksliedchen," Schumann; "Sternlein," Moussorgsky; "Erstes Begegnen," Grieg; "Schneeglöckchen," Gretschaninoff.

The "Pathetic" symphony of Tschaikowsky and a Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seem to go hand in hand most of the time; nevertheless, this ever-popular symphony loses none of its charm with the concert-going public, as was strongly evidenced by the lively appreciation manifested by the audience at Sunday's concert. With an organization like the Boston Symphony, having numerous performances of this particular symphony to its credit, one might almost be inclined to believe, after hearing yesterday's performance, that in this case "familiarity breeds contempt"; not that the symphony was played indifferently, but rather that Dr. Muck's interpretation was of a more or less perfunctory character. A side-step from the beaten track of traditional rendition of any musical composition is always welcome and refreshing, and one cannot help but call to mind, in connection with this same symphony, the visit, a few years ago of Arthur Nikisch with the London Symphony Orchestra, when on that occasion he dared to establish, for the time being at least, his own "tradition" with the "Pathetic," startling the pedants perhaps, but winning an artistic triumph, just the same.

In the Good Friday music from "Parsifal," the orchestra attained its highest artistic mood, and in the funeral music from "Götterdämmerung" one's admiration for Wagner as a master of orchestration was quickened when listening to the maximum of sonority reached in the tone mass of this piece.

Mme. Farrar's art, while elusive and disappointing at times, is sufficiently interesting in some respects to keep an audience enthusiastic to the last. Just how much of this is attributable to histrionic ability or to vocal attainment, it might be difficult to say. Her work, however, from a purely vocal standpoint, would seem to lack virility, falling short in actual tonal capacity and resonance, especially noticeable in the aria and songs with orchestra. Mme. Farrar knows how to interpret and there is unmistakable finesse to all her efforts.

Richard Epstein provided the piano accompaniments to the five songs most artistically.

WAR TAX NOW IMPOSED ON SYMPHONY RUSH SEATS

As is generally understood, the patrons of the Friday afternoon Symphony concerts will, beginning with the concert this afternoon, have to pay the war tax on their admission to the hall. As the tax demands one cent in every 10 cents, there will be on every admission to the second balcony a tax of three cents. Thus the total cost for the second balcony of the Symphony concerts beginning this afternoon will be 28 cents. It is a difficult sum to handle, but arrangements have been made at Symphony Hall to expedite matters as much as possible. It will help greatly, however, if those intending to come to the concert bring with them the three cents in change.

From EVENING POST
Address: New York City

Date .....

Boston Symphony Orchestra

THE home season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened with its first pair of concerts on October 12 and 13. The beginning of a new season finds the prestige of this great organization undiminished. There is the usual story to tell of the New York concerts. For both series, 88

the evenings and the afternoons, Carnegie Hall is entirely sold out for the season, and there are several hundred disappointed music-lovers who were unable to secure accommodations. The opening pair of concerts will be given in the first week of November, Thursday evening, November 8, and Saturday afternoon, November 10.

Traveler Oct, 29, 1917

Geraldine Catches Eye in Sunday Concert

Daring Gown Shares Interest with Voice—All Songs In German.

Mme. Geraldine Farrar-Tellegen in an amazingly daring gown sang nine songs in German at the Symphony Orchestra's pension fund concert yesterday afternoon. Not one song in English, French or Italian was on the program for her only Boston appearance this season.

Two numbers of the program were airy folk songs, but the others were doleful to correspond with the dirge-like affairs that formed the orchestra's part of the entertainment.

The sombreness of the musical part of the program, however, was more than offset by madame's raiment. She surprised the audience at first by entering the opposite door from Dr. Karl Muck, and it was not until she turned to bow to the orchestra that the full effect was realized. It is reported that the current style in stage disarray is to reveal a shapely back rather than contour of limb. If this be true the madame is surely in the front rank in following the dictates of fashion. Any one from Melrose who believed that Geraldine had only a voice was disillusioned. She has a back. The whole of it was on view, and instead of encores madame came forth again and again to bow. She walked to the door with back to the audience. She tried to back out once, but her long train caused her to stumble on a projecting piece of the orchestra's platform.

The gown was of green and there was a large gift of roses to furnish a greater contrast. It was of the orthodox depth in front, which was considerable and which emphasized the still greater depth elsewhere. The skirt just swept the ground, undoubtedly because that is the style and not because the charms concealed were not in keeping with those revealed.

Far be it from us to urge a boycott of German music, but just why an American singer who is adept in English songs as well as the feature arias of the operas of our allies, France and Italy, should give us an all-German program when her country is at war with Germany isn't clear. She was trained in Germany and was a favorite of royalty there. Was the madame desiring to flaunt sympathy with Germany at the home town folks the only time they will hear her in the first year of our war with Germany?

Herald, Oct, 28, 1917

CONCERTS THIS WEEK

This (Sunday) afternoon will bring the first concert of the season in aid of the Pension Fund of the Symphony Orchestra. Miss Geraldine Farrar is giving her services. She will sing Elizabeth's entrance aria from the second act of "Tannhauser," a group of songs with piano by Franz, Schumann, Moussorgsky, Grieg and Gretschaninov, and three of the songs with orchestra, the poems of which were written by Mathilde Wesendonck and the music by Richard Wagner.

The symphony will be the "Pathetic" of Tschaikowsky and the other orchestral numbers will be the Good Friday magic from "Parsifal" and the funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods." The programme in its entirety and proper order is as follows:

Symphony in E minor, No. 6, "Pathetic" ..... Tschaikowsky
Adagio; allegro non troppo; allegro con grazia; allegro molto vivace; finale, adagio lamentoso.
Aria, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhauser," Act II. ..... Wagner
Good Friday Magic from "Parsifal" .. Wagner
Songs with piano:
"Stille Sicherheit" ..... Franz
"Volksliedchen" ..... Schumann
"Sternlein" ..... Moussorgsky
"Erstes Begegnen" ..... Grieg
"Schneeglockchen" ..... Gretschaninov
Funeral music from "Dusk of the Gods" ..... Wagner
Three songs with orchestra ..... Wagner
(a) "Im Treibhaus." (b) "Schmerzen." (c) "Traume."

Next Tuesday afternoon in Steinert Hall a recital will be given by Heinrich Gebhard, the well-known pianist of this city. His programme will include the French suite in E major by Bach; "Cloches a travers les feuilles," "poissons d'Or," "General Lavine," "La Terasse des audiences de clair de lune" and "Jardins sous la pluie," Debussy; prelude, "Aria et Final," Cesar Franck; waltz op. 42, and impromptu in F sharp by Chopin, "Danse Characteristique," Tschaikowsky; and Verdi-Liszt's "Rigoletto" fantasy.

Reginald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a song recital next Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, in Jordan Hall. The programme:

Sen corre l'agnelletta ..... Domenico Sari (1678-1740)
Dah pin a me non v'ascordete ..... Giovanni Maria Bouoncini (1640-1703)
Che fiero costume ..... Giovanni Legranzi (1625-1690)
Du bist die Ruh' ..... Schubert
Der Doppelganger ..... Schubert
An den Sonnenschein ..... Schumann
Liebesgluck ..... Wolf
Pauvre martyr obscur ("Patrie") ..... E. Paladilhe
Le Manoir de Rosemonde ..... Henri Duparc
Chanson ..... Georges Taconet
Marins d'Islande ..... Felix Fourdrain
Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes ..... Bainbridge Crist
1—Lady Bug. 2—Baby Is Sleeping. 3—What the Old Cow Said. 4—The Mouse. 5—Of What Use Is a Girl? 6—Pat-a-Cake. 7—The Old Woman.
A Song of France ..... Bryceson Treharne
The Nightingale and I ..... Carl Engel
Thus Wisdom Sings ..... Edward Horsman
A Home ..... Gustave Ferrari
Arab Love Song ..... Gustave Ferrari

Frances Nash, pianist, will be soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts of Friday afternoon, Nov. 2, and Saturday evening, Nov. 3. Miss Nash will play Saint-Saens' concerto for piano and orchestra in G minor, No. 2.

Dr. Muck has demonstrated in the past his very decided admiration for the work of the Finnish composer, Sibelius. The Sibelius cult will rejoice exceedingly that they are to have another oportunity to hear the fourth symphony, which Dr. Muck played last in November, 1914. The programme as it stands is Sibelius' fourth symphony in A minor, Saint-Saens' concerto for piano and orchestra in G minor and Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, with Miss Frances Nash as soloist. The length of the programme is one hour and 45 minutes.

Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinist, will give a recital in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon, Nov. 3. The programme is as follows:

Sonata ..... Cesar Franck
Allegro ben moderato; allegro; recitative—fantasia; allegretto poco mosso.
Chaconne ..... Bach
(Unaccompanied.)
Symphony Espagnole ..... Lalo
Allegro non troppo; andante; rondo.
Gavotte ..... Tor Aulin
Humoresque ..... Tor Aulin
Berceuse ..... Tor Aulin
Impromptu ..... Tor Aulin

American - Nov. 3, 1917-

MUCK MUST PLAY ANTHEM IN N. Y.

New York, Nov. 3.—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star Spangled Banner," has been taken at the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to the word from Boston of Muck's resignation.

The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation, and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

Transcript, Oct, 27, 1917

AROUND CONCERT HALLS

MISS FARRAR, DR. MUCK, SUNDRY OTHERS

Harking Back to Some Recent Comment on the Composers of Our Day—The Singer in the Flower of Her Powers and Herself—The Conductor and His Music for the Pension Fund—Items and Impressions

Miss Farrar in Recital at Jordan Hall on Tuesday Evening; Geraldine Farrar, Soloist at Pension Fund Concert in Symphony Hall Next Saturday Afternoon.

Efrem Zimbalist, Who Gives a Violin Recital in Symphony Hall Next Saturday Afternoon.

TRANSCRIPT, Oct, 27, continued.

WHILE Strauss and Debussy soothe the sensuous cravings of heterogeneous and brain fagged audiences (so runs a recent article by Mr. Daniel Gregory Mason); while these composers vegetate in opulent decay, drowsing rather than stimulating the mind and heart (Mr. Mason always puts the mind first in order), the "chief centres of creative musical activity quietly "carry on the great tradition." And thus in the article they stand: Rakhmaninov, Elgar, d'Indy. "Artistic advance may be figured as like the shooting of frost crystals on a window pane; never is there a crystal that is not firmly attached by traceable lines to the main body; yet no one can prophesy whither each fine filament may strike out in its individual adventure. The great artist is bound to the past by love and docility; to the future by a faith that overleaps convention."

Opportunity came at the Symphony Concert of Saturday to test precept by experience; to watch the newer crystal of Rakhmaninov's "Isle of the Dead" creep into shining existence, while conforming neatly to the main body, already complete in the docile and solid symphony of Brahms, just before. Now, opinions of Brahms as well as of Rakhmaninov still vary. A Frenchman calls them "small journeymen of music, honest and industrious" Distance across the seas removes us from such prejudice, and forces upon us the two sides of the question. We must recognize in "The Isle of the Dead" the descriptive potency, the unity of mood, the sureness of intention and effect in orchestration, the fine and artistic sincerity of near-religious imagination; in Brahms's E minor symphony, the fresh or thoughtful beauty of theme, the age-confirmed sense of melody, the greatness in broad, constructive proportion; in both, sound musical training and keen susceptibility, the excellent workmanship which only intensive will-power can attain, the noble, poetic nature and liberating imagination which asserts the individual character of the music and lifts it high and clear of mediocrity.

And yet do the chosen of immortality wear just this equipoise of meek but winning individuality and decent respect for tradition, which so highly gratifies Mr. Mason's sense of intellectual nicety? As the academicians love to follow the wondrous art-logic of the branching and flowering crystals into the harmonies and modulations of Brahms, whose tingle of daring is nevertheless always scrupulously cautious against offending tradition, so does Rakhmaninov lead them safely into the modernity of muted trumpets, programme music, and piquant intervals on the delicious verge of respectability. No; by the emphatic example of history, a great genius is never docile. He takes his schooling, absorbs the past; and drunk with his new self-reliance, he makes the world over to his measure, whipping the energetic into enthusiasm, the smug into resentment. While he loves his forebears, the mountainous masters, he never seeks their shadow; rather, his vital impulses dominate everything, and only with old age comes a certain resignation. While Chaikovsky fitted aptly into the ancestral line of logic handed down, and helped to make a musical grammar plausible, while Rakhmaninov painstakingly planted his musical garden on German soil, pruned his fruit trees with admirable skill, and accepted his four walls as any law-abiding citizen will respect the rights of property, Moussorgsky magnificently shook his fist at tradition and stamped his work with the finer genius. Nor do Stravinsky and Skriabin regard such tenets of grammarians, such petty rights of man; they stride the earth freely, they disregard fences; it is God's earth—and theirs. Meanwhile, living across the sea, we cannot do without our Brahms, nor yet our Rakhmaninov. We should even like to hear something of those other two on the list, whom Dr. Muck has so long neglected—d'Indy and Elgar.

Miss Farrar in Unusual Quality

When Miss Farrar is such mistress of herself, her voice, her chosen music as she was yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall at the concert of the Symphony Orchestra for the profit of its Pension Fund; when the task and the occasion repress the freakish impulse in her to parade and exaggeration of self; when her finer attributes shine clear in the present radiance of her young maturity, then she becomes both a woman and a singer of distinction, an illustrious ornament in our time of opera house and concert-room. Miss Farrar respects the high standard and the high tradition of the Symphony Orchestra; she respects Dr. Muck with whom she worked many a year in Berlin; she can respect herself and her audience and she chose so to do on Sunday.

Furthermore, her voice was in excellent condition, as the reporters of opera say—the higher tones lacking neither body nor color, the lower of the new depth, warmth and richness of these, her ripening years; her skill in song was readily and elastically at her command; while the music she chose stirred her sensibilities and proved her intelligence and discrimination. Slenderer than in recent years, clad in a gown of pleasant and fanciful individuality that adorned her without emphasis upon itself; reposeful and poised in manner, unmindful of herself and not too mindful of the audience or of the orchestra to the aid of which she had given her service and which heaped her arms with a grateful bunch of roses—she has seldom in the concert-hall been so comely and distinguished a figure. It is the custom to say that Miss Farrar has a talent for impersonation. She exercised it yesterday on a part that in the past she has too seldom played—that of the aristocratic singer.

As for this occasion was Miss Farrar, the woman of the world, so also was Miss Farrar, the singer. Her first number seemed to be temptation to fate—the apostrophe of Elisabeth to the Hall of Song at the beginning of the second act of "Tannhäuser," music that lies high in a soprano's voice and that should spring out of the singing-actress in swift and sustained ecstasy of maidenly soliloquy. Yet it is hard to remember when Miss Farrar's upper tones have scunded so free, full, warm and bright as in the first and the last measures of evocation; while her phrasing and the quality of her tone in the contrasting passage in which Elisabeth recalls the long vanished and loved knight was of the very voice of a tender, virginal music. Moreover, with Dr. Muck to aid in the orchestral prelude and postlude, Miss Farrar exercised her familiar faculty to recall a character and an episode to life. The Wartburg made the platform a stage and set it; once more the orchestra seemed to bear Elisabeth into the hall; to herself and to the room—not to an audience—she spoke in song; and then anew the orchestra bore her in her happiness up and down a beloved scene, while illusion went hand in hand with beauty and with fire.

To Wagner Miss Farrar returned toward the close of the concert in the three songs that he made out of the motives of Tristan for the words of his "adored one" of the moment, Mathilde Wesendock. These verses are sickish sweet or bitter-sweet with confused romantic sentimentalities; the music is bound to sound pale and thin as memory recalls it from the full bourgeoning of the music-drama. Yet as a sketch is sometimes more arresting to the eye and tingling to the imagination than is the amplified picture, so Miss Farrar's half-voice, the still and brooding beauty of her tone, her gentle and fine-spun phrases glamored "Im Triebhaus" into consummate expression of mournful, haunting, weary and hidden longing. As expert singer, she was not less apt with the long-drawn vocal strands of "Träume" and the twilight beauty of tone that it exacts; while with tones that at every turn bore the ardor of voice and feeling she laid upon them, she carried "Schmerzen" to full rhetorical climax.

Between these Wagnerian numbers, Miss Farrar sang five songs out of her repertory for recitals—all brief pieces, all concentrating a single mood, picture, impulse, all lyric of imagination and voice, little miniatures each near perfection of grave or gay. With each she had finely composed her singing so that it flowered in integrity of design and unity of impression, in adroit choice and distribution of tonal color, in acute and imaginative adjustment of melody, phrase, interval and climax. In all five the penetrating and divining, the executive and projecting singer were in even union. The listener heard poet and composer; but heard them also, through the singer's poetizing and persuasive personality. Recall the quiet charm of Miss Farrar's singing of Franz's "Stille Sicherheit"; the piquant rhythm and the gay tonal color she wove through Schumann's ditty of the green hat; her stark phrasing and grave intensity with Moussorgsky's "Sternlein," music of harrowing recollection and questioning; the web of ecstasy into which she softly spun her song from Grieg, "Erstes Begegnen" and the folk charm and sparkle she shed, full voiced, over Gretschaninov's "Snow Drops." Recall these and the Farrar of lieder in the concert hall matches the Farrar, singing-actress upon the operatic stage.

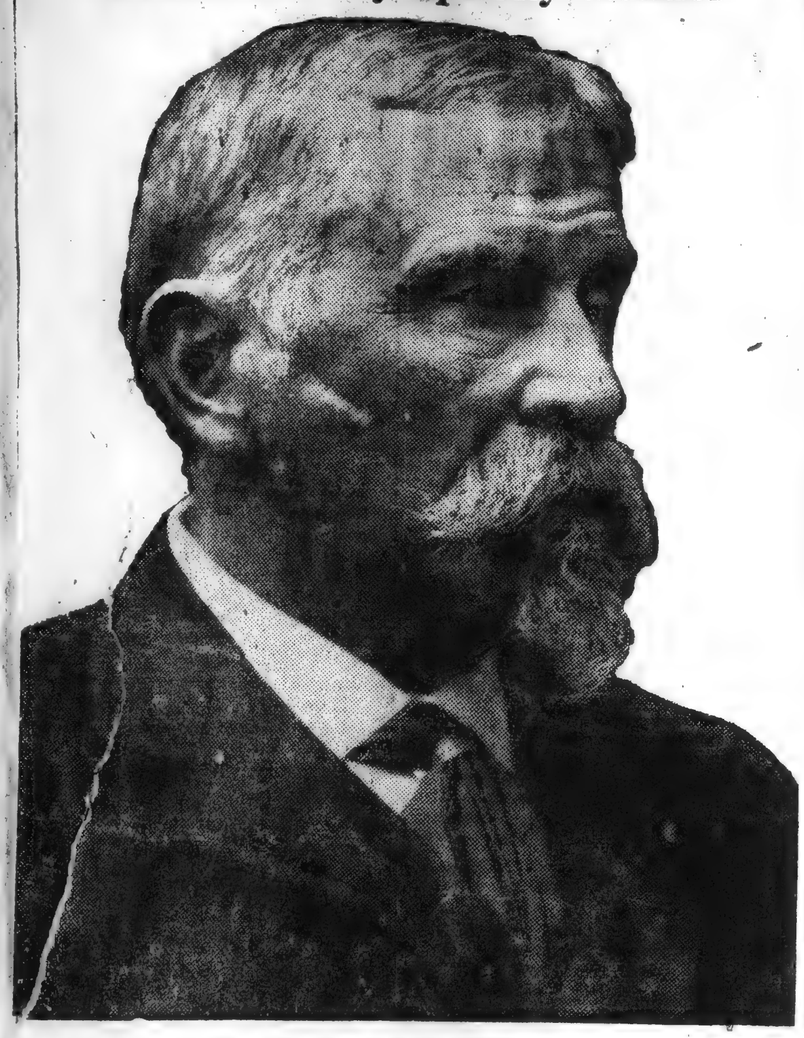
Dr. Muck and Chaikovsky

There is not a man working in the arts—or, for that matter in anything else—that has not his "blind spot," even though he be as widely ranging of perception and projection as is Dr. Muck. His "blind spot"—as none is freer to admit than the conductor himself—is the music of Chaikovsky. Always, he says, it baffles him. His mind does not readily grasp the Russian's mental and musical design; the Russian's emotions in tones leave him unresponsive, whatever his own striving for sympathy; always, he believes, there is that in Chaikovsky's music which evades him; which is highly characteristic of it; which makes his accomplishment with it more or less impotent. Try as Dr. Muck may, he cannot, for example, drench the songful melody of the first movement of the "Pathetic Symphony" in the excess of sentimentality with which Sir Henry Wood in London is wont to make it steam; he will not toy over the languors of the syncopated slow movement, as Mr. Nikisch sensuously likes to do; no more can he whip Savonovian frenzies into the advances and recessions, the suspensions and rushes up and down the scale of what the Parisian cynics call the "Petrograd Quickstep"; only in the final movement and in less degree in the more sombre passages at the beginning—in the introduction and later when the orchestra shrieks over a sustained and thundering bass—does Dr. Muck summon the illusion of Chaikovsky's emotional and tonal rhetoric.

The outcome, of course, is a highly literal version of the symphony, without any of the self-caressing languors that are the counterparts of the self-goading furies—that famous songful theme played straightforwardly, almost blankly; the slow movement taken a an usually speedy pace; the "Quickstep" wrought into instrumental and rhythmic bravura. Dr. Muck indeed comes badly off in this literalizing; but worse still is the plight of Chaikovsky himself. Hear this music, played as it was yesterday, with no draining of the dregs of Slav sentimentalities and no flagellating of Slav frenzies. Recall Brahms's symphony in E minor of the day before, Franck's familiar masterpiece, Dvorak's "From the New World" even—to cite only Chaikovsky's contemporaries. Then say whether this much-vaunted "Pathetic Symphony" has not worn away under implacable and assorting time into the hollow, hysterical, self-fondling, sickly-sensual music that it really is. Wagner—the Wagner of the outspread and tremulous beauty of the blossoming world of Good Friday, when Parsifal majestic and all his longing train look upon it; the Wagner of the tonal power and the imaginative splendor of the glorification of Seigfried, dead hero—scattered this neurotic, this almost obscene stuff of Chaikovsky to the four winds of a world of men and manhood. And Dr. Muck forthwith was his puissant self again.

32

Exonerates Symphony Leader



Maj. Henry L. Higginson

Patron of music, who upholds the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, Symphony director, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence concert.

Herald, Nov. 1, 1917

U.S. FLAG DRAPES SYMPHONY HALL

Hangs Over Main Entrance, and Manager Says It Will Remain.

EVENT AROUSES COMMENT

The American flag is draped over the main entrance to Symphony Hall and will remain there permanently. None of the business officers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would make any statement last night with reference to the manner in which the flag was ordered displayed, but Business Manager Charles A. Ellis, who was communicated with at Haverhill, said that there had been an American flag at the hall during the past summer, but he didn't know the particular location of it.

When informed that it was now draped over the main entrance, he said: "That's the proper place for it and it will remain there permanently."

Excites Comment.

The flag appeared yesterday and, because of the agitation provoked by the failure of the orchestra to include the national anthem on the Providence program, excited widespread comment. There is no flag staff at Symphony Hall for the flag, but when it was displayed yesterday it was given a more advantageous position, draped over the main entrance.

William E. Walter of the publicity department was asked if any significance was attached to the sudden appearance of the flag, and said that he had no statement to make.

Mr. Ellis was also asked concerning a New York dispatch that Mayor Curley had directed that "The Star Spangled Banner" be included on future Symphony programs, and he said that he had heard that rumor but had been unable to verify it. He learned from City Hall that Mayor Curley was in New York and had left no message for the Symphony management.

MAJ. HIGGINSON UPHOLDS MUCK ACT ON ANTHEM

National HymnNot on Program

Would Rather Give Up Providence Concerts Than Have Trouble

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when asked today concerning the trouble at Providence last night when it was said that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," stated that he would abandon the Symphony Orchestra altogether, rather than break his contracts with his players and with the public.

"For 30 years," said the Major, "I have been selling a certain thing, to wit, high class music. It is so advertised and everybody knows what to expect."

"My contracts with my players call for a certain number of weeks of art music, after which I say to them there will be popular concerts in which you may play if you wish. It is all in the contract.

"I could not, without breaking it, have the program changed. As a matter of fact, I have nothing to do with the program. It is made up by Dr. Muck during the summer and goes through the winter as it is.

"Some people in Providence are trying to make trouble. I have almost decided as a result to give up the Providence concerts altogether.

Exonerates Muck

"Last night we received some requests from people to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' at Providence. We looked up the lists of the subscribers to the concert and found that none of those who requested the National Anthem were on the list. As a result we decided not to play the piece. It would have been out of place in the program, which was a purely harmonic one. Dr. Muck had nothing to do with it.

"There are those who accuse Dr. Muck of un-Americanism.

"Would you expect to have him anything else?

"I have been to the highest authorities in Washington, to former U. S. Dist. Atty. Anderson and to the Secret Service concerning stories about Dr. Muck. I find that there is absolutely nothing against him.

"Mr. Anderson told me something about the card index system in which all suspicious persons of German origin are listed. They had nothing concerning the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra."

Out of Place

"In the matter of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they ask me why we shouldn't play it.

"I ask, why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Maj. Higginson in conclusion stated that the audience at Providence last night was large and enthusiastic, and that there was no hint of any trouble of any sort.

Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra pointed out one feature of last evening's troubles emphatically.

"Dr. Muck knew nothing of the requests to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' until after the concert was over," he said. "When I received the communication asking that we play the National Anthem I consulted our Providence subscription books and found not the name of one subscriber on the list of the those who requested that it be played.."

According to Mr. Ellis, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was advised that there was trouble brewing at Providence last evening. When they got there, therefore, they did not continue the sale of tickets. It is said that many persons in Providence, who are anti-Muck, were among those not obtaining tickets and that this helped to fan unpleasant feelings.

Traveler Nov. 1

FOILED PLOT TO BREAK UP CONCERT

Maj. Higginson Stopped the Sale of Seats at Providence.

INTENDED TO COMPEL SYMPHONY TO PLAY ANTHEM

An organized group planned to break up the Boston Symphony concert in Providence last Tuesday night by demanding that the orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner," according to information received by the Traveler today from a trustworthy source. At a signal the men were to rise from their seats and shout their demand for the national air.

This plan was forestalled by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, who issued an order that no more tickets be sold. On account of that precaution the persons who intended making the disturbance were not able to get into the hall and the concert proceeded without interruption. There were many vacant seats, but quite a large number were turned away from the box office.

Maj. Higginson wants it understood that he alone is responsible for the order that kept many persons from the concert. He says that neither Manager Charles A. Ellis nor Dr. Karl Muck, leader, were responsible. "I didn't want any trouble there," said the major. "If murder had been committed I would have been responsible, so I stopped the sale of tickets."

The orchestra will go South next week and officials are anxious to know what effect the failure to play the national air at Providence Tuesday night will have.

Baltimore Insists Symphony Play Anthem

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 1—A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here Nov. 14, and unless the national anthem is played it will be demanded from the floor.

Concert-goers took the matter in hand today and it was also brought to the attention of the federal and municipal authorities.

"Outrageous," was the comment of one prominent patron of music here today. "I shall certainly insist the national anthem be played. I shall carry this demand to the floor of the concert hall if necessary, and shout it to the stage from there."

Says Future of Orchestra at Stake

The future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the world's greatest organization of musicians, depends upon the attitude of the public toward it from now on, according to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the organization. If the public insists that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at concerts it is likely that the orchestra will disband.

Maj. Higginson says he will not permit the public to interfere with the programs and that if the people are too insistent he will withdraw his support which will probably mean the breaking up of the organization. He says, further, that if the orchestra is disbanded it will without doubt never be reorganized.

Bitter Against Critics.

Maj. Higginson is bitter against those who have criticised him and Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, because of the failure of the organization to play the national anthem of the United States at Providence Tuesday night. He has received many anonymous letters. In one of them the writer questioned the major's patriotism.

When told that Dr. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, had publicly criticised the management of Symphony Hall for its failure to display the stars and stripes there Maj. Higginson said that he had never given the matter a thought and doesn't know whether the United States flag is flown there. Dr. Conrad, at a dinner, stated that Symphony Hall is the only public hall in Boston where the flag is not displayed.

To a Traveler reporter the major said: "Why should 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played at these concerts? The programs of the orchestra were made up last summer. I had nothing to do with them and the public should not interfere."

Bars National Anthem.

The major further stated that the national anthem of the country has no place in an art concert. He said it was played nightly at the Pops in Symphony hall last summer, when other leaders than Dr. Muck directed. He admitted that Dr. Muck is pro-German and does not expect him to be anything else if honest.

It is known that Dr. Muck is a close friend of Count von Bernstorff, whose famous request to Berlin for a "slush fund" with which to buy peace in the United States caused such a stir at Washington.

It is also known that three members of the Symphony orchestra have been under close surveillance by United States department of justice agents. Maj. Higginson declared he had spoken to different government officials regarding the personnel of the orchestra and had been informed that they had investigated very man and found nothing derogatory.

The Major's Attitude.

In a letter to a friend, which the Traveler obtained, he explains his attitude. The letter follows:

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year, and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract. The tickets were sold as usual, that is, very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York and more are asked for. Sunday, here, all the seats and standing room were taken. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. These are my obligations.

"From the outstart, the one object of the orchestra has been only art. Apparently this is satisfactory to the public.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra, and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters, alleging this or that, and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck, who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurance has come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra—this in reply to a question about the matter.

"At the beginning of the war I said to the orchestra members that the situation was difficult for them and that the life of the orchestra depended upon their good temper and patience with regard to each other. They have all behaved perfectly, and in this matter Dr. Muck has been of the greatest assistance. In short, all these men have fulfilled their part and the government says their slate is clean. Shall I fail in my part?

"For 36 years the orchestra has given comfort and pleasure to many people. If it stops, it will be for all time, for I can never build it up again.

"Supposing I dismissed all the men. How are they going to live? Somebody must employ them if they can find a place. Today they are aiding the education of the community through lessons and through concerts. Are thy not doing more good than they can possibly do harm? They know very well that they are being watched. If we, in this or any other position, throw out of employ Germans, where can they go and what can they do?

"Let me repeat. There are in the orchestra various nationalities; there are a considerable number who are American citizens and liable to draft; there are a certain number who are not American citizens.

"Once more. I have run down cruel accusations, and simply say they are lies.

"Another point. The letter in the New York Times requires that the orchestra should play the Star Spangled Banner. Why should it? The programs are made in the summer as the conductor thinks best, for in many years I have never interfered with the programs. Supposing that the Star Spangled Banner were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any of the musicians? If you were living in Berlin or Vienna, would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans, and if you did, do you suppose that anybody would believe you.

"Now, you are welcome to repeat any of this to anybody. I do not write it as information for you or anybody else in particular, but because I know you as a gentleman of high standing and a member of a family which I have known since I was a boy. My own opinion is that if I backed out from this work now I should be a sneak."

Transcript Oct, 29, 1917

The Symphony Orchestra will be heard for the first times this autumn in New York at concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 8 and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 10. For the first, Dr. Muck has joined Brahms's symphony in E minor of last Friday and Saturday to Liszt's "Prometheus," Berlioz's overture to "King Lear" and the prelude to "Parsifal" from his first programme in Boston. For the second concert in New York he has appended to Beethoven's symphony in C minor, Sibelius' "Finlandia," Rakhmaninov's "Isle of the Dead" and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"—all recently played here.

93

Boston Transcript Oct, 27, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

AN AFTERNOON OF CONTINUOUS PLEASURE

A Stimulating Programme, and Orchestra and Conductor at the Top of Their Powers — The Masterpiece That Is Brahms's Fourth Symphony—Rakhmaninov's Pictorial Music of "The Isle of the Dead" — The Italy of Debussy's Early, and Also Late, Suite of Spring

FROM the first measure to the last, the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon gave keen, diversified and almost continuous pleasure, above either predecessor of the new season. Familiar pieces—Brahms's symphony in E minor and Rakhmaninov's tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead"—filled the major part of the programme; while, if the final number upon it—Debussy's symphonic suite, "Spring"—was ostensibly unfamiliar, having been played only once before "at these concerts," it is near enough kin to the Parisian's wonted music, to fall upon prepared ears. Dr. Muck warmly received, twice recalled at the end of the symphony and once, unusually at the close of the concert, was at the top of his powers, in music after his own individual heart. Rarely has even he conducted with such vitality of rhythm, propulsion and recession of upswinging climax, sense of long and various melodic line, and changeful glow of tonal color, mental warmth and exhilarated feeling as he brought to Brahms's symphony. To Rakhmaninov's grave and noble symphonic poem he lent a subdued or an intensified splendor of tone, an amplitude and a depth of imagery that made it seem, for once, as some great fresco in sound, akin, say, to Tintoretto's "Joys of Paradise" upon the walls of Venice or to what Rubens, the rich, might have made of the next world had he ever shifted his brush and imagination from the goodly present of this life.

As for the piece from Debussy's youthful years, surely much reworked in middle age, conductor and orchestra clothed it in a shimmering sunniness of tone, a rhythmic ardor, Italian warmth and Parisian elegance that held matter, manner and utterance in a perfect unity and brightness. In fact, throughout the afternoon, the orchestra was no less a flawless than an animate instrument; or more truly, not an instrument, but an hundred virtuosi playing as one, equally capable of the mellow and Rembrandtian gold of Brahms's harmonic and instrumental color; of the stark power or the whispering tremors of Rakhmaninov's varying voice; or of the sheen and resiliency of Debussy's little fantasy. Not a shadow clouded the afternoon, unless it was the "Important Notice" slipped between leaves of the programme-book to inform all concerned that our august masters at Washington will tax admission to the Symphony Concerts from those of next week onward. After such pleasure as that of yesterday, they seem not only worth the tax, but sur-tax too.

Who shall say, in warmth of pleasure, whether Brahms's last symphony, heard on Friday afternoon, or his first of yet more familiar memory under Dr. Muck's hand, excels each the other? Hear the first, as it was played, for instance, last autumn, and it seems for the time to surpass the fourth. Hear the fourth as it came from orchestra and conductor yesterday, and the first for the instant will not match it. Better adjudge them the twin stars, set high in the musical heavens, of the composer's work. Above all, this final symphony in E minor is the symphony of Brahms's matured energy of conception and execution, of his ripened and ardent yet poised and measured powers. Energy and beauty, too, leap out of the motive, swiftly become melody, at the beginning of the first movement—the magic of music at one stroke of the conjuror's wand. Follow it through that same Allegro and what vivacity of rhythm, what variety of illusory transformation, what momentary suffusions of new beauty, what returning pulse of new energy, the composer imparts! Here is music not only of substance and style, of beauty and power, but music that keeps all four at as high and glowing tension as answering mind and feeling may well endure. No measures of Brahms are freer from those halts wherein he is abstruse because he is weary and waiting; none is so full of that stringy force of tonal progress that plays upon the nerves or of that mellow richness of tonal color that warms mind and heart.

The succeeding Andante begins in like energy of invention and motion, in like rhythmic élan—hear the recurring staccato beats!—and melodic glow. Soon it softens into that golden haze of tranquil beauty which in impression upon the ear is like nothing so much as the deep and burnished browns in impression upon the eye of some of Rembrandt's maturer pictures. As his characteristic glow suffuses the whole canvass, so the like autumnal and sunset beauty of Brahms's coloring and shadowing of his melody suffuses this whole movement. Yet the energy that pervades the entire symphony will and does return, even though it be an energy of contemplation. In contrast, the Scherzo leaps with it—for once Brahms catches almost the lusty fling of Beethoven and Bruckner in such movements; but the energy yields again to the ardent beauty, autumnal though it may be, with which Brahms, in his quickening strings and mellowing wind-choir, must again suffuse the music.

Grant that for a few score measures at the beginning, the final Allegro does a little beat the air—Brahms not exactly fumbling at his chosen form of a chaconne but as yet not quite at ease with it. Soon, however, from the first entrance of the smooth and grave-voiced trombones, as aloof and afar as those of the Grail in "Parsifal" itself, the music regains propulsive power, becomes the Allegro Energico e Passionato of the composer's labelling; but, whereas the finale of the first symphony leaps exultingly forward to the goal of the climax, this finale of the fourth swells upward with a richness of voice and a majesty of progress that the other, with all its exuberance, does not quite match. The one is of the power and ardor of Brahms's symphonic youth; the other of the power and fulness of Brahms's symphonic maturity. Yet within easy memory there were those misliking and mistrusting these two masterpieces because they heard them in a clouded voice. Two illustrious conductors of our time—Mr. Nikisch and Dr. Muck—have done the music of Brahms a service, not the least of their glories; for they, at last, have made him speak with true energy, beauty, vitality of utterance.

A picture, the celebrated "Isle of the Dead" by Böcklin in the Museum at Leipzig, reproduced only yesterday upon these pages, stirred Rakhmaninov to the composition of his like-named tone-poem, now heard for the fifth time in eight years—and deservedly—at a pair of Symphony Concerts. Since a picture suggested the music, it is interesting to listen to it as it were pictorially and to bring such a test to the obscurity of design with which the composer has often been reproached. Hearers everywhere are agreed to the quality and the illusion of the beginning and the end of the tone-poem wherein Rakhmaninov summons the remoteness, the silence, the infinite peace of this dwelling place of the dead in the chambers of the great cliffs, between the still cypresses, under the clear blue sky where wind stirs not nor the pale sun flickers. Yet the interpreters of the tone-poem and the imaginers of themselves into it, have exhausted their ingenuity of deduction upon the long middle passage wherein the Dies Iræ sounds as on the day of judgment; wherein the music swells turbulently or whispers ecstatically, wherein it makes sudden gaunt descents as in the violoncellos, ascends as on tremulous wing in the solo passage for the violin, or strides as with the coming and the going of some majestic presence.

Once more, for these exercises in quickened and ingenious imagination, recall those great frescos that Flemish painters, like the van Eycks, and occasionally the Italians, laid above the high altars of great churches, with elementary desire to include as much as possible of the mystery of death and the judgment of the dead within their canvas. At the bottom, say, some mourning and human sepulture in a great tomb. Next, as though the dwelling place of the dead had opened at the crumpling of the world under the last trumpet, the gathering of spirits for the judgment. Higher still, the parting of the righteous and the unrighteous, the passing of the Divine Judge; the ecstatic passion of those that have seen God and endured; the turbulent passion of those that have looked upon Him only in shame to thrust themselves away. Highest of all, in the ethereal vault of heaven itself, the dove that is the eternal spirit of God in man. Remember Böcklin's picture; behind the cypresses, between the cliffs, is an arch of sky. Imagine the trees parted, the arch filled with some such fresco of death, resurrection, judgment, penalty, beatitude. Imagine it also painted in the lines and the colors of that much-debated middle music of Rakhmaninov's tone-poem. For the Russian has all his life haunted pictures and in this, his masterpiece thus far, is capable of such high and commingled pictorial im-

The secret of the Symphonic Suite that Debussy, student at the Villa Medicis as winner of a Prix de Rome, sent back in 1887, as proof of fruitful studies, to the grave committee upon music of the Institute in Paris is locked in his own study table and in the recollection, if any there be, of Monsieur Saint-Saëns, who alone of that jury now survives. The rest of the world knows the suite only in the transcriptions for piano that Debussy made seventeen years later and the version for orchestra prepared when nearly ten more years had ripened and individualized his tonal speech and procedure. Perhaps the original pages did bear those highly Debussyan harmonies, chords, intervals, strokes of color with which the score now abounds. Perhaps the vividly rhythmed, sharply suspensive, quickly gathering and rapidly approaching finale, as of some popular fete, distant but drawing near, foreshadow—and nearly a quarter of a century before!—the like concluding section of "Iberia," even as, with Italian suggestion substituted for Spanish, it seems now to imitate it. Perhaps and perhaps; no doubt an appendix to the "official biography" of Debussy will try to clear a matter now obscure enough. Meanwhile the unimpeachable ear bears clear evidence that the harmonic and instrumental dress of the suite is of a mature and even a mannered Debussy unless he was a very miracle of youthful precocity hidden in this particular music and to be found in no such degree in his other pieces of neighboring period.

All this, however, is for old dry-as-dusts in their cups, as it were, of investigation and speculation, and little concerns the pleasure of the music to ear and fancy or the illusion of the springtime and of a more or less poetized Italy that it works. For these pricking or caressing harmonies, these tingling intervals, these flashes of iridescent color, are but the vesture in the first movement of a lovely and transparent melody, soft of body and gentle of progress, voice and symbol of the warm stirrings, the quickened longings, the nightly coming fancies of spring, especially if it wax in Italian airs under Italian skies. Similarly, this vesture does but deepen the tang and quicken the stir of the fete of the people that in the second movement is as the glowing and ringing festival of Italianate spring.

For this tonal Italy of Debussy is not as the tonal Italy of Elgar, of Charpentier, of Strauss. Sir Edward meditated, as becomes a "thoughtful" English knight (who incidentally composes) before the ruins and other spectacles that Italy respectfully set before him, and made solemn musical memoranda, in an overture, of his reflections. Charpentier, in his "Impressions," is all for a literal and often flamboyant Italy of the folk—Montmartre, as it might have been were it a Neapolitan and not a Parisian hill. Strauss, in his youthful symphony, "From Italy," merely lifts his material out of his notebooks of the journey, repeats it exactly or works it more Teutonico, to symphonic ends. In variance from all these, Debussy's Italy of tones is an Italy that the actual presence around him of that land and its folk merely conjured the more individually out of his own poetizing, glamoring, wayward imagination.

H. T. P.

Transcript
-Oct. 27, 1917-

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Sibelius's Much Debated Fourth Symphony on Dr. Muck's Programme—Miss Farrar Once and For All This Season—Mr. Zimbalist, Mr. Werrenrath and Mr. Gebhard in Recitals

The New War-Tax on Tickets to Concerts to be Paid by the Purchaser at the Box-Office Takes Effect on and after Thursday Next.

SIBELIUS'S exacting and controverted symphony in A minor is the outstanding item in Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Originally heard here in the autumn of 1914, the music baffled many listeners. It had not a few of the familiar traits and moods of the composer; but in harmonic procedure, instrumental color, chordal contrasts and the division and sub-division of motives, he elected for the first time, a highly modern and intricate tonal speech. To some the whole symphony was like Greek to Casca in "Julius Cæsar"; others believed that they kept the path until the finale nearly obliterated it. For both, the pending repetitions should be welcome, since, almost always, with ultra-modern music, they clear and heighten the piece in hand. The other purely orchestral number of the programme is Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture in the biennial repetition of a classic. Between it and the symphony, Miss Frances Nash, one of the young pianists bidden to the Symphony Concerts and variously judged here and elsewhere, will play Saint-Saëns's neat and pretty concerto in G minor.

Symphony Hall—Miss Farrar

Earlier in the season than usual, the first of the two annual concerts of the Symphony Orchestra for the profit of its Pension Fund befalls tomorrow, Sunday, afternoon in Symphony Hall. It was so set forward that Miss Farrar, as volunteer, might assist the orchestra, before she begins work at the Metropolitan Opera House. She will sing Elisabeth's apostrophe to the great hall of the Wartburg at the beginning of the second act of "Tannhäuser"; the three songs, with orchestra, that Wagner fashioned out of sketches for the love music in "Tristan," and songs, with piano, out of Franz, Schumann, Grieg, Moussorgsky and Gretschaninov. Wagner, again, and Chaihovsky furnish forth the orchestra its share in the concert. From the German come the "Good Friday Music" out of "Parisifal" and the apotheosis of "Siegfried" out of "Götterdämmerung"; from the Russian his "Pathetic Symphony," almost hysterical in furies and overripe in softer melodies, yet beloved for sugar and spice by the average audience.

Symphony Hall—Mr. Zimbalist

For the first time in some years, Mr. Zimbalist, the violinist, is to venture a concert in Boston all by himself, on Saturday afternoon next and in the ample spaces of Symphony Hall. So he and his manager believe, his recent appearances with the Symphony Orchestra and his earlier visits with Mme. Gluck have made him known to the general public as a remarkable musician, sensitive in unusual degree to the quality of tone he draws from his violin and to the pattern and the movement of the pieces that he plays. Scarcely a violinist of the time commands such sensibility to music as lovely pattern of sound or exercises more taste and skill in the weaving of it upon air and ear. Mr. Zimbalist's numbers are Franck's sonata for violin and piano; three movements of Lalo's "Spanish Symphony;" Bach's chaconne for violin alone; and four light pieces from the Scandinavian, Tor Aulin.

ADVERTISER
— NOV. 5, 1917 —

MAJOR HIGGINSON LAUDS ORCHESTRA

Says Members Deserve Thanks For Working Together So Loyally

"PLAYED ANTHEM FIRST TIME THEY WERE ASKED"

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Symphony Orchestra, issued another statement last night, in which he again assumes the entire responsibility for the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its recent Providence concert; points out that the first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play the National Anthem, they played it; and declares that each member of the organization merits hearty thanks for "working well and loyally under most trying circumstances."

"In these times of great stress and woe," begins Maj. Higginson, "it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of tickets at once and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person.

"The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who have written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be dictinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone."

Maj. Higginson is still in possession of the proffered resignation of Dr. Muck, and is giving it his consideration.

Dr. Muck will continue conducting the orchestra on its concert tour of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore this week, and will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of each concert.

A canvass of the big orchestra reveals the fact that 27 of the musicians are subjects of the Central Powers. The citizenship of three others is doubtful.

Germans predominate in the orchestra. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of which 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are also members of the famous organization.

advertiser
Nov-5

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Nov. 1, 1917.

NOT HIS AFFAIR, SAYS KARL MUCK

Boston Symphony Conductor, Regarding Providence Incident, Refers to Statement by Maj. Henry L. Higginson

"It is not my affair." This was the reply of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today to a query of a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, why he did not play the national air of the United States at his concerts. The director said the whole matter rested with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and sustainer of the organization, and he referred to a statement from Major Higginson, published this morning in a Boston paper as settling the question.

As an answer to those who may express doubts concerning the patriotism of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a United States flag was put out on the front of Symphony Hall today. It is the same flag that has long figured in Symphony Hall activities, being the one that hung from the middle of the auditorium all the past summer, when an orchestra, composed of all but a few of the regular Boston Symphony players, gave the season of Pop concerts. Nor was the flag the only symbol of Symphony Hall patriotism. On all the programs of the summer concerts the national anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner," had a place. Regularly every night at a given time the audience beneath the flag arose and the musicians played through the tune which celebrates it.

The national anthem issue came to a head in Providence, R. I., on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert in Infantry Hall, but did not include the "Star Spangled Banner" in the program, although a formal request was made for it before the concert by women representing musical and other organizations of the city and the state. This request was addressed by telegraph to C. A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra. In consequence of the failure of the manager to have the desire of the women complied with, the Rhode Island Council of Defense on Wednesday is reported to have recommended that the police commission refuse further licenses for concerts during the war, "when conducted by Karl Muck."

The statement of Major Higginson which Dr. Muck spoke of to The Christian Science Monitor representative as the final word about the matter is in the form of a letter, the name of the person to whom it was sent not being given. From its context, it is seen to be a discussion of a communication which appeared in the New York Times relative to the concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to give in the course of the winter, beginning next week, in New York, and to have been written before the Providence, R. I., occurrence. It is as follows:

(Continued on page four, column one)

Your kind letter of Oct. 10 is before me.

Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year, and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract. The tickets were sold as usual, that is, very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York and more are asked for. Sunday, here, all the seats and standing room were taken. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

From the outstart, the one object of the orchestra has been only art. Apparently this is satisfactory to the public.

A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra, and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters, alleging this or that, and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck, who is an integral part of the orchestra.

From three high sources the assurance has come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra —this in reply to a question about the matter.

At the beginning of the war I said to the orchestra members that the situation was difficult for them and that the life of the orchestra depended upon their good temper and patience with regard to each other. They have all behaved perfectly, and in this matter Dr. Muck has been of the greatest assistance. In short, all these men have fulfilled their part, and the government says their slate is clean. Shall I fail in my part?

For 36 years the orchestra has given comfort and pleasure to many people. If it stops, it will be for all time, for I can never build it up again.

Supposing I dismissed all the men. How are they going to live? Somebody must employ them if they can find a place. Today they are aiding the education of the community through lessons and through concerts. Are they not doing more good than they can possibly do harm? They know very well that they are being watched. If we, in this or any other position, throw out of employ Germans, where can they go and what can they do?

Let me repeat. There are in the orchestra various nationalities; there are a considerable number who are American citizens and liable to draft; there are a certain number who are not American citizens.

Once more. I have run down cruel accusations, and simply say they are lies.

Another point. The letter in the New York Times requires that the orchestra should play the "Star Spangled Banner." Why should it? The programs are made in the summer as the conductor thinks best, for in many years I have never interfered with the programs. Supposing that the "Star Spangled Banner" were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any of the musicians? If you were living in Berlin or Vienna, would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans, and if you did, do you suppose that anybody would believe you?

Now, you are welcome to repeat any of this to anybody. I do not write it as information for you or anybody else in particular, but because I know you as a gentleman of high standing and a member of a family which I have known since I was a boy. My own opinion is that if I backed out from this work now I should be a sneak.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) H. L. HIGGINSON.

As to Dr. Muck in his relation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it has always been plainly understood that he was a visitor in the United States, having been asked to come from Germany to direct the concerts. He was known to have recognition in his own country of an almost governmental sort, holding the post of conductor of the Berlin Royal Opera at the time of his first call to Boston in 1906. He has never been looked upon in the light of a voluntary immigrant or as a prospective United States citizen, nor has he asked to be regarded in that light. His position has been treated by the Symphony concert public as a difficult one, and the extraordinary applause accorded him by that public at times when affairs between Germany and the United States were in a critical state has been supposed to indicate a general desire that his stay be made as comfortable as possible. The greeting extended to him when the concerts in Symphony Hall opened this season was regarded as showing the same kind of friendly attitude. The Symphony conductor is considered to have shown a hospitable disposition to works by composers of the United States, having included a number of pieces by these composers in his programs each year, among them now and then a new piece. Outside of his orchestral activities, Dr. Muck has done little musically. He planned a concert last winter in association with Miss Elena Gerhardt, the soprano, for the benefit of an American surgeons' unit to the Central Empires. This concert was advertised in the program book of the Symphony concerts for Feb. 26, 1917, but it was not given.

A survey of the programs given thus far this season by symphony orchestras in the large cities of the country shows that the playing of the national anthem has been the rule. It was regularly printed as one of the numbers of the first program of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, being put at the close. Likewise it was printed on the program of the New York Philharmonic concerts last week, being put at the beginning. The anthem is not down on the programs of the Philadelphia Orchestra or of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. But at the first concert of the Philadelphia organization the tune was performed, "an apt patriotic prelude," as The Christian Science Monitor correspondent wrote, "played with native ardor and not with foreign-born perfunctoriness." And at the first concert of the Chicago organization the conductor on taking up his baton bade the audience rise and sing the "Star Spangled Banner" to the accompaniment of the orchestra.

The propriety of assent being given to Dr. Muck's directing concerts in the United States has been questioned in other cities where the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes visits besides Providence. One of these cities is Hartford, Conn., and a protest is also reported from Baltimore, Md., where the orchestra is billed to appear on Nov. 14.

DAILY ADVERTISER,

Nov. 2, 1917.

NEW YORK STIRRED OVER DR. MUCK

City Aroused by Attitude on "Star Spangled Banner"—Talks of Ban

CONDUCTOR BOOKER TO APPEAR THURSDAY

NEW York, Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a concert at Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, has made the following statement in connection with a request that his orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" at that concert:—

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult."

New York received this statement with amazement. Coming at a time when every loyal citizen is working his hardest to put down seditious utterances and muzzle enemy aliens who are endeavoring to spread a traitorous propaganda in the country, Dr Muck's statement was immediately branded in American circles as the most audacious utterance that has yet been publicly made by a subject of the Kaiser in the United States.

Dr. Muck is duly booked to appear in New York next Thursday night, but whether New York would permit his concert to go on in view of his bold attack on the American National Anthem is regarded as distinctly another matter.

If the movement that was launched by a group of patriotic Americans immediately upon receipt of the astounding utterances from Boston does not collapse before tomorrow it is entirely probable that the concert will not take place in Carnegie Hall unless the German director agrees to play the National Anthem as a prelude.

When loyal residents of New York had fully realized the significance of Dr. Muck's statement they began immediately to delve into the history of the musical director. What they discovered caused their amazement to lessen to a marked degree. The history of Dr. Muck was found to be prima facie evidence of his reasons for regarding it as "almost an insult" that he should lead an orchestra playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Loyal Americans who had up to this moment intended paying fancy prices to hear Dr. Muck and his musicians learned by casual scrutiny that back in 1908 the Prussian Kaiser conferred on him the honorary title of "Koeniglich preussischer Generalmusikdirektor," which, translated from German, means "the King's Prussian Musical Director."

Globe
Nov. 2, 1917.

34

GERALDINE FARRAR SINGS U. S. ANTHEM

Prima Donna Responds to Request in Haverhill

Resentment Against Attitude of Boston Symphony Spreads

Special Dispatch to the Globe

HAVERHILL, Nov 1—Geraldine Farrar made her first appearance in Haverhill at the Colonial Theatre tonight and sang to an enthusiastic audience of 1500. The feature came when the prima donna closed her performance by singing "The Star Spangled Banner" in English, with the entire audience standing. Her regular program consisted of groups of French, Italian and German songs. She was assisted by Arthur Hackett, tenor; Josef Malkin, cellist, and Richard Epstein, accompanist.

When it became known that Mme Farrar was to sing here tonight Rev James Malcolm-Smith, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, asked Mayor Morse to request Mme Farrar to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" in English before the close of the performance. The prima donna complied, to the extreme satisfaction of the audience.

PROVIDENCE BUSINESS MEN WOULD BAR DR KARL MUCK

PROVIDENCE, Nov 1—The failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert in this city Tuesday was formally brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen this afternoon.

A resolution was adopted requesting the Police Commission to require, as a condition to the granting of any licenses for an entertainment in this city, that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played or sung.

This afternoon the Chamber of Commerce sent a letter to the Police Commissioners asking them to refuse further concert permits to any organization conducted by "one Dr Karl Muck."

The Cheminade Club also took similar action.

DAMROSCH WOULD PROVIDE SUBSTITUTE FOR DR MUCK

NEW YORK, Nov 1—The question whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its opening concert here next week was debated further today.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall said, in reference to the stand of Dr Karl Muck, the Boston conductor, that while he thought it would be an injustice to Dr Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our National anthem now, at the same time he considered Dr Muck's reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' is not played in our country because it is a work of art," said Mr Damrosch, "but because it is a symbol of the loyalty and the patriotism of our people in time of war. While I do not believe in cheapening this symbol by producing it on every occasion, it is most fitting that a musical season this year should be introduced by a playing of the anthem. The issue in the case of the Boston orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr Muck to do it."

There was a flare-up today also over the question of German opera this season at the Metropolitan. Mrs William Jay, the only woman director of the Philharmonic Society, opposes the presentation of German operas.

TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM AT SYMPHONY IN ST LOUIS

ST LOUIS, Nov 1—The directors of the St Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts given twice a week and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last Spring the National anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Director Max Zach opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the program, but was willing it be played at popular concerts.

35

Herald. Nov. 2, 1917

DEFENDS DR. MUCK.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Mr. William R. Sturgis's letter anent the pension fund concert, in this morning's Herald and Journal, leaves one "a prey to conflicting emotions." The emotions need not be specified; but let us be fair—discriminatingly fair. Dame Rumor says that Dr. Muck is "an agent of the Germans," that Geraldine Farrar is Germanophile, etc. Dame Rumor is a coward, whose boldness is great because her sins can never be brought home to her. If Dr. Muck be giving "aid and counsel to the enemy," the fact will ultimately be proved, and appropriate action will follow. Meanwhile, he is rendering the service demanded of him with exemplary skill, dignity and courage, and that in circumstances of peculiar difficulty, and under high emotional tension. The personnel of the Symphony Orchestra is fairly representative of all the warring elements abroad, and includes those who are as jealously watchful of the leader's extra-professional relations and activities, as they are promptly responsive to his slightest signal on the platform.

Many who are suspicious of Dr. Muck's actual relation to our public life accord to him due credit for keeping the orchestra intact in these troublous times; and if the pro-German element in the audience were more judicious—not to say less disloyal—there would be little cause for criticism. To accord to Dr. Muck, as often as he appears upon the platform, what amounts to nothing short of an ovation, would be in bad taste, even in ordinary times, by reason of its obtrusiveness; in the present state of public feeling it is offensive. That is why the area of unoccupied seats increases from week to week, and doubtless will increase until the initial list of casualties to our forces overseas still further increases public tension, and the necessity for restraint is felt—in Symphony Hall as elsewhere.

EDWARD G. SPENCER.

South Natick, Oct. 30.

A DIFFERENT VIEW.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Maj. Higginson says that the "Star Spangled Banner" is not and has not been on the programs of the Symphony Orchestra. Very true. Neither is it on the program of the Hollis Theatre, nor on the bill-of-fare at the Parker House, but it is played at both places during the evening, not as part of the entertainment, but as a war time expression of patriotism, which is natural and desirable.

The question with the Symphony Orchestra is, shall the sensibilities of some of its members be distressed by playing our anthem, or shall the sensibilities of audiences and the population generally be affronted by the deliberate omission of this ceremony, which is customary on such occasions in these times. Since this is our country, and since the primary object of public entertainments is to please the audiences and the community, it would seem proper to insist that the Symphony Orchestra play the "Star Spangled Banner," even if so doing is not entirely congenial to some members of the organization.

DEMAREST LLOYD.

53 State street, Nov. 1.

ANOTHER DEFENCE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Apropos of the Boston Symphony Orchestra controvery, or rather, outburst of patriotic hysteria against an institution which for many years we have been proud to acknowledge as our own, facts as to the personnel and activities might not be amiss.

The threats and implications which resulted in the demand for the national anthem at each concert (the form of the "request" no doubt responsible for the refusal) arose most probably from the fact that some over zealous and not too well posted patriots became suddenly aware that the orchestra was harboring some of the enemy.

As a matter of fact our orchestra is not pro-German. Its personnel of 100 includes men of 12 nationalities, American citizens being in the majority. Of the Germans, but few are not naturalized. Had we not made it our business, this would not have been evident, for these men are unobtrusive and apparently peaceful citizens vouched for by our government. As to Dr. Muck, many stories have been current, but when Mr. Higginson, an avowedly ardent pro-ally, comes forth in defence of him, we may well accept these stories for what they are—gossip. As for the programs of the concerts, they have been most impartial.

In short, patriotism cannot shackle art; art knows not the boundaries of countries. Our musicians were picked from here and there for their skill, not for their nationality. The personnel has changed but little in many years. We have attended the concerts, praised them and glowed over the fact that we possessed the world's greatest orchestra. Where then is our loyalty to these men, most of them Americans or our allies?

As for the surging desire to have our national anthem played at the concerts, the writer remembers only too well several occasions last spring at the Pop Concerts when the audiences resonded too weakly to the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" to receive the ready and waiting encore.

Our orchestra has still many, many loyal friends who appreciate it for what it is, one of the biggest things in the art life of Boston. If it includes a few law abiding German citizens sponsored for by our government, let us not forget that it is an American organization made up largely of American citizens.

Let us not degrade our patriotism by becoming petty!

MARION DILLON GARDNER.

Cambridge, Nov. 1.

ANOTHER SUGGESTION.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Much criticism has recently been made concerning anti-American sentiment among certain members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That anyone should say that German music should be omitted from the programs is obviously foolish and preposterous. On the other hand, in order to give the members of the orchestra an opportunity to prove their good faith, may we not suggest that they be requested to play our national anthem at the opening of each concert.

STANFORD H. STEVENS.
MILTON A. ROGERS.

Cambridge, Oct. 31.

A CRITIC OF THE SYMPHONY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

I agree with Mr. William R. Sturgis, and I ask the same question—"How much longer will the musical public tolerate this agent of the Germans in their midst?" How American people can go to Symphony Hall and listen to music played by this "hot bed of Huns" is beyond me. Maybe when some more fires like Baltimore, Kansas City, Buffalo, and many others, are set, when the lists of dead and wounded are given out, will Boston wake up. Lord, let's hope so.

I would also like to ask why the American flag is not displayed either on or in Symphony Hall. Is it because it might hurt the feelings of these "dear" Huns? Wake up, Boston, or you will be stung.

JOHN H. PARKURST.

Hotel Westminster, Boston, Oct. 31.

OUR MAIL BAG

THE SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

The progress of events in connection with Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the "Star-Spangled Banner" is so rapid that what is written on one day may not at all fit the circumstances of the next. Yet there are certain points which may be of permanent concern to the Boston public.

One of these is the highly inflammable character of the material with which the critics of the orchestra and its management have been dealing. How many of them realize that they are imperilling the very existence of an institution built up through 36 years of generous sacrifice and public spirit, until it has given a unique distinction not merely to its founder and sustainer, but to the city itself? Must the Boston public be taught through bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?

How many of the new patriots will look back with pride and satisfaction on having virtually demanded of Maj. Higginson what amounts to a public declaration of his own loyalty? There is one Sunday in the year when everybody who loves his mother is expected to wear a flower in his buttonhole. Certain things are to be taken for granted, and some of us prefer to appear on that day without a flower. If there is any citizen of Boston who should be exempt from justifying himself, it is Maj. Higginson.

The public press informs one that the Washington authorities are considering Dr. Muck's refusal to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence a few nights ago. Information even more authentic is to the effect that Dr. Muck never heard of the request for it—made by persons who do not subscribe to the concerts—until he had returned to Boston from Rhode Island.

For those who do not enjoy the concerts this year—with or without "The Star Spangled Banner"—there is nothing easier than to stay at home and to try to forget the perfection to which Dr. Muck has brought the orchestra. But there are some of us left, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music. One of these spots has been Symphony Hall. If it is now to be closed and silenced, let us be ready with our thanks to an impetuous portion of the public.

M. A. DeWOLFE HOWE.

Boston, Nov. 2.

AMERICAN — Nov. 3, 1917 —

HIGGINSON MAY RETAIN MUCK

Dr. Carl Muck's departure from Boston Symphony Orchestra rests with Major Henry L. Higginson. The noted conductor's resignation is in the hands of the major, whose decision in the matter will be the sequel of the concert at which the orchestra played the national anthem.

Major Higginson himself announced that the matter of the resignation would have his own "earnest consideration."

The orchestra's playing of the "Star Spangled Banner"—under the leadership of Dr. Muck—was the climax to the wide discussion of the orchestra's failure to play the national anthem in Providence several days ago. The rendering of the patriotic air may be regarded as the great orchestra's answer to the criticism which has made the issue one of national interest.

DENIES REFUSAL.

Major Higginson in his announcement apparently nailed the widely made statement that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had refused to play the song.

"They have never refused," was the major's terse way of putting it.

Many friends of the orchestra professed today to see in Major Higginson's tribute to Dr. Muck—"To lose him would be a disaster"—ground for belief that the noted composer's resignation would not be accepted.

Whatever the issue, it is certain that the concert will be historic in musical annals. The musical features were notable, but the tremendous stir over the "To play or not to play" made the afternoon one of more than usual importance.

ANTHEM STICKERS.

That the battle had been won by those who insisted the orchestra must play the national air was made known by a sticker in the program, saying:

> The National Anthem will be played as the closing number of the program.

Reading of this caused a hum of gossip in the hall. But there was sudden hush when upon the platform walked Major Higginson, a procedure must unusual and one so shunned by the major that it was only the nature of his message that brought him to the front of the platform.

Applause came as he lifted his hand. He waited, then began:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner"——

Here hand-clapping interrupted. Again the major raised his hand to bring silence, and continued: "And they have complied (More applause.)

"They have never refused. (Applause.)

"Last Spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Tense interest marked the audience, particularly at the word resignation."

MUCK APPLAUDED.

In a moment came Dr. Muck, greeted by applause in which Geraldine Farrar, a hearer at the concert, joined. The handclapping kept up for some time. After the first number the applause became an evident ovation for the composer, who came back and once more reappeared to respond with a bow. On the second occasion the orchestra stood.

Each number was applauded, but the real resonance came as a preliminary to the "Star Spangled Banner" which was played last. Dr. Muck conducted—not at all listlessly but with evident interest. Here and there arose voices and soon there was a great impromptu chorus singing.

The concert brought to the fore again Silbelius' Fourth Symphony, the first hearing of this work in three years. Despite some weaknesses, the symphony has real worth. Now and then comes a jumble, but on the whole the work is splendidly executed and is in several passages most pleasurable.

WESTERN PIANIST.

Miss Frances Nash, a Western pianist, was the soloist, playing Saint-Saens' Concerto in G minor, a work which the great composer himself played in Boston in 1906 to the same orchestra's accompaniment. That Miss Nash had many admirers was proven by the reception given her. The concerto is withal delightful, and she played it with charm.

There was fine fervor in Beethoven's overture to "Leonore," the concluding classical number.

TRANSCRIPT — Nov. 2, 1917

DR. MUCK IN ABEYANCE

Government to Defer Action on Prohibition Against Symphony Leader, Hoping for a Voluntary Adjustment—Jurisdiction in Doubt

Special to the Transcript:

Washington, D. C., Nov. 2—No immediate action will be taken by the Department of Justice, on the alleged report of Special Agent Howick of Providence, recommending that the Boston Smphony Orchestra be prohibited from playing in public, unless the performance is preceded by, or includes, a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." In fact, if such a report has been made, nothing is recollected of it in the departmetn by officials who later would pass upon it, if action is contemplated.

Officials of the Department have not, in fact, made up their minds whether the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, to play the national anthem upon the request of Americans, constitutes an offence which would bring him within the jurisdiction of the Government. Upon the art side, Dr. Muck's refusal to play an extraneous number, which musicians agree is not of the highest order of music, finds ready sympathy in official circles. As far as that issue is concerned, the Department certainly would not concern itself with the makeup of the programmes of the Symphony Orchestra concerts. The pith of the question is whether Dr. Muck and some of his colleagues shall be permitted to play at all. This is the point upon which the Department will concentrate, if the report of Mr. Howick is given more than cursory attention.

Appareently the department is disposed to await events, in the belief that the issue somehow or other may settled itself, either through renewed demands for the playing of the national anthem, which will lead to an abandonment of the concert tour if they are refused, or an unwilling compliance with the requests which place patriotism above art.

The situation from any point of view is regarded as a rather serious one for the great Boston organization, for despatches from Providence, New York and Baltimore, where the orchestra has played or has engagements, indicate that public opinion is roused and that the issue against Dr. Muck as a German sympathizer will be raised wherever the orchestra appears in the future. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play in Washington next Tuesday, in Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday, Nov. 11, and in Baltimore, Nov. 14.

The State of public opinion in all of these places is unquestionably hostile to Dr. Muck as a German citizen, although regular patrons of the symphony concerts not only approve his unwillingness to throw his programmes out of joint, but regret exceedingly that patriotic persons should have insisted upon the injection into a purely artistic musical programme of something that did not belong there.

The damage has been done, however, and it is not expected that conditions will change much for the better. But from the comment which the whole incident has aroused in all circles in Washington it is obvious that many persons believe that Dr. Muck has resented an "insult" to himself as a German. Orchestras of the highest standing, like the Philharmonic and New York Symphony, have played the national anthem without protest and the refusal of the great German conductor to follow their example places his organization in an unfavorable light. In the Department of Justice the papers eventually will be handled by John Lord Obrian, former United States District Attorney at Buffalo, who has been summoned here and placed in charge of all war matters.

W. E. B.

TRANSCRIPT Nov. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY TO PLAY THE "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

DR. MUCK WILL LEAD ORCHESTRA IN PLAYING IT AT THE END OF EACH PERFORMANCE — HE HAD OFFERED HIS RESIGNATION IF MAJOR HIGGINSON WANTED IT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the Star Spangled Banner at the conclusion of every performance. And Dr. Muck will lead. This was the announcement made at the concert this afternoon by Major Henry Lee Higginson, who said that he had requested the orchestra to play it and that it had willingly complied. In fact, it had never refused to play it. Major Higginson also said that Dr. Muck had offered to resign but that he (Major Higginson) would very much regret to have him do so. Dr. Muck himself appeared on the platform and was given a remarkable ovation. Then the concert went on as usual and all present seemed relieved that the little controversy which had been in progress for a few days was thus happily ended.

Transcript Nov. 2

35

Herald. Nov. 2, 1917

DEFENDS DR. MUCK.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Mr. William R. Sturgis's letter anent the pension fund concert, in this morning's Herald and Journal, leaves one "a prey to conflicting emotions." The emotions need not be specified; but let us be fair—discriminatingly fair. Dame Rumor says that Dr. Muck is "an agent of the Germans," that Geraldine Farrar is Germanophile, etc. Dame Rumor is a coward, whose boldness is great because her sins can never be brought home to her. If Dr. Muck be giving "aid and counsel to the enemy," the fact will ultimately be proved, and appropriate action will follow. Meanwhile, he is rendering the service demanded of him with exemplary skill, dignity and courage, and that in circumstances of peculiar difficulty, and under high emotional tension. The personnel of the Symphony Orchestra is fairly representative of all the warring elements abroad, and includes those who are as jealously watchful of the leader's extra-professional relations and activities, as they are promptly responsive to his slightest signal on the platform.

Many who are suspicious of Dr. Muck's actual relation to our public life accord to him due credit for keeping the orchestra intact in these troublous times; and if the pro-German element in the audience were more judicious—not to say less disloyal—there would be little cause for criticism. To accord to Dr. Muck, as often as he appears upon the platform, what amounts to nothing short of an ovation, would be in bad taste, even in ordinary times, by reason of its obtrusiveness; in the present state of public feeling it is offensive. That is why the area of unoccupied seats increases from week to week, and doubtless will increase until the initial list of casualties to our forces overseas still further increases public tension, and the necessity for restraint is felt—in Symphony Hall as elsewhere.

EDWARD G. SPENCER.

South Natick, Oct. 30.

A DIFFERENT VIEW.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Maj. Higginson says that the "Star Spangled Banner" is not and has not been on the programs of the Symphony Orchestra. Very true. Neither is it on the program of the Hollis Theatre, nor on the bill-of-fare at the Parker House, but it is played at both places during the evening, not as part of the entertainment, but as a war time expression of patriotism, which is natural and desirable.

The question with the Symphony Orchestra is, shall the sensibilities of some of its members be distressed by playing our anthem, or shall the sensibilities of audiences and the population generally be affronted by the deliberate omission of this ceremony, which is customary on such occasions in these times. Since this is our country, and since the primary object of public entertainments is to please the audiences and the community, it would seem proper to insist that the Symphony Orchestra play the "Star Spangled Banner," even if so doing is not entirely congenial to some members of the organization.

DEMAREST LLOYD.

53 State street, Nov. 1.

ANOTHER DEFENCE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Apropos of the Boston Symphony Orchestra controvery, or rather, outburst of patriotic hysteria against an institution which for many years we have been proud to acknowledge as our own, facts as to the personnel and activities might not be amiss.

The threats and implications which resulted in the demand for the national anthem at each concert (the form of the "request" no doubt responsible for the refusal) arose most probably from the fact that some over zealous and not too well posted patriots became suddenly aware that the orchestra was harboring some of the enemy.

As a matter of fact our orchestra is not pro-German. Its personnel of 100 includes men of 12 nationalities, American citizens being in the majority. Of the Germans, but few are not naturalized. Had we not made it our business, this would not have been evident, for these men are unobtrusive and apparently peaceful citizens vouched for by our government. As to Dr. Muck, many stories have been current, but when Mr. Higginson, an avowedly ardent pro-ally, comes forth in defence of him, we may well accept these stories for what they are—gossip. As for the programs of the concerts, they have been most impartial.

In short, patriotism cannot shackle art; art knows not the boundaries of countries. Our musicians were picked from here and there for their skill, not for their nationality. The personnel has changed but little in many years. We have attended the concerts, praised them and glowed over the fact that we possessed the world's greatest orchestra. Where then is our loyalty to these men, most of them Americans or our allies?

As for the surging desire to have our national anthem played at the concerts, the writer remembers only too well several occasions last spring at the Pop concerts when the audiences resonded too weakly to the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" to receive the ready and waiting encore.

Our orchestra has still many, many loyal friends who appreciate it for what it is, one of the biggest things in the art life of Boston. If it includes a few law abiding German citizens sponsored for by our government, let us not forget that it is an American organization made up largely of American citizens.

Let us not degrade our patriotism by becoming petty!

MARION DILLON GARDNER.

Cambridge, Nov. 1.

ANOTHER SUGGESTION.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

Much criticism has recently been made concerning anti-American sentiment among certain members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That anyone should say that German music should be omitted from the programs is obviously foolish and preposterous. On the other hand, in order to give the members of the orchestra an opportunity to prove their good faith, may we not suggest that they be requested to play our national anthem at the opening of each concert.

STANFORD H. STEVENS.
MILTON A. ROGERS.

Cambridge, Oct. 31.

A CRITIC OF THE SYMPHONY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

I agree with Mr. William R. Sturgis, and I ask the same question—"How much longer will the musical public tolerate this agent of the Germans in their midst?" How American people can go to Symphony Hall and listen to music played by this "hot bed of Huns" is beyond me. Maybe when some more fires like Baltimore, Kansas City, Buffalo, and many others, are set, when the lists of dead and wounded are given out, will Boston wake up. Lord, let's hope so.

I would also like to ask why the American flag is not displayed either on or in Symphony Hall. Is it because it might hurt the feelings of these "dear" Huns? Wake up, Boston, or you will be stung.

JOHN H. PARKURST.

Hotel Westminster, Boston, Oct. 31.

OUR MAIL BAG

THE SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

The progress of events in connection with Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the "Star-Spangled Banner" is so rapid that what is written on one day may not at all fit the circumstances of the next. Yet there are certain points which may be of permanent concern to the Boston public.

One of these is the highly inflammable character of the material with which the critics of the orchestra and its management have been dealing. How many of them realize that they are imperilling the very existence of an institution built up through 36 years of generous sacrifice and public spirit, until it has given a unique distinction not merely to its founder and sustainer, but to the city itself? Must the Boston public be taught through bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?

How many of the new patriots will look back with pride and satisfaction on having virtually demanded of Maj. Higginson what amounts to a public declaration of his own loyalty? There is one Sunday in the year when everybody who loves his mother is expected to wear a flower in his buttonhole. Certain things are to be taken for granted, and some of us prefer to appear on that day without a flower. If there is any citizen of Boston who should be exempt from justifying himself, it is Maj. Higginson.

The public press informs one that the Washington authorities are considering Dr. Muck's refusal to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence a few nights ago. Information even more authentic is to the effect that Dr. Muck never heard of the request for it—made by persons who do not subscribe to the concerts—until he had returned to Boston from Rhode Island.

For those who do not enjoy the concerts this year—with or without "The Star Spangled Banner"—there is nothing easier than to stay at home and to try to forget the perfection to which Dr. Muck has brought the orchestra. But there are some of us left, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music. One of these spots has been Symphony Hall. If it is now to be closed and silenced, let us be ready with our thanks to an impetuous portion of the public.

M. A. DeWOLFE HOWE.

Boston, Nov. 2.

AMERICAN — Nov. 3, 1917 —

HIGGINSON MAY RETAIN MUCK

Dr. Carl Muck's departure from Boston Symphony Orchestra rests with Major Henry L. Higginson. The noted conductor's resignation is in the hands of the major, whose decision in the matter will be the sequel of the concert at which the orchestra played the national anthem.

Major Higginson himself announced that the matter of the resignation would have his own "earnest consideration."

The orchestra's playing of the "Star Spangled Banner"—under the leadership of Dr. Muck—was the climax to the wide discussion of the orchestra's failure to play the national anthem in Providence several days ago. The rendering of the patriotic air may be regarded as the great orchestra's answer to the criticism which has made the issue one of national interest.

DENIES REFUSAL.

Major Higginson in his announcement apparently nailed the widely made statement that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had refused to play the song.

"They have never refused," was the major's terse way of putting it.

Many friends of the orchestra professed today to see in Major Higginson's tribute to Dr. Muck—"To lose him would be a disaster"—ground for belief that the noted composer's resignation would not be accepted.

Whatever the issue, it is certain that the concert will be historic in musical annals. The musical features were notable, but the tremendous stir over the "To play or not to play" made the afternoon one of more than usual importance.

ANTHEM STICKERS.

That the battle had been won by those who insisted the orchestra must play the national air was made known by a sticker in the program, saying:

> The National Anthem will be played as the closing number of the program.

Reading of this caused a hum of gossip in the hall. But there was sudden hush when upon the platform walked Major Higginson, a procedure must unusual and one so shunned by the major that it was only the nature of his message that brought him to the front of the platform.

Applause came as he lifted his hand. He waited, then began:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner"——

Here hand-clapping interrupted. Again the major raised his hand to bring silence, and continued: "And they have complied (More applause.)

"They have never refused. (Applause.)

"Last Spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Tense interest marked the audience, particularly at the word resignation."

MUCK APPLAUDED.

In a moment came Dr. Muck, greeted by applause in which Geraldine Farrar, a hearer at the concert, joined. The handclapping kept up for some time. After the first number the applause became an evident ovation for the composer, who came back and once more reappeared to respond with a bow. On the second occasion the orchestra stood.

Each number was applauded, but the real resonance came as a preliminary to the "Star Spangled Banner" which was played last. Dr. Muck conducted—not at all listlessly but with evident interest. Here and there arose voices and soon there was a great impromptu chorus singing.

The concert brought to the fore again Silbelius' Fourth Symphony, the first hearing of this work in three years. Despite some weaknesses, the symphony has real worth. Now and then comes a jumble, but on the whole the work is splendidly executed and is in several passages most pleasurable.

WESTERN PIANIST.

Miss Frances Nash, a Western pianist, was the soloist, playing Saint-Saens' Concerto in G minor, a work which the great composer himself played in Boston in 1906 to the same orchestra's accompaniment. That Miss Nash had many admirers was proven by the reception given her. The concerto is withal delightful, and she played it with charm.

There was fine fervor in Beethoven's overture to "Leonora," the concluding classical number.

TRANSCRIPT — NOV. 2, 1917

DR. MUCK IN ABEYANCE

Government to Defer Action on Prohibition Against Symphony Leader, Hoping for a Voluntary Adjustment—Jurisdiction in Doubt T Rauscript 11/2

Special to the Transcript:

Washington, D. C., Nov. 2—No immediate action will be taken by the Department of Justice, on the alleged report of Special Agent Howick of Providence, recommending that the Boston Smphony Orchestra be prohibited from playing in public, unless the performance is preceded by, or includes, a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." In fact, if such a report has been made, nothing is recollected of it in the departmetn by officials who later would pass upon it, if action is contemplated.

Officials of the Department have not, in fact, made up their minds whether the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, to play the national anthem upon the request of Americans, constitutes an offence which would bring him within the jurisdiction of the Government. Upon the art side, Dr. Muck's refusal to play an extraneous number, which musicians agree is not of the highest order of music, finds ready sympathy in official circles. As far as that issue is concerned, the Department certainly would not concern itself with the makeup of the programmes of the Symphony Orchestra concerts. The pith of the question is whether Dr. Muck and some of his colleagues shall be permitted to play at all. This is the point upon which the Department will concentrate, if the report of Mr. Howick is given more than cursory attention.

Appareently the department is disposed to await events, in the belief that the issue somehow or other may settled itself, either through renewed demands for the playing of the national anthem, which will lead to an abandonment of the concert tour if they are refused, or an unwilling compliance with the requests which place patriotism above art.

The situation from any point of view is regarded as a rather serious one for the great Boston organization, for despatches from Providence, New York and Baltimore, where the orchestra has played or has engagements, indicate that public opinion is roused and that the issue against Dr. Muck as a German sympathizer will be raised wherever the orchestra appears in the future. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play in Washington next Tuesday, in Carnegie Hall, New York, Thurs day, Nov. 11, and in Baltimore, Nov. 14.

The State of public opinion in all of these places is unquestionably hostile to Dr. Muck as a German citizen, although regular patrons of the symphony concerts not only approve his unwillingness to throw his programmes out of joint, but regret exceedingly that patriotic persons should have insisted upon the injection into a purely artistic musical programme of something that did not belong there.

The damage has been done, however, and it is not expected that conditions will change much for the better. But from the comment which the whole incident has aroused in all circles in Washington it is obvious that many persons believe that Dr. Muck has resented an "insult" to himself as a German. Orchestras of the highest standing, like the Philharmonic and New York Symphony, have played the national anthem without protest and the refusal of the great German conductor to follow their example places his organization in an unfavorable light. In the Department of Justice the papers eventually will be handled by John Lord Obrian, former United States District Attorney at Buffalo, who has been summoned here and placed in charge of all war matters.

W. E. B.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY TO PLAY THE "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

DR. MUCK WILL LEAD ORCHESTRA IN PLAYING IT AT THE END OF EACH PERFORMANCE — HE HAD OFFERED HIS RESIGNATION IF MAJOR HIGGINSON WANTED IT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the Star Spangled Banner at the conclusion of every performance. And Dr. Muck will lead. This was the announcement made at the concert this afternoon by Major Henry Lee Higginson, who said that he had requested the orchestra to play it and that it had willingly complied. In fact, it had never refused to play it. Major Higginson also said that Dr. Muck had offered to resign but that he (Major Higginson) would very much regret to have him do so. Dr. Muck himself appeared on the platform and was given a remarkable ovation. Then the concert went on as usual and all present seemed relieved that the little controversy which had been in progress for a few days was thus happily ended.

Transcript Nov. 2

– Traveler, Nov. 3, 1917 –

Record Nov. 2 - 1917

36

May Bar All Music of German Masters for Duration of War

Agitation Over National Anthem and Metropolitan Opera Company's Action Finding Many Echoes—T. R. Would Intern Dr. Muck.

Art surrenders to patriotism.

"The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at all concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to an announcement by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and financial backer of the organization.

Lovers of good music are wondering how far the controversy, precipitated by the failure of the orchestra to play the national anthem at Providence last Tuesday night, will effect the organization and its concerts. They wonder whether the outgrowth of the agitation will be a drive against German music as in New York.

Last night the directors of the Metropolitan opera company announced that there will be no opera in German by that company. Bostonians are anxious to know whether the ban will spread to orchestral selections by Teutonic composers.

Public Divided.

The public is divided into two groups. One consists of those who believe that everything German should go at this time, even music. The other thinks that it would be a calamity to interfere with standard works by the old masters.

Several German singers will be eliminated by the Metropolitan decree. It is understood that Mesdames Ober, Kurt, and Carl Braun and Johannes Sembach will not appear this season. The board's action is due to the growing sentiment in the United States against all things German. They feel that if German opera was played here it might be construed by the people of the fatherland into the belief that the people of this country are not with the government in the fight against the Huns. There was no intention at any time by the Metropolitan management to put on this year the operas of Richard Strauss, now living.

Ovation for Dr. Muck.

The decision of Maj. Higginson to ask the Symphony players to render the national air at yesterday's performance came after a storm of protest from all parts of the country. Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, was given an ovation. Prior to that Maj. Higginson announced that Dr. Muck had offered his resignation "in order that no personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra."

Comment continues by prominent persons. Former President Roosevelt said yesterday, in New York, that Dr. Muck ought to be interned. T. R.'s words follow:

"Muck ought not to be allowed at large in this country. He ought to be interned at once, as should any one who refuses to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one should apoligize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinated to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony orchestra will not play the national anthem it ought to be shut up."

Dr. Conrad's Views.

Dr. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, in a letter to the Traveler, sums up as follows: "As a nation we are at war. A tremendous, far-reaching, sanguinary conflict is on. Every support, financial, moral, sentimental, should be freely and eagerly given. Art is great, but life and liberty are greater."

The rest of his letter is:

"Since I have been referred to in the Traveler as having made various statements as to patriotic duty in connection with the management and director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and because some of these purported quotations and rumors do not represent my attitude in the matter, I would like to define my position.

"This nation is in a crisis in her history. I realized it more than ever when I addressed the soldiers at Camp Devens last night. Hundreds of thousands of the very flower of American youth are called to represent this nation in this crisis, even to the extent of sacrificing their lives if need be. Everything that public spirited men and women can do to inspire our national army for its great task should be done. By word and attitude and act we should create a very Amazon of public sentiment which will sweep our national army on to victory.

"The fact is, I have made no public utterance whatever designating by name the leader of any of our great musical organizations. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is an institution of which every Bostonian should be proud. I have been, and shall continue to be, a patron of it. I have the highest appreciation of the men who have made possible such a marvelous combination of musical talent. I am also a great admirer of the phenomenal ability of its director. While I do not believe that the playing of our national anthem would in the slightest degree be inconsonant, yet it has not appealed to me as sufficiently important in this connection to make it an issue. The national anthem is an expression of a word which at this time has unusual significance, namely—Loyalty. I have no doubt but what the American people in every part of our fair land would appreciate it as a gracious act for every great musical organization to prelude its concerts with our national anthem during the war. Nor would any musical program suffer thereby. The thing about which I have been insistent, and feel keenly, is the displaying of our national colors in every building of public assemblage. In my judgment this should be a legal requirement, while our nation is at war, as an expression of patriotism and loyalty. I am gratified to see the American flag now floating from the front of Symphony Hall."

German-Americans more on the defensive than they necessarily are because this country is now at war with the one of their origin, and, as an eminent and representative German musician, he has created a distaste for German music in circles far wider than those to which that feeling otherwise would have been restricted. In other words, his indiscretion has made it harder for us to agree, as most of us would prefer to do, with his own assertion that art knows no frontiers. We still believe that, but when artists insist on being intensely and offensively national, they should not be surprised if art and its exponents are confounded in public criticism."

Editorial Comment.

In the editorial columns of the New York World today appears the following:

"But it was obvious that the question was not one of musical art so much as of patriotism. The Boston conductor's apologists have laid stress on his alien birth, one prominent New York orchestra leader pointing out that as Dr. Muck 'is a loyal citizen of Prussia it would be hypocritical for him to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" while we are war with Germany.' Dr. Muck himself in a public statement said: 'I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally, one could not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America.'

"The 'hypocrisy' involved being thus the violation of the symphony leader's loyalty to Prussia and not of his loyalty to musical art, the indicated way out of the difficulty was for him to resign. If it was unpatriotic for him to play the American national anthem, it was unpatriotic for him to accept American money in payment for his services. No doubt the controversy has had on its face some of the aspects of a tempest in a teapot. But it is from such small beginnings that serious issues arise, and it is well to have it decided before the question became more acute that patriotism is a consideration to which minor matters of musical prejudice must curtsy in a loyal nation in time of war."

The Springfield Republican says editorially today:

"After yesterday's incident in Symphony Hall it looks as though the Boston Symphony orchestra would perforce play 'The Star Spangled Banner' at its concerts. Maj. Higginson announced that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, but there would seem to be no reason for accepting the resignation, and Maj. Higginson expressed his reluctance to do so. The press of the country is talking about 'Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem,' but Dr. Muck never made any such refusal. Maj. Higginson apparently decided to yield rather than subject the orchestra to the harm which continuance of agitation might cause. The enthusiasm which greeted Dr. Muck's appearance on the stage was a clear demonstration of musical Boston's admiration of its great conductor and desire to retain his services."

Pittsburgh Ultimatum.

Pittsburgh issued the ultimatum, "Play 'The Star Spangled Banner' or keep out" to the Symphony management.

Director Charles H. Hubbard of the department of public safety of Pittsburgh said Dr. Muck will be required to furnish a program of the pieces he proposes to play when application is made for a license for the concert there. "If he refuses to comply with the patriotic regulations of the country and play 'The Star Spangled Banner' I will refuse him a permit to appear here," the director said.

In the latest edition of the Chronicle of New York issued today is printed Maj. Higginson's signed elucidation of Dr. Karl Muck's resignation. The Chronicle says:

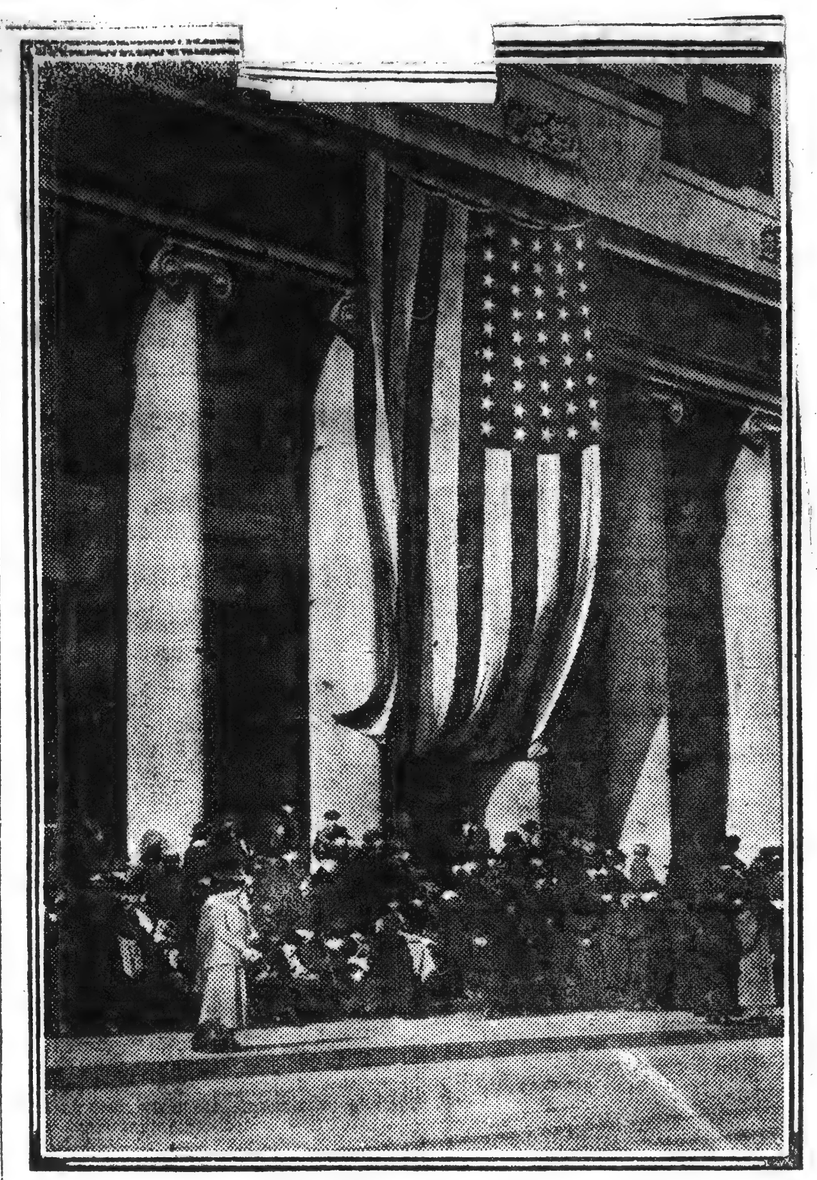
"Dr. Karl Muck, who bears the title, Koniglich Preussicher General-musikdirektor, conferred on him by the Kaiser, and at present the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has become the storm centre of Boston. Numerous subscribers there are in revolt against Dr. Muck's further incumbency of his position because of his connection with the land of our enemy. These revolutionaries announce a most definite plan of action. Either they will fail to renew their subscription or else subscribe and withhold their attendance. Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the fountain head of inspiration and administration of the Boston Symphony for many years, is supporting Dr. Muck against his opponents. But even the adherence of a man as eminent as Mr. Higginson has not quelled the dissenting voices of the music-loving Bostonians.

"Great courtesy prompted Mr. Higginson to send the following elucidation of the Boston Symphony affair to the Chronicle:

"'The orchestra embraces about 12 nationalities, and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time, should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?

"'Sundry falsehoods have been spread in order to hurt the orchestra, and to please whom? The orchestra has been built up through many years to give art and pleasure to people throughout the land. The best way to destroy it is to spread lies about it. The best way to keep it fine is to regard it as an art institution and nothing more.

"'Such are my views. Yours very truly, (Signed) H. L. HIGGINSON.'"



Symphony Hall Flies the National Colors

The United States flag now displayed on Symphony Hall and a part of the audience that attended yesterday afternoon's memorable concert by the Symphony orchestra.

Maj. Higginson's Statement.

At the conclusion of yesterday's concert Dr. Muck said: "I hardly know what to think. It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my seven years' connection with this orchestra. I have done by best today."

In further explanation, Maj. Higginson said:

"Above all things I want Dr. Muck exonerated of that false charge circulated by some of the papers that he refused to play the national anthem.

"If the public wants to throw any stones, let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me.

"And now I hope that this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem."

Report Home Searched.

According to today's New York Tribune Dr. Muck's home in Maine was searched last summer by federal agents. It is said that since the war began he has received many letters threatening death.

The New York Times says, editorially, today:

"As it is, he (Dr. Muck) has put all

"The Chronicle has always maintained that during our life and death struggle against German autocracy, "he who is noth with us is against us." Persisting in this inviolate principle, it is clear that even art must stand aside. The necessity of national unity precludes any conflicting interest. Dr. Muck's silence and political inactivity are tactful—that is all. He inflicts on us no hypocritical affirmation of loyalty, and for that one must be respectfully grateful. On the other hand, Dr. Muck is protected by and supported by this country at the present moment. In return for these advantages of safety and prosperity he, as well as every other German-born person, owes to the United States genuine fidelity, or else emigration to a neutral land. Art must not be used as the Germans have used civilians, as a shield against their enemies. And why is it forever insisted that there is no art in music save German art? Why are we hoodwinked into believing that none can lead a great orchestra except a Teuton? What is this except propaganda?"

RESIGNATION OF DR. MUCK IS OFFERED

RECORD Nov 2

Symphony Leader Would Quit

Action Follows National Anthem Row—Not Accepted Yet

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has placed his resignation in the hands of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra.

This action was taken by Dr. Muck as a result of the controversy over his alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert given in Providence a few nights ago.

This announcement, which is bound to create a sensation in the musical world, was made this afternoon at the regular Symphony concert by Maj. Higginson. He made the announcement just before the concert started.

When Maj. Higginson came on the stage he was greeted with applause from the audience, which was largely composed of women.

Anthem Is Played

"The Star Spangled Banner" was played at the end of the regular program, with Dr. Muck conducting it. It was stated that the anthem will be played at all concerts to follow.

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the National Anthem," said Maj. Higginson to the audience, " and they have never refused my request. Dr. Muck has placed in my hands his resignation. The matter wil be given my earnest atention."

Dr. Muck then came on the stage and was also greeted with roars of applause. He bowed and, taking his baton, started the concert.

The American flag is now draped over the main entrance to Symphony Hall and will remain there permanently. Business Manager Charles A. Ellis said that there had been an American flag at the hall during the past summer, but he didn't know the particular location of it.

(Continued on Page Six, Column Eight)

When informed that it was now draped over the main entrance, he said: "That's the proper place for it, and it will remain there permanently."

Loss Would Be Disaster

Maj. Higginson's statement in full was:—

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

37
Monitor
Nov. 2, 1917-

SYMPHONY PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Led by Dr. Karl Muck, Orchestra Gives Air as Final Number—Conductor Said to Have Never Had Chance to Refuse

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the regular Friday concert this afternoon. It wil lalso be played at every concert in every city where the orchestra appears.

An announcement in the program book to the effect that this air would be the last number on the program put a quietus on the discussion which has been widespread since a request that it be played at the regular concert of the orchestra at Providence, R. I., on Tuesday night was disregarded. The request, signed by certain women of Providence, was telegraphed to C. A. Ellis, manager of the archestra. Controversy sprang up though, as one of the officials of Symphony Hall pointed out this afternoon, Dr. Muck had never had a chance to refuse to conduct the piece.

Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and sustainer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, addressed the audience at Symphony Hall this afternoon before the fourth concert of the season began. The people in the house rose when Major Higginson appeared on the platform and remained standing while he spoke. He said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen:

"I ask a few words with you this afternoon. I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the national anthem at the concert today, and they have complied (Applause). And I will say in regard to the matter of performing the piece, that they have never refused (Applause).

"Last spring I asked Dr. Muck to remain in charge of the orchestra, considering him essential to the success of the Symphony concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any feeling which may be entertained against him may in any way prejudice the orchestra. But I have always thought that to lose him would be a disaster." (Applause)

"Therefore the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Anthem to Be Required Hereafter

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert in this city Tuesday was formally brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen yesterday afternoon.

A resolution was adopted requesting the Police Commission to require, as a condition to the granting of any licenses for an entertainment in this city, that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played or sung.

Thursday afternoon the Chamber of Commerce sent a letter to the police commissioners asking them to refuse further concert permits to any organization conducted by "one Dr. Karl Muck."

The Chaminade Club also took similar action.

Herald, Nov. 3, 1917-

SYMPHONY'S 4TH CONCERT

Works by Sibelius, Saint-Saens and Beethoven Make up the Program.

DR. KARL MUCK CONDUCTOR

By PHILIP HALE.

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Sibelius, Symphony No. 4; Saint-Saens, Piano Concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Frances Nash pianist); Beethoven, Leonore overture No. 3.

Orchestra and audience were seated when Maj. Higginson appeared on the platform. The audience rose, welcomed him heartily and heard him with almost painful attention. His remarks, which were made with evident feeling, are printed elsewhere in this issue of the Boston Herald and Journal. When Dr. Muck came on the platform to conduct the symphony, the applause was fervent and long-continued, the most impressive tribute that has been paid to any conductor in Symphony Hall.

The symphony of Sibelius was played here three years ago this month. When it was first performed here—the year before—it was a stumbling block to many of us; nor did a second hearing put some of us at ease with it. There are writers who insist that the greater part of the Finn's more important music owes the peculiar grimness and wildness to the influence of scenery and climate. Buckle would gladly have accepted this theory. Others have had something to say about Sibelius voicing the sullen revolt of his people against Russian oppression. And there are others that dilate on the inherent melancholy of the man, not knowing him personally. Thus there are explanations; some of them almost apologetic.

Sibelius in the flesh is not a Dismal Jemmy; he is dignified, versed in the ways of the world, not a child of nature as Dvorak was; he impressed those that met him in this city as a robust man, physically and mentally. His musical education was not confined to the conservatory at Helsingfors; he studied in Berlin and Vienna. In Finland an annuity granted by the government gave him ample time for composition. It is not dire poverty that gives a peculiar character to his music.

He has said that nature has been to him the book of books. "The voices of nature are the voices of God, and if an artist can give a mere echo of them in his creations, he is fully rewarded for all his efforts."

But the landscape is in the mind, as in the eye, of the beholder. The "voices of nature" are in his soul as in his ears. The smile of a summer sunlit scene may be to one ironical, by reason of association or a tempest raging within him. And so a desolate, wind-swept moor may be to another as the Vale of Cashmere. Egdon Heath was not so significant to the men and women wandering on it as it was to Thomas Hardy, imagining the tragedy of Clym Yeobright and Eustacia Vye.

Let it, then, be taken for granted that Sibelius in this symphony, as in other important works not inspired by the legends of the Finnish epic, expresses Nature as seen, heard and felt by him in Finland. The question remains, whether his musical mood and expression are severely national; whether they appeal to hearers of other lands by the beauty, power and nobility of the music. It does not seem to us that in thematic invention, in the nature of the development, in the general structure of the movements, this symphony is so imposing as the first and second. After several hearings, the first movement still seems vague, without irresistible purport, nor is the Scherzo convincing, wholly to the point; but there are eloquent pages in the slow movement and fascinating passages in the Finale. We are not disconcerted by the wild dissonances, by curious mixtures of timbres, by measures that to some may seem reckless cacophony. Nor do we find the idiom of the symphonic speech a very wide departure from that of the first and second symphonies and the violin concerto. The voice is still that of Sibelius, though the inflections are now and then different, though mannerisms may at times choke the flow of speech or cause surprise. Concerning the sincerity of the man there can be no doubt. He does not trim his sails to catch the breeze of popular favor.

Saint-Saens' concerto in G minor is characterized by elegance, logic and fine taste. As the story goes, Rubinstein proposed to Saint-Saens that they should give a concert together. Saint-Saens replied: "Very well, I'll write a concerto for it." It is said that the [illegible] was written in 17 days; no [illegible] main ideas had long been in [illegible] The music shows the assurance nature of the composer. [illegible]re are pages after the manner of [illegible]ch with modern touches; there are pages in Mendelssohn's vein. A sparkling, brilliant concerto, one, however, that does not call for any display of emotion on the part of the pianist; one that does not make a demand on the higher interpretative ability.

In the performance of this concerto, the first requisite is incisive rhythm. Miss Nash's rhythm was not clearly defined; nor was her mechanism faultless; runs were sometimes smeared, especially at their end, so that there was a scramble to join the orchestral chord. Her performance was too often amateurish.

Record, Nov. 3, 1917

Should Dr. Muck Go?

Major Higginson announced yesterday that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of our Symphony Orchestra, had offered his resignation, and that "the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration." He added, what many must agree, that "to lose him would be a disaster."

We are informed on what appears to be good authority that there is no fact known to Dr. Muck's discredit, in reference to his status in this country under present circumstances—except that he is a German, and has been high in the Kaiser's favor. Is this sufficient to turn him out?

Of Dr. Muck's excellence as a leader of the orchestra it is superfluous to speak. That his position here and now is delicate and difficult can be believed. It is not easy for any American now to see things from Dr. Muck's point of view, for he has been much honored by the Kaiser, for whom we cannot have high regard. We must believe that to Dr. Muck the Kaiser appears quite differently. Thus his difficulty is two-fold. To his feeling in regard to his native land is added the personal association with that land's ruler, about the most unpopular man in American minds today.

Dr. Muck first came here to lead our Symphony Orchestra in 1906, being granted a leave of absence from the Berlin Imperial Opera House, where he was conductor from 1892 to 1912. He led our orchestra from 1906 to 1908. He returned here in 1912, and has remained since. Before coming here he had been conductor at Zurich in 1881; Salzburg, '82; Brunn, '82-'84; Graz, '84-'86; Prag, '86-'92; then Berlin, and Boston. He has conducted "Parsifal" at the Bayreuth festivals since 1900. He has also served as guest conductor at Vienna, London, Paris, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Madrid, etc. The Kaiser in 1908 gave him the title of "Koeniglich preussicher Generalmusikdirektor."

He has raised the Symphony Orchestra to its highest level. Shall he stay?

MONITOR
NOV. 3, 1917

SYMPHONY PLANS FOR REGULAR TRIP

Maj. Henry L. Higginson Gives No Information as to What Course He Intends to Pursue on Dr. Muck's Resignation

No intimation has come from Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and sustainer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as to what course he intends to pursue eventually with regard to the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, placed in his hands to relieve the institution of any embarrassment because the director is a citizen of an enemy country.

In the meantime, however, the orchestra will leave as usual on Sunday for its regular trip, which will include Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, New York, Brooklyn and a second New York appearance. Preparations for the next Boston program likewise are going forward as usual, though the program has not yet been announced.

In a newspaper interview Major Higginson emphasizes the statement which he made before the audience at the Friday concert of the orchestra when he announced that "The Star Spangled Banner" would be played, to the effect that Dr. Muck had never refused to play the air. Mr. Higginson said:

"About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon the message from those ladies in Providence asking that the national anthem be played at their Tuesday night concert was received. Mr. Ellis and I were together when it came. I ordered Mr. Ellis to stop the sale of tickets in Providence and do nothing at that late hour to change the program, which had been made up and rehearsed. Tuesday evening Mr. Ellis and I went to Providence. Dr. Muck went down with the orchestra.

Herald Nov. 3, 1917-

DR. KARL MUCK

The national anthem was played yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck conducted it. The management announces that the anthem will be performed this season at every concert of the orchestra here and in other cities. Maj. Higginson has stated that neither Dr. Muck nor the orchestra refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, that the management refused for reasons that then and there seemed sufficient to it, but not from any lack of patriotism.

It is not necessary to discuss the question whether repeated performances of the national anthem at classical concerts will fan the flame of patriotism or further the cause of the allies. The question is this: Will the superb orchestra, whose reputation is international, be disbanded on account of Dr. Muck's resignation? Dr. Muck put his resignation in Maj. Higginson's hands that the founder and maintainer ot the orchestra might not be embarrassed in future action. As Maj. Higginson said yesterday, Dr. Muck's withdrawal from the position of conductor would be a disaster. The word "disaster" is not too strong.

Under his leadership the Symphony concerts have reached a degree of brilliancy that is unequalled in this country or in any country where music is heard. This is not an extravagant statement. All visiting foreign artists will gladly bear testimony to its truth. It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others. Dr. Muck has been placed in a most trying position. He is leading players of many different nationalities, yet since the war broke out, the orchestra has been composed of men united in an artistic purpose. He is conducting in a country that is at war with Germany.

Many foolish, many false statements have been made about him. He has borne himself with dignity; he has busied himself only with music. The most searching governmental investigators have declared him blameless in his behavior as a foreign resident. That the great audience of the Symphony concerts holds him in the highest esteem was shown by the unparalleled tribute paid to him yesterday.

There is another question to be answered: Will the general public forget the great debt it owes to Maj. Higginson, whose princely generosity and love of art have given to Boston an orchestra that has made the city famous throughout the musical world? No one doubts his patriotism. Is this the time to repudiate the debt? Is this the time to undo the work of many years? Other cities envy Boston its orchestra and its present leader. Will Boston deliberately destroy an institution of which it has long been justly proud?

Some of the Symphony critics seem to think that Shakespeare charged fitness for treasons, strategems and spoils on the man that hath music in his soul.

MONITOR
(CONTINUED)

"Dr. Muck never knew that a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of that request until they reached Boston.

"It was I who gave the order to stop selling tickets in Providence and to do nothing about changing the program. We didn't have the music. There had been no rehearsal of the piece.

"Above all things I want Dr. Muck exonerated of that false charge circulated by some of the papers that he refused to play the national anthem. If the public wants to throw any stones let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. And now I hope that this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and he has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem."

TRAVELER, NOV. 2, 1917-

38

Stars and Stripes Once More Displayed at Symphony Hall

Traveler Nov. 2

Management Declares Flag of Nation Is to Be Permanently Displayed at Hall—Anthem Agitation Continues.

While the controversy progresses as to whether "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the stars and stripes now adorn Symphony Hall, the home of the organization.

Following the declaration of the Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management yesterday draped a large one over the main entrance. Business Manager Charles A. Ellis said that the flag will remain there permanently.

It is believed that the order to display the flag came from Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and financial backer of the orchestra. When told by a Traveler reporter a few days ago of Dr. Conrad's remarks the major said that he did not know whether a flag was displayed at the hall.

Causes Favorable Comment.

Mr. Ellis said there had been a United States flag at the hall during the past summer, but he could not recall the location of it. There is no flagstaff on the building.

Many persons who passed the hall today commented upon the appearance of the flag. They thought it good form to have it displayed after the unfavorabl notoriety of the past few days and sev eral expressed the hope that the mar agement would decide to have the na tional anthem played at concerts in th future, even should it be necessary t have Dr. Muck relinquish the baton t an assistant.

It is unlikely that Dr. Muck will lea the orchestra in playing the national air He says it will not be played at Car negie Hall, New York, at next Thurs day's performance. Those close to th leader believe he will persist in hi stand and will not include the anthen in any regular symphony concert. He does not consider "The Star Spangled Banner" artistic and feels that it has no place in program of "real" music Neither does he think that he should bow to public opinion even at such a time as this.

Providence Still Angry.

Maj. Higginson does not interfere with the programs—he leaves them to Dr Muck. Indications are that he will no interfere.

The Providence board of aldermen has unanimously adopted a resolution requesting the police commission to refuse permits for any concerts in that city unless it is agreed beforehand that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played or sung. This came as a result of the refusal of the Symphony Orchestra to play the national anthem at Tuesday's concert.

"I want to go on record, and I know every one of us here wants to go on record, as approving such action by the board of police commissioners," said Alpatriotic sentiment of all Rhode Island, the undersigned officers, acting in behalf of the war council of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, hereby request your honorable body to refuse permission for the Boston Symphony orchestra, or any other orchestra or band, to give concerts in the city of Providence when conducted by one 'Dr. Karl Muck.'"

(Continued on Page Six, Column 3.)

Ban on Concerts.

The Chaminade and Schubert clubs and Thomas W. Connell post 45, U. S. Veterans of Foreign Service, of Providence passed resolutions either condemning the orchestra or declaring that their members will not patronize organizations that do not play the anthem. During his talk on "Food Conservation and Patriotism" before members of the Chaminade Club, Col. H. Anthony Dyer said that one of the worst things in the United States today is the "German music propaganda," in which Germany is painted "as the home of the soul of music." He pictured Dr. Muck as reporting his success to the German ruler as follows: "Hon. Kaiser, I have done your work. I have carried out my work in the name of art and gotten away with it." Of Maj. Higginson's stand he said it would be better to have Symphony Hall closed and burned rather than permit things to continue as at present. He declared that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be at the head of every program at the present time.

Editorial View.

In today's issue of the Providence Journal appears the following editorial:

"Maj. Higginson's decision that the Boston Symphony orchestra shall not again appear in Providence offers a satisfactory solution of the matter, so far as this community is concerned. It will, indeed, be greeted with enthusiasm by every citizen who resents the contemptuous flouting of patriotism and propriety by those in charge of the famous musical organization.

"At the same time, Maj. Higginson should understand that, irrespective of his decision, the people of Providence and Rhode Island would under no condition tolerate the future appearance of the orchestra here, so long as Dr. Muck continues in the post of conductor.

"The place of that insolent German music master is not on an American concert stage, but in an internment camp, under strict guard."

Up to noon today Mayor Curley had not ordered the singing of the national air at this afternoon's concert by the orchestra in Symphony Hall. There was only one German number on today's program—Beethoven's overture, "Leonora" No. 3. Other numbers were Sibelius's Fourth Symphony in A-minor and Saint-Saens's concerto in G-minor for piano and orchestra. Frances Nash was soloist. It had been rumored that the mayor would order the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

As to Carnegie Hall.

If Dr. Muck does not change his mind and play the national air at Carnegie Hall, New York, next Thursday the management of the orchestra may find it necessary to secure another hall.

C. C. Smith, administrative manager of Carnegie Hall, was asked whether he would permit Dr. Muck to use the hall next week if he persisted in his stand. He said the Boston Symphony Orchestra had already signed a lease for the hall for 10 concerts, that all the seats had been sold for the series, and therefore it would be difficult to act against him. No action will be taken before Thursday, he said, but if Dr. Muck refuses to play the national anthem at the opening concert the board of directors of Carnegie Hall may then take action.

Musical Calamity.

According to the terms of the contract between the Boston Symphony orchestra and Carnegie Hall the management has the legal right to step in if anything happens during a performance which brings discredit on the hall. Requests that their money be returned came from several subscribers yesterday, after Dr. Muck's attitude toward "The Star Spangled Banner" became known.

At the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where the orchestra is scheduled to open a series of five concerts, Charles D. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the concerts will be given, expressed disapproval of the stand taken by Dr. Muck.

"In view of the present prevailing American sentiment," said Mr. Atkins, "I hope Dr. Muck will play the national anthem at his concerts in Brooklyn. He surely ought to. As for giving up the concerts, that would be a musical calamity." It was learned that the board of trustees of the institute will meet Thursday night, and may act unless Dr. Muck recedes.

Views of Walter Damrosch.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, commenting on the situation, said:

"Dr. Muck is a citizen of Prussia, and is over here not because of his own desire, but because of the wishes of Mr. Higginson, who is the founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It would be to my mind hypocritical of Dr. Muck to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country while we are at war with Germany. Nor should we expect him to do it. He might easily let an assistant director lead when it is played.

"But, on the other hand, his reasons seem foolish to me, or else he is purposely confusing the issue. 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is not played in our country at the present time because it is a work of art, but because it is the symbol of the loyalty and patriotism of our people in the time of war.

"Dr. Muck's argument that this might produce quarrels among the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because they belong to so many different nationalities does not hold, because this mixture of races exists in every one of our symphony orchestras. But as these players have lived here for a long time, have earned their bread and butter here and are being protected by the American flag, and, furthermore, as many of them are naturalized citizens, there is no earthly reason why they should not be glad occasionally to play our national anthem."

Tour Next Week.

The orchestra makes its first southern trip next week, playing in Philadelhpia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening. D. Muck is playing Beethoven's C-Minor Symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's Fourth in Washington, Brahms's Fourth in Baltimore, Brahms's Fourth and Beethoven's Fifth in New York, and Schaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the program are chosen from the shorter pieces played at the first tourn concerts in Boston.

With the exception of a short overture by Hector Berlioz the New York program is devoted entirely to Geman composers.

Dr. Muck's pro-Germanism is not denied. He was born at Darmstadt, Germany, and educated at Heidelburg and Leipsig. He conducted the Kaiser's opera in Berlin, Bavreuth and other German cities. The Kaiser, in 1908, conferred upon him the title of "King's Prussian General Musical Director."

Metropolitan May Bar German Operas

NEW YORK, Nov. 2—The Metropolitan will bar German opera this winter. Although the tentative program for the season includes the works of some German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the decision that the company will produce no opera which might be calculated to have a bad political effect or which might create the impression abroad that there was the slightest appearance of sympathy for the German cause.

This announcement, however, was not made officially, and Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors refused to make any statement in regard ot the matter. It was intimated that the decision of the board of directors had no connection with the controversy over the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence.

AMERICAN FLAG AGAIN WAVES AT SYMPHONY HALL

(Continued from Page One.)

derman Clayton A. Ballou in presenting the measure. "The crisis confronting this nation is too serious to permit those who are unfriendly to our cause to go their way untroubled, unless their way is our way."

At Mr. Ballou's request the vote was by roll call, which put each alderman on the board's records as favoring the resolution, the text of which was as follows:

"Resolved, That the board of police commissioners be and they hereby are requested to require the person making application for a license to conduct any musical entertainment in any public place or hall, in the city of Providence, to agree, as a condition precedent to the granting of such license, that 'The Star Spangled Banner' shall be played or sung during the course of the entertainment for which such license is granted."

Women Still Insist.

Women representing prominent Providence clubs who signed the request made of Manager C. A. Ellis that the national anthem be played at the concert Tuesday evening sent a request to the Providence police commissioners last evening. They request that the American flag be placed in every public hall, theatre and place of amusement in the city. They also request that no licenses be granted to any artist or organization which refuses to participate in either singing or playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Many Rhode Island organizations have acted upon what they consider to be a deliberate affront to the patriotism of the people of this city and state, not only because of the failure to play the national anthem, but also because of the character of the music which was played, with Geraldine Farrar, the soloist, singing two groups of songs in German.

Geraldine Farrar Yields.

Despite her alleged pro-German sympathies, Miss Farrar consented to sing the "Star Spangled Banner" last night at Haverhill before an audience of 1500 persons in Colonial Theatre. It was the feature of the concert. She sang the air in English, the audience standing. Her regular program consisted of French, Italian and German songs.

When it became known that Mme. Farrar was to sing at Haverhill Rev. James Malcolm-Smith, recor of Trinity Episcopal Church, asked Mayor Morse to request Mme. Farrar to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" in English before the close of the performance.

Business Men Take Action.

Officials of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, acting upon behalf of the war council of the chamber, sent a letter to the police commissioners asking them to refuse further concert permits to any organization conducted by "one Dr. Karl Muck." The letter is signed by Henry A. Carpenter, chairman; William A. Viall and Oscar Swanson, vice-chairmen, and Clarence A. Cotton, secretary, and is in part as follows:

"Believing that we voice the unanimous

Music and War

Sympathy for Dr. Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star Spangled Banner," must give place to heart-felt commiseration of the many sensitive and nerve-racked virtuosi in the gifted organization for whom he speaks.

The doctor finds that the National Anthem of the United Statse is not in harmony with his program. Nevertheless, if he were back in Germany, where war is considered if not a symphony at least the highest expression of art, we have no doubt that Dr. Muck and most of his artists, if invited to render that great classic "Deutschland uber Alles," would find that it was in perfect accord not only with their atistic tastes and temperaments but with their physical and financial welfare.—New York World of Today.

3:9

Ed. Nov. 3, 1917

THE BOSTON GLOBE-

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS ANTHEM

"Star Spangled Banner" to Be Given at All Concerts

Dr Karl Muck Conducted It—Ready To Resign if Need Be

Art bowed to patriotism in Symphony Hall yesterday, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time this season, closed its regular rehearsal by playing "The Star Spangled Banner," while Dr Karl Muck conducted.

While many persons had believed that Dr Muck, because of his German allegiance, was unwilling to direct the playing of the National anthem, they were even less prepared for the announcement made before the concert by Maj Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the orchestra, that Dr Muck had handed him his resignation.

Mr Higginson stated that Dr Muck did not wish the welfare of the orchestra to be prejudiced by any personal feeling against him. Maj Higginson indicated that he has not yet decided whether he will accept the resignation or not.

"To lose Dr Muck would be a disaster," he said.

The audience of 2600 persons, standing, applauded the major at intervals during his address. Saying he would consider Dr Muck's resignation seriously, he turned and walked back to the piano, awaiting there the conductor's entrance. When Dr Muck appeared, he shook hands with Maj Higginson and mounted the stand, twice turning about to acknowledge the applause from the audience.

Looking toward the major and receiving his signal, Dr Muck raised his baton and began the fourth symphony of Sibelius, with which the program opened. Maj Higginson stood in the same position for a few moments after the orchestra had begun to play, then left the platform.

At All Future Concerts

Maj Higginson authorized the statement that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at all future concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, whether here or in other cities.

This announcement was the climax of a public discontent which reached its pinnacle after Tuesday evening's concert in Providence, where the orchestra did not play the anthem, although a request for it had previously been sent to the management by prominent Providence residents.

This resulted in the Rhode Island Council of Defense urging the authorities of the city to debar the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future unless its program should include the National anthem, and it was said that a Department of Justice agent would make a detailed report to Washington and recommend that the orchestra be prevented from playing in other cities unless it plays the patriotic selection.

On the following day Maj Higginson granted to newspapermen an interview in which he defended the stand his orchestra had taken, and argued that "The Star Spangled Banner" has no place in an art program such as is given by the Symphony at its Winter concerts. He made it known that he had received many letters of criticism, some of them anonymous, but added that the criticisms came from persons who do not attend the concerts.

Dr Muck himself was quoted in a published interview as saying that the National anthem would not be played at [illegible] York concerts next week, when [illegible] starts on tour. This statement caused popular resentment in [illegible] city.

But it was played yesterday, and played well, while the Stars and Stripes floated from a staff on Symphony Hall, and 2600 persons, mainly women, arose and clapped, while many joined in the air and sang the first verse. Dr Muck gave his customary bow near the piano and hurried from the stage.

The first announcement to patrons that the hymn would be played came when they opened their programs, in each of which a sticker, pasted in after the program was printed, stating: "The National anthem will be played as the closing number of the program."

Maj Higginson's appearance on the stage prefaced the concert. He said:

Have Never Refused to Play

"I have asked Dr Muck and the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last Spring, at my earnest request, Dr Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Should Dr Muck's resignation be accepted, it may mean the dismissal of the entire Symphony Orchestra, the best in this country and probably in the world. Mr Higginson stated definitely on Wednesday that "when Dr Muck goes, the orchestra will go." In that event, he added, Symphony Hall, which means to him an annual loss of $13,000 to $18,000 might be sold.

Mr Higginson was the organizer of the orchestra and has been its main supporter more than 30 years.

Mayor Curley yesterday instructed John H. Casey, licensing clerk, to take up the matter with the Law Department and ascertain what steps could be taken in the event of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

The Mayor was pleased last night when he learned that the National anthem had been played by the orchestra and said: "In this world's crisis it is better to sacrifice art to patriotism."

Should Maj Henry L. Higginson decline to accept the resignation of Dr Karl Muck there will be widespread interest in the attitude of the public towards him in cities where Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play within the next two weeks.

The earliest dates are Washington, D C, Nov 6; Carnegie Hall, New York city, Nov 11 and Baltimore, Nov 14. The New York Symphony Orchestra is said to have been playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts without any suggestion from outside.

Dr Muck Here Since 1906

When Dr Muck was engaged by Maj Higginson in the Summer of 1906 to be conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated that he came on leave of absence for one year, "by special permission of Kaiser William II," as he was at that time conductor at the Royal Opera House in Berlin. His service in Boston began Oct 1 that year.

He was in Berlin on a vacation at the outbreak of the European war, three years ago, and for a few weeks prior to leaving for this country to take up his season's work, he was obliged to do clerical work in the Berlin War Office.

Dr Muck was born in Darmstadt, Ger, in 1859, studied philosophy at Leipsic and Heidelberg, receiving his doctor's degree at the latter university. He was musical conductor successively in the Austrian cities of Salzburg, Brunn, Gratz and Prague. From 1892 till he came to this country, 14 years later, he was at the Royal Opera House in Berlin.

SAYS DR MUCK NOT TO BE TOLERATED IN BALTIMORE

BALTIMORE, Nov 2—Before news of Dr Muck's proffered resignation had been received in Baltimore, Ex-Gov Edwin Warfield appeared today before the Police Commissioners and said that if "Dr Muck and his associates were to carry out their program in this city they would meet with resentment in no uncertain way by patriotic people.

"You can rest assured," he continued, "that Marylanders will not tolerate the presence of Dr Muck and that serious trouble will ensue if he comes here with his orchestra." Mr Warfield said he felt "deeply outraged."

Harold Randolph, conductor of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, said: "We are all now turning more and more eagerly toward music as the one respite from the torturing thoughts of war, and for God's sake let us try to preserve to ourselves this haven of refuge or we shall go mad."

Prof Randolph expressed the hope that the famous orchestra would be preserved.

Mr Warfield, when told tonight that Dr Muck and Boston Symphony would play "The Star Spangled Banner" here at the concert next week, Wednesday night, said "This does not atone for the insult Dr Muck offered the people of Baltimore. There is no antagonism to the orchestra; there is antagonism to Muck."

MUST PLAY ANTHEM IN NEW YORK OR CONCERT PREVENTED

NEW YORK, Nov 2—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from giving its concert here next Thursday unless Dr Karl Muck agreed to play "The Star Spangled Banner" had been taken, under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to the word from Boston of Muck's proffered resignation.

The Mayor directed the License Commissioner to study the law on the point, and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

ANTHEMS AT ALL CONCERTS BY MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn, Nov 2—The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra is opening every concert this season with "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and closing with "The Star Spangled Banner." The musicians stand, the audience stands and Emil Oberhoffer, German-born conductor, leads in the singing and playing. The orchestra, which is made up of men of all warring races with preponderance of German birth, subscribed $18,000 to the second Liberty Loan.

PITTSBURG G. A. R. LEADER FAVORS INTERNING MUCK

PITTSBURG, Nov 2—Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to appear here Jan 30, will be invited to stay away because of his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence. Former Adjt Gen H. H. Bengough, a G. A. R. leader, says Pittsburg is too big a place for Muck, who, in his opinion, should be interned.

Director Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety says Dr Muck will be required, if he comes here, to furnish a program of his concert, and if it does not contain "The Star Spangled Banner" the permit will be refused.

Globe (continued)

PROVIDENCE TO HAVE ANTHEM AND BANNER AT AMUSEMENTS

PROVIDENCE, Nov 2—Rules compelling the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" at all concerts and other amusement places of similar nature, including theatres, and the presence of the American Flag in every place of amusement, were today adopted by the Police Commissioners in response to the city-wide protest against the failure of Dr Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the National air at Infantry Hall Tuesday evening.

An applicant for a license must now show on the sample program submitted to the board through the amusement inspector that "The Star Spangled Banner" is a part of the program.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE PROBING DR MUCK CASE

WASHINGTON, Nov 2—While officials of the Department of Justice have not been informed today of the action of Dr Karl Muck in offering to resign as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the investigation ordered by them has not been discontinued.

What the Government officials are endeavoring to find out is whether or not Dr Muck has been guilty of disloyalty, even though he may claim allegiance to Germany. Should the facts warrant it, it is probable that Dr Muck will be interned at one of the detention camps during the period of the war.

Lieut William H. Santelmann, leader of the United States Marine Band, who was born in Germany, said today that "The Star Spangled Banner" is good enough for any musical program. "The National anthem," he declared, "has a rightful place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted. The National anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic it might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church, and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is booked here for next Tuesday night.

Samuel Heron, Gas Poison Victim

Samuel Heron, aged 80, of 4 Drew pl, Roxbury, is in a dangerous condition at the City Hospital from gas poisoning, caused when the pipe connecting a gas heater with the jet became severed early last night at his home. Physicians fear his age may prevent his recovery.

ADVERTISER - NOV. 3, 1917 -

GLOBE ~ NOV. 3, 1917 ~

A HAPPY FINALE

Dr. Muck has met an embarrassing situation in the one way which disarms criticism and places American music lovers more than ever in his debt. We join in the general hope that Maj. Higginson will decline to accept the proffered resignation, that Dr. Muck will continue indefinitely in the post which he so capably fills and that the tempest which has arisen will abate and leave no ill remembrances.

From a number of letters which came to us prior to the announcement of the doctor's action we desire to make one pertinent quotation. Catherine W. Faucon writes:—

> The Boston Symphony Orchestra is made up of many nationalities, even outside of Europe. They are artists who, through long association and a wonderful technique, are giving to us Americans the very finest productions of their art. Their work is matchless. Imagine, for a moment, what would be lost to thousands if they should disband. Something of great beauty and inspiration would be lost from our world that could never be replaced. When the great war began, many of the orchestra were in Europe; yet at the call of their contracts they returned to Boston, subordinated their racial differences and went straight on with their work, in a world discord giving us magnificent harmonies. I know that there is at least one Belgian in that orchestra. If he is big enough to make a part of that great harmony, let us not be small enough to turn it into a great discord. Let us be big and broad and sane.

We believe that this is the spirit of which Boston, in after years, would be most proud. Ed advertiser

A WORD FOR MAJ HIGGINSON

DURING the controversy concerning "The Star Spangled Banner" and the Boston Symphony Orchestra absurd statements have been made concerning the patriotism of Maj Henry L. Higginson. The scene in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon ought to end the regrettable incident and all disparagement of this worthy citizen of Boston.

Few men in the United States have a patriotic record equal to that of Maj Higginson. There are none whose records for faithfulness to country are superior to his.

Since June, 1863, he has carried the mark on his cheek of a wound, almost mortal, received in fighting for the Union while an officer in the 1st Massachusetts Cavalry. There has never been a moment from that day to this when Maj Higginson has not been eager to serve his country, his State and his city.

In the Liberty Loan campaigns he has been one of the leaders in the hard work of making clear to New England the imperative necessity of putting money behind the war. Had he been less active in pushing the loan the total of this Federal District would probably have been considerably lessened.

That such a man should be taunted with a lack of love for his country, or of devotion to her cause, by those whose judgment of his handling of a difficult situation differs from his, would be cruel were it not so absurd.

Henry Lee Higginson never drew one single unpatriotic breath in his life. Globe Nov 3

Ed. Nov. 3, 1917
THE BOSTON GLOBE-

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS ANTHEM

"Star Spangled Banner" to Be Given at All Concerts

Dr Karl Muck Conducted It—Ready To Resign if Need Be

Art bowed to patriotism in Symphony Hall yesterday, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time this season, closed its regular rehearsal by playing "The Star Spangled Banner," while Dr Karl Muck conducted.

While many persons had believed that Dr Muck, because of his German allegiance, was unwilling to direct the playing of the National anthem, they were even less prepared for the announcement made before the concert by Maj Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the orchestra, that Dr Muck had handed him his resignation.

Mr Higginson stated that Dr Muck did not wish the welfare of the orchestra to be prejudiced by any personal feeling against him. Maj Higginson indicated that he has not yet decided whether he will accept the resignation or not.

"To lose Dr Muck would be a disaster," he said.

The audience of 2600 persons, standing, applauded the major at intervals during his address. Saying he would consider Dr Muck's resignation seriously, he turned and walked back to the piano, awaiting there the conductor's entrance. When Dr Muck appeared, he shook hands with Maj Higginson and mounted the stand, twice turning about to acknowledge the applause from the audience.

Looking toward the major and receiving his signal, Dr Muck raised his baton and began the fourth symphony of Sibelius, with which the program opened. Maj Higginson stood in the same position for a few moments after the orchestra had begun to play, then left the platform.

At All Future Concerts

Maj Higginson authorized the statement that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at all future concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, whether here or in other cities.

This announcement was the climax of a public discontent which reached its pinnacle after Tuesday evening's concert in Providence, where the orchestra did not play the anthem, although a request for it had previously been sent to the management by prominent Providence residents.

This resulted in the Rhode Island Council of Defense urging the authorities of the city to debar the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future unless its program should include the National anthem, and it was said that a Department of Justice agent would make a detailed report to Washington and recommend that the orchestra be prevented from playing in other cities unless it plays the patriotic selection.

On the following day Maj Higginson granted to newspapermen an interview in which he defended the stand his orchestra had taken, and argued that "The Star Spangled Banner" has no place in an art program such as is given by the Symphony at its Winter concerts. He made it known that he had received many letters of criticism, some of them anonymous, but added that the criticisms came from persons who do not attend the concerts.

Dr Muck himself was quoted in a published interview as saying that the National anthem would not be played at the New York concerts next week, when the orchestra starts on tour. This statement aroused popular resentment in D C, Nov 6; Carnegie Hall, New York city, Nov 11 and Baltimore, Nov 14. The New York Symphony Orchestra is said to have been playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts without any suggestion from outside.

Dr Muck Here Since 1906

When Dr Muck was engaged by Maj Higginson in the Summer of 1906 to be conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated that he came on leave of absence for one year, "by special permission of Kaiser William II," as he was at that time conductor at the Royal Opera House in Berlin. His service in Boston began Oct 1 that year.

He was in Berlin on a vacation at the outbreak of the European war, three years ago, and for a few weeks prior to leaving for this country to take up his season's work, he was obliged to do clerical work in the Berlin War Office.

Dr Muck was born in Darmstadt, Ger, in 1859, studied philosophy at Leipsic and Heidelberg, receiving his doctor's degree at the latter university. He was musical conductor successively in the Austrian cities of Salzburg, Brunn, Gratz and Prague. From 1892 till he came to this country, 14 years later, he was at the Royal Opera House in Berlin.

SAYS DR MUCK NOT TO BE TOLERATED IN BALTIMORE

BALTIMORE, Nov 2—Before news of Dr Muck's proffered resignation had been received in Baltimore, Ex-Gov Edwin Warfield appeared today before the Police Commissioners and said that if "Dr Muck and his associates were to carry out their program in this city they would meet with resentment in no uncertain way by patriotic people.

"You can rest assured," he continued, "that Marylanders will not tolerate the presence of Dr Muck and that serious trouble will ensue if he comes here with his orchestra." Mr Warfield said he felt "deeply outraged."

Harold Randolph, conductor of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, said: "We are all now turning more and more eagerly toward music as the one respite from the torturing thoughts of war, and for God's sake let us try to preserve to ourselves this haven of refuge or we shall go mad."

Prof Randolph expressed the hope that the famous orchestra would be preserved.

Mr Warfield, when told tonight that Dr Muck and Boston Symphony would play "The Star Spangled Banner" here at the concert next week, Wednesday night, said "This does not atone for the insult Dr Muck offered the people of Baltimore. There is no antagonism to the orchestra; there is antagonism to Muck."

MUST PLAY ANTHEM IN NEW YORK OR CONCERT PREVENTED

NEW YORK, Nov 2—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from giving its concert here next Thursday unless Dr Karl Muck agreed to play "The Star Spangled Banner" had been taken, under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to the word from Boston of Muck's proffered resignation.

The Mayor directed the License Commissioner to study the law on the point, and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

ANTHEMS AT ALL CONCERTS BY MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn, Nov 2—The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra is opening every concert this season with "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and closing with "The Star Spangled Banner." The musicians stand, the audience stands and Emil Oberhoffer, German-born conductor, leads in the singing and playing. The orchestra, which is made up of men of all warring races with preponderance of German birth, subscribed $18,000 to the second Liberty Loan.

PITTSBURG G. A. R. LEADER FAVORS INTERNING MUCK

PITTSBURG, Nov 2—Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to appear here Jan 30, will be invited to stay away because of his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence. Former Adjt Gen H. H. Bengough, a G. A. R. leader, says Pittsburg is too big a place for Muck, who, in his opinion, should be interned.

Director Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety says Dr Muck will be required, if he comes here, to furnish a program of his concert, and if it does not contain "The Star Spangled Banner" the permit will be refused.

Globe (continued)

But it was played yesterday, and played well, while the Stars and Stripes floated from a staff on Symphony Hall, and 2600 persons, mainly women, arose and clapped, while many joined in the air and sang the first verse. Dr Muck gave his customary bow near the piano and hurried from the stage.

The first announcement to patrons that the hymn would be played came when they opened their programs, in each of which a sticker, pasted in after the program was printed, stating: "The National anthem will be played as the closing number of the program."

Maj Higginson's appearance on the stage prefaced the concert. He said:

Have Never Refused to Play

"I have asked Dr Muck and the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last Spring, at my earnest request, Dr Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Should Dr Muck's resignation be accepted, it may mean the dismissal of the entire Symphony Orchestra, the best in this country and probably in the world. Mr Higginson stated definitely on Wednesday that "when Dr Muck goes, the orchestra will go." In that event, he added, Symphony Hall, which means to him an annual loss of $13,000 to $18,000 might be sold.

Mr Higginson was the organizer of the orchestra and has been its main supporter more than 30 years.

Mayor Curley yesterday instructed John H. Casey, licensing clerk, to take up the matter with the Law Department and ascertain what steps could be taken in the event of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

The Mayor was pleased last night when he learned that the National anthem had been played by the orchestra and said: "In this world's crisis it is better to sacrifice art to patriotism."

Should Maj Henry L. Higginson decline to accept the resignation of Dr Karl Muck there will be widespread interest in the attitude of the public towards him in cities where Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play within the next two weeks.

The earliest dates are Washington,

PROVIDENCE TO HAVE ANTHEM AND BANNER AT AMUSEMENTS

PROVIDENCE, Nov 2—Rules compelling the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" at all concerts and other amusement places of similar nature, including theatres, and the presence of the American Flag in every place of amusement, were today adopted by the Police Commissioners in response to the city-wide protest against the failure of Dr Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the National air at Infantry Hall Tuesday evening.

An applicant for a license must now show on the sample program submitted to the board through the amusement inspector that "The Star Spangled Banner" is a part of the program.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE PROBING DR MUCK CASE

WASHINGTON, Nov 2—While officials of the Department of Justice have not been informed today of the action of Dr Karl Muck in offering to resign as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the investigation ordered by them has not been discontinued.

What the Government officials are endeavoring to find out is whether or not Dr Muck has been guilty of disloyalty, even though he may claim allegiance to Germany. Should the facts warrant it, it is probable that Dr Muck will be interned at one of the detention camps during the period of the war.

Lieut William H. Santelmann, leader of the United States Marine Band, who was born in Germany, said today that "The Star Spangled Banner" is good enough for any musical program. "The National anthem," he declared, "has a rightful place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted. The National anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic it might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church, and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is booked here for next Tuesday night.

Samuel Heron, Gas Poison Victim

Samuel Heron, aged 80, of 4 Drew pl, Roxbury, is in a dangerous condition at the City Hospital from gas poisoning, caused when the pipe connecting a gas heater with the jet became severed early last night at his home. Physicians fear his age may prevent his recovery.

ADVERTISER
- Nov. 3, 1917 -

A HAPPY FINALE

Dr. Muck has met an embarrassing situation in the one way which disarms criticism and places American music lovers more than ever in his debt. We join in the general hope that Maj. Higginson will decline to accept the proffered resignation, that Dr. Muck will continue indefinitely in the post which he so capably fills and that the tempest which has arisen will abate and leave no ill remembrances.

From a number of letters which came to us prior to the announcement of the doctor's action we desire to make one pertinent quotation. Catherine W. Faucon writes:—

> The Boston Symphony Orchestra is made up of many nationalities, even outside of Europe. They are artists who, through long association and a wonderful technique, are giving to us Americans the very finest productions of their art. Their work is matchless. Imagine, for a moment, what would be lost to thousands if they should disband. Something of great beauty and inspiration would be lost from our world that could never be replaced. When the great war began, many of the orchestra were in Europe; yet at the call of their contracts they returned to Boston, subordinated their racial differences and went straight on with their work, in a world discord giving us magnificent harmonies. I know that there is at least one Belgian in that orchestra. If he is big enough to make a part of that great harmony, let us not be small enough to turn it into a great discord. Let us be big and broad and sane.

We believe that this is the spirit of which Boston, in after years, would be most proud.

GLOBE
~ Nov. 3, 1917 ~

A WORD FOR MAJ HIGGINSON

DURING the controversy concerning "The Star Spangled Banner" and the Boston Symphony Orchestra absurd statements have been made concerning the patriotism of Maj Henry L. Higginson. The scene in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon ought to end the regrettable incident and all disparagement of this worthy citizen of Boston.

Few men in the United States have a patriotic record equal to that of Maj Higginson. There are none whose records for faithfulness to country are superior to his.

Since June, 1863, he has carried the mark on his cheek of a wound, almost mortal, received in fighting for the Union while an officer in the 1st Massachusetts Cavalry. There has never been a moment from that day to this when Maj Higginson has not been eager to serve his country, his State and his city.

In the Liberty Loan campaigns he has been one of the leaders in the hard work of making clear to New England the imperative necessity of putting money behind the war. Had he been less active in pushing the loan the total of this Federal District would probably have been considerably lessened.

That such a man should be taunted with a lack of love for his country, or of devotion to her cause, by those whose judgment of his handling of a difficult situation differs from his, would be cruel were it not so absurd.

Henry Lee Higginson never drew one single unpatriotic breath in his life.

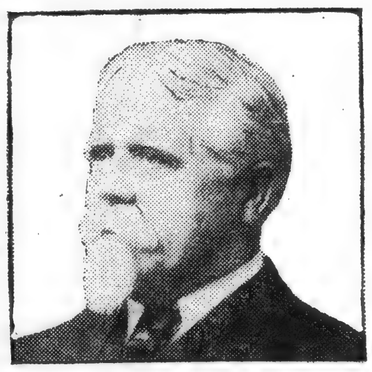
Globe Nov 3

BOSTON. GLOBE, NOV. 5, 1917

SYMPHONY HEADED FOR MORE TROUBLE

Maj Higginson Absolves Dr Muck Of Blame in Controversy

Ex-Gov Warfield Calls on Baltimore People to Keep Dr Muck From Leading Orchestra There and Makes Threat of Mob Violence



EX-GOV WARFIELD,
Maryland Man Who Is Leading Opposition to Appearance of Dr Muck in Baltimore.

In a statement sent to the Globe last night, Maj Henry L. Higginson makes it clear that Dr Muck did not refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Providence last Monday. Furthermore, Dr Muck did not know, until after the concert, that any request to play the National anthem had been made.

Threat From Baltimore

A dispatch received last night said that Ex-Gov Warfield of Maryland has arranged a big patriotic meeting for Tuesday to protest against Dr Muck leading the orchestra in Baltimore.

The statement that he would "gladly lead the mob to prevent the insult to my country and my flag" is attributed to Ex-Gov Warfield.

Dr Muck, it was said at his home last night, was out of town and it was said later at the house that he had gone to Baltimore with the Symphony Orchestra, which is scheduled to play there Wednesday night.

Maj Higginson's Statement

Maj Higginson, in his statement, said:

"In these times of great stress and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence, unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

Receives Abusive Letters

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful.

"It would seem fair that the truth should be sought and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers it would have been pleasantly considered; but does any one like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver?'

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming at the last moment from people unknown to me.

Praises Orchestra

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and women, often strangers to me, who have written or spoken in sympathy with this plan I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them —thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone."

DECLARES DR MUCK MUST NOT LEAD IN BALTIMORE

BALTIMORE, Nov 4—Ex-Gov Edwin Warfield, president of the Fidelity Trust Company, one of Baltimore's foremost citizens and financiers, has arranged a big patriotic meeting at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon to protest against Dr Muck leading the Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore Wednesday night.

"Karl Muck shall not lead an orchestra in Baltimore," he said today. "I told the Police Board members that this man would not be allowed to insult the people of the birthplace of "The Star Spangled Banner.' I told them that mob violence would prevent it, if necessary, and that I would gladly lead the mob to prevent the insult to my country and my flag. I told them that I knew of a thousand others who would gladly aid in leading the throng.

"This is a time when our Government must stand indorsed. We should not and will not tolerate any dictation as to the patriotic feeling for our flag.

"Our people have only contempt for the man who utters a criticism of the demand to play our National anthem.

"We consider it a symphony incomparable, at a time like this, greater than anything ever composed in Germany, more glorious and befitting the hearing of true Americans than the works of any composer living or dead. We deny that our anthem jars with any harmony or symphony to which the American people should listen.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' will be sung when the others are long since forgotten."

A band from Camp Meade with a guard of honor composed of 150 drafted men from Baltimore will participate in the patriotic demonstration Tuesday, which will take place in the same hall in which the Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play the following night.

Ex-Gov Warfield issued this statement tonight.

"From over the hills of Anne Arundel County, Prince George's County and others the Maryland patriots trooped to Annapolis in 1774. They were led by Dr Charles Alexander Warfield. They were not content with an apology for the presence of the Peggy Stewart, laden with her tea, in Annapolis harbor. They burned the Peggy Stewart. Dr Muck's tardy playing of 'The Star Spangled Banner' does not satisfy us. Dr Muck does not satisfy us. He must not lead an orchestra in Baltimore. Remember 1774."

Ex-Gov Edwin Warfield of Maryland, quoted as declaring that Dr Muck must not be allowed to lead the Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore, is nearly 70 years old.

He lives at "Oakdale," his ancestral home, 38 miles from Baltimore. This is in Howard County, and it was here that Gov Warfield was born and started his career, first as a school teacher and later as register of will of Howard County.

In 1881 he went to the State Senate to fill the unexpired term of Arthur P. Gorman, who was elected to the United States Senate. In 1883 he was elected to the State Senate.

In 1890 he retired from the office of Surveyor of the Port of Baltimore and retired with his wife to "Oakdale," where he appeared before the public as president of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland. Ex-Gov Warfield is still connected with and interested in that concern.

Mr Warfield was elected Governor in 1903. He has been an ardent Democrat all his life and has gained renown by always taking troubles straight to the people rather than to his political managers. He is one of the old-fashioned Southern gentlemen, a fine horseman and an all-round sportsman. He is interested not only in politics and finance but also in agriculture, and is an expert farmer.

continued →

CARUSO NOT ASHAMED TO SING AMERICAN ANTHEM

NEW YORK, Nov 4—Enrico Caruso, gay of heart and in excellent health, reached New York today from Brazil.

The celebrated tenor was so happy when setting foot on Manhattan Island that he knelt and kissed his hand to the rock-ribbed foundations upon which the city is built.

Caruso was told of the attitude of Dr Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who tendered his resignation as a result of criticism due to the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Why, I will sing the 'Star Spangled Banner;' it's good enough music for me," he said.

Caruso was then told that some have stated that the music of the National anthem was not artistic.

"Ah, art! It ought to be good enough for those who make a living in this country!

"Now, as for me, I intend to practice, for one must study hard to learn it. Of course, I know the air and I wish to impress upon you that I wouldn't be ashamed to sing it."

The situation in Italy was of great interest to Caruso. He asked for the latest news, and seemed deeply grieved to hear of the retreat of the armies.

"Well, if they need me, I will go," he said. He is 44 years old, though, and men of his age have not yet been called to the colors.

Record
Nov. 3, 1914

MUSIC LOVERS WAIT DECISION OF HIGGINSON

Dr. Muck's Resignation Still in His Hands Awaiting Action

Boston music lovers and persons interested in music throughout the country are waiting with interest the result of the consideration being given by Maj. Henry L. Higginson to the resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Dr. Karl Muck.

Dr. Muck's resignation was handed to Maj. Higginson following the controversy concerning the failure of the orchestra to play the National Anthem at a recent concert at Providence. The major made the resignation public yesterday from the stage of Symphony Hall just prior to the afternoon concert.

Maj. Higginson stated that the resignation of Dr. Muck would mean a disaster to music and that it would be given his earnest consideration.

Maj. Higginson stated to The Boston Evening Record that a little band of trouble-makers were trying to stir up strife. He says the Government has nothing against Dr. Muck, who has borne himself with rare discretion.

HERALD
NOV. 3, 1917.

JUSTICE TO MAJ. HIGGINSON.

To the Editor of the Herald:

Under the circumstances would it not be a courteous thing for the public at large to abide by Mr. Higginson's decision in regard to the national hymn and the Symphony Orchestra? We certainly owe that small courtesy to a man whose great generosity and public-spiritedness have given us the most superb orchestra in the world.

The mere fact of questioning Mr. Higginson's patriotism and loyalty is too ridiculous to admit of any discussion.

Does it not seem a poor return to make, after 37 years of Symphony concerts, to the man who made them possible?

And when did Mr. Higginson ever make an unwise decision?

JULIA A. SHEWELL.

Brookline, Nov. 2.

GLOBE
— NOV. 3, 1917 —

40

A WORD FOR MAJ HIGGINSON

DURING the controversy concerning "The Star Spangled Banner" and the Boston Symphony Orchestra absurd statements have been made concerning the patriotism of Maj Henry L. Higginson. The scene in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon ought to end the regrettable incident and all disparagement of this worthy citizen of Boston.

Few men in the United States have a patriotic record equal to that of Maj Higginson. There are none whose records for faithfulness to country are superior to his.

Since June, 1863, he has carried the mark on his cheek of a wound, almost mortal, received in fighting for the Union while an officer in the 1st Massachusetts Cavalry. There has never been a moment from that day to this when Maj Higginson has not been eager to serve his country, his State and his city.

In the Liberty Loan campaigns he has been one of the leaders in the hard work of making clear to New England the imperative necessity of putting money behind the war. Had he been less active in pushing the loan the total of this Federal District would probably have been considerably lessened.

That such a man should be taunted with a lack of love for his country, or of devotion to her cause, by those whose judgment of his handling of a difficult situation differs from his, would be cruel were it not so absurd.

Henry Lee Higginson never drew one single unpatriotic breath in his life.

POST
NOV. 3, 1917

DR. MUCK AND OUR ANTHEM

The controversy that has been raging for a little about the refusal of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent Providence concert, reached a crisis yesterday afternoon—and peace still reigns. Major Higginson gave orders that the anthem be played at the end of the concert, and it was played, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. Moreover, it will be played at all subsequent concerts of the orchestra.

It is well to have the principle of the thing settled, and settled right. Even if "The Star Spangled Banner" is not an artistic part of a symphony concert, the times have made it patriotically appropriate. It is played in all the other large orchestral concerts of the country, as very likely some distinctively German anthem is played at classical concerts in Berlin. It should do everybody good at Symphony Hall to hear it and acknowledge it appropriately.

Dr. Muck's resignation is in Major Higginson's hands, but its acceptance would not now seem to be demanded. The official national anthem wins, and if Dr. Muck shows discretion, the incident may be considered as closed for the present.

POST, NOV. 3, 1917

MUCK OFFERS TO QUIT POST

Post. Nov. 3

Conducts "Star Spangled Banner" at Concert Amid Tremendous Applause

Dr. Karl Muck, guiding genius of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, offered his resignation as conductor of that world-famous organization yesterday. By Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and maintainer of the orchestra, on the platform of Symphony Hall, both he and the members of the orchestra were absolved from ever having refused to play the national anthem.

It will be played at all Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in the future.

Then at the close of the afternoon concert, Dr. Muck stood before a tense and thrill-bound audience and directed the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" with all his masterful precision and brilliance.

AUDIENCE SINGS THE SONG

The strains of the national anthem rushing up from the five-score master musicians of the nation's finest orchestra drew more than 2500 people to their feet. It drew their voices to their lips, and before the end came the men and women of the audience were singing with growing vigor and spirit "The

Continued on Page 10—Fifth Col.

DR. KARL MUCK,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Continued From First Page

Star Spangled Banner," led by the foremost orchestral director in the world.

While yet the sustaining baton of Dr. Muck was poised in air, the final note was drowned in a tumult of applause. It was applause in which cordiality for the genius of Dr. Muck unmistakably shared honors with the American enthusiasm aroused by the song. It was different from the polite greeting of doubtful sporadic handclapping which had greeted Dr. Muck's first appearance. It was the answer of American appreciation of art.

Believe Doctor Will Stay

Based upon that spirit which was immediately evident after the concert, people in positions which lend weight to their statements said that the resignation of Dr. Muck will not be accepted. Major Higginson, himself, said last night that he could make no forecast as to his decision yet.

Dr. Muck was profoundly affected by the day's developments, coming as it did after two days of bitter criticism, much of which was based upon misinformation, according to Major Higginson. Dr. Muck said yesterday after the performance:

Has Done His Best

"I hardly know what to think. It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing."

"Would you not regret leaving Boston and the Symphony Orchestra as much as Major Higginson and many of the subscribers would regret to have you?" questioned the reporter.

"I have done my best these seven years I have done my best today."

At his Commonwealth avenue home last night Major Higinson told the Post reporter that "after all the abuse and misstatements directed against Dr. Muck during the past two days" he wanted to tell the public some facts.

After Programme Was Made

"About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon the message from those ladies in Providence asking that the national anthem be played at their Tuesday night concert was received. Mr. Ellis and I were together when it came. I ordered Mr. Ellis to stop the sale of tickets in Providence and do nothing at that late hour to change the programme, which had been made up and rehearsed.

"Tuesday evening Mr. Ellis and I went to Providence. Dr. Muck went down with the orchestra.

"Dr. Muck never knew that a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of that request until they reached Boston.

"It was I who gave the order to stop selling tickets in Providence and to do nothing about changing the programme. We didn't have the music. There had been no rehearsal of the piece.

"Above all things I want Dr. Muck exonerated of that false charge circulated by some of the papers that he refused to play the national anthem.

Never Refused to Play Anthem

"If the public wants to throw any stones, let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me.

"And now I hope that this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem."

Yesterday afternoon's concert at Symphony Hall brought the most dramatic incident in the entire history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in its 37th season, when Dr. Muck conducted the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner."

A Capacity Audience

A capacity audience flocked to Symphony Hall long before the hour of commencing on the qui vive with excitment and curiosity. They found that the programme contained a paste-on slip saying "The National Anthem will be played as the closing number of the programme."

But there was still suspense. Would Dr. Muck conduct the performance of the hymn or would he delegate the leadership to a member of the orchestra? How, in the light of public criticism lately, would the audience receive him? If Dr. Muck did conduct, would his iron nerve desert him, so that in face or bearing he would show the strain under which he labored?

Applause Begins

These topics were the theme of conversation on all sides. There were sudden pauses—sentences broken off and never finished as the speaker glanced at the stage to get the first glimpse of the drama that was preparing.

Suddenly some of the people started to applaud. The applause grew in volume. Was this sympathy with Dr. Muck? Only a few of the people could see the entrance to the stage used by the conductor.

There was astonishment for those who expected to see a display of hostility toward Dr. Muck, when the applause broke out and swelled in volume until they saw who had entered.

Major Higginson on Stage

It was not the director. It was Major Henry L. Higginson, the venerable founder, builder and patron of the orchestra, the organization that gives Boston its orchestral supremacy over all other cities, and the orchestra with which, whatever the struggle and fever of these days, Boston would be loath to part.

Yet Major Higginson had more than hinted that with a little more pressure and criticism he might be obliged to dismiss not only Dr. Muck, but the orchestra, which is the darling of his heart and more than all else the monument of his lifetime.

Tribute to Music's Patron

Major Higginson, veteran of the Civil war and a leading patriot in these stirring times, advanced, showing plainly in his face the agitation and the pain he had experienced through the late misunderstanding with the public.

As he came to the front of the stage the entire audience arose and the applause swelled louder than ever. With commanding dignity the venerable fighting major raised his hand for silence. Slowly, clearly and with marked emphasis he read the following statement:

Major Higginson's Statement

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the 'Star Spangled Banner,' and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration."

The audience was so astounded that there was only a faint patter of polite applause as Major Higginson bowed and turned.

Concert Begins as Usual

That moment Dr. Muck stepped upon the stage. Again there was applause but very different in volume and quantity from the first greeting. It proceeded definitely from isolated quarters of the auditorium. One or two people stood up. The rest of the audience, silent and undemonstrative, remained seated. The applause was kept up by the minority while Dr. Muck, as cool, as self-contained, and as much master of the situation as he ever has been in his life, bowed several times and turned to conduct the performance of the symphony.

The concert progressed to the last number on the printed programme, a dramatic overture. Despite the thrilling of this gripping music the audience seemed restless and expectant. Ordinarily people begin to put on hats and grasp canes, umbrellas and wraps ready for a dash for the door when the last note sounds. But yesterday the tenseness and expectancy was only heightened as the audience felt the approaching close of the overture. Not even a suburbanite hastened to catch a train.

All Stand for Anthem

The overture came to an end. Dr. Muck turned slowly, bowed gravely, courteously. Then he turned back again to his stand.

Orchestra and audience arose, the musicians standing while they played. the national anthem of the United States rolled out with all the majesty and volume of which the world's greatest orchestra is capable.

Then a stirring thing happened. The men were playing with all their force. The conductor was wielding his baton with no more or less authority and precision than if he were conducting a Brahms symphony instead of the national anthem. Suddenly a few women's voices rose above the pulsing music. Polite and self-contained residents of the Back Bay glanced this way and that at their neighbors and then—commenced to sing.

Join in Singing

One by one they took up the song. And now the words of the hymn commenced to roll out over the thunders of the orchestra. The audience was mostly women and at the beginning only their voices were to be heard. Then came the rougher, deeper masculine tones which told that the men of Boston were not to be behind the women-folk in the profession of their faith.

As the last note of the anthem resounded sustained by all the power of the orchestra and the people, Dr. Muck's stick poised in the air, the applause crashed out, drowning even the sound of the brilliant music.

All Eyes on Conductor

Hundreds of eyes and opera glasses stared at the conductor. If anyone thought that he would fail himself, they were doomed to disappointment. They could have searched for a line that was changed in that face, for a movement or a tremor that would tell what Dr. Karl Muck, persona grata above most other musicians in Germany at the court of the Kaiser, was feeling. A strange destiny, indeed, for such a man. And a man capable of meeting the day without a quiver.

Perhaps there was a note of cordiality, also, in the applause of that last, unforeseen performance. Perhaps the people felt that Dr. Muck had faced a duty which he acknowledged to be his in his present position like a man and a gentleman.

HERALD
NOV. 3, 1917.

Frances Nash Soloist with Boston Symphony

Those who attended yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, and the hall was crowded, are not likely soon to forget its unusual features. The program was:

Sibelius, symphony No. 4; Saint-Saens, piano concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Frances Nash, pianist); Beethoven, Leonore overture No. 3.

An announcement slipped into the program book was to the effect that the national anthem would be played as the last number of the concert, an echo of the recent incident in connection with the Providence concert. Then as everybody was seated and the concert was about to begin, Maj. Higginson came on the stage, the audience rising as one in tribute, and announced that he had asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the national anthem and they had acquiesced. He then startled the audience with the announcement Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation that the orchestra be free of any embarrassment his presence may cause. Maj. Higginson, after declaring such resignation would be a disaster, said he would give it careful consideration.

When Dr. Muck came to the conductor's stand he was given an ovation and was enthusiastically applauded at every opportunity throughout the concert. His superb reading of the great Sibelius work was followed by several recalls. Sibelius is always Sibelius and never more so than in this work. There is no mistaking his writing. There are no reminders of this or that composer in his compositions. While in this symphony he takes radical steps there is never any question of his sincerity and ability to clearly express his thoughts.

Notably successful also was the concerto as played by Miss Nash and the orchestra, a work that makes large demands of the soloist. The enthusiasm of the audience was a well deserved tribute.

The overture, one of the features of the concert, closed a concert without parallel in the orchestra's history.

Dr. Muck then had his players stand while they played the national anthem. Some of the more thoughtless in the audience left the hall as the playing started and others, scarcely less thoughtless, proceeded to put on their outer garments.

- Boston Globe, Nov. 5, 1917 -

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS ANTHEM, DR KARL MUCK READY TO RESIGN

"The Star Spangled Banner" Will Be Given at All Future Concerts

Country Ringing With Protest

Internment of Noted Leader Proposed

Art bowed to patriotism in Symphony Hall yesterday, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time this season, closed its regular rehearsal by playing "The Star Spangled Banner," while Dr Karl Muck conducted.

While many persons had believed that Dr Muck, because of his German allegiance, was unwilling to direct the playing of the National anthem, they were even less prepared for the announcement made before the concert by Maj Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the orchestra, that Dr Muck had handed him his resignation.

DR KARL MUCK

PLAYS ANTHEM AND MUCK MAY RESIGN

Continued From the First Page.

Mr Higginson stated that Dr Muck did not wish the welfare of the orchestra to be prejudiced by any personal feeling against him. Maj Higginson indicated that he has not yet decided whether he will accept the resignation or not.

"To lose Dr Muck would be a disaster," he said.

The audience of 2600 persons, standing, applauded the major at intervals during his address. Saying he would consider Dr Muck's resignation seriously, he turned and walked back to the piano, awaiting there the conductor's entrance. When Dr Muck appeared, he shook hands with Maj Higginson and mounted the stand, twice turning about to acknowledge the applause from the audience.

Looking toward the major and receiving his signal, Dr Muck raised his baton and began the fourth symphony of Sibelius, with which the program opened. Maj Higginson stood in the same position for a few moments after the orchestra had begun to play, then left the platform.

At All Future Concerts

Maj Higginson authorized the statement that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at all future concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, whether here or in other cities.

This announcement was the climax of a public discontent which reached its pinnacle after Tuesday evening's concert in Providence, where the orchestra did not play the anthem, although a request for it had previously been sent to the management by prominent Providence residents.

This resulted in the Rhode Island Council of Defense urging the authorities of the city to debar the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future unless its program should include the National anthem, and it was said that a Department of Justice agent would make a detailed report to Washington and recommend that the orchestra be prevented from playing in other cities unless it plays the patriotic selection.

On the following day Maj Higginson granted to newspapermen an interview in which he defended the stand his orchestra had taken, and argued that "The Star Spangled Banner" has no place in an art program such as is given by the Symphony at its Winter concerts. He made it known that he had received many letters of criticism, some of them anonymous, but added that the criticisms came from persons who do not attend the concerts.

Dr Muck himself was quoted in a published interview as saying that the National anthem would not be played at the New York concerts next week, when the orchestra starts on tour. This statement aroused popular resentment in many cities.

But it was played yesterday, and played well, while the Stars and Stripes floated from a staff on Symphony Hall, and 2600 persons, mainly women, arose and clapped, while many joined in the air and sang the first verse. Dr Muck gave his customary bow near the piano and hurried from the stage.

The first announcement to patrons that the hymn would be played came when they opened their programs, in each of which a sticker, pasted in after the program was printed, stating: "The National anthem will be played as the closing number of the program."

Maj Higginson's appearance on the stage prefaced the concert. He said:

Have Never Refused to Play

"I have asked Dr Muck and the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last Spring, at my earnest request, Dr Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration.

Should Dr Muck's resignation be accepted, it may mean the dismissal of the entire Symphony Orchestra, the best in this country and probably in the world. Mr Higginson stated definitely on Wednesday that "when Dr Muck goes, the orchestra will go." In that event, he added, Symphony Hall, which means to him an annual loss of $13,000 to $18,000 might be sold.

Mr Higginson was the organizer of the orchestra and has been its main supporter more than 30 years.

Mayor Curley yesterday instructed John H. Casey, licensing clerk, to take up the matter with the Law Department and ascertain what steps could be taken in the event of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

The Mayor was pleased last night when he learned that the National anthem had been played by the orchestra and said: "In this world's crisis it is better to sacrifice art to patriotism."

Should Maj Henry L. Higginson decline to accept the resignation of Dr Karl Muck there will be widespread interest in the attitude of the public towards him in cities where Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play within the next two weeks.

The earliest dates are Washington, D C, Nov 6; Carnegie Hall, New York city, Nov 11 and Baltimore, Nov 14. The New York Symphony Orchestra is said to have been playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts without any suggestion from outside.

Dr Muck Here Since 1906

When Dr Muck was engaged by Maj Higginson in the Summer of 1906 to be conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated that he came on leave of absence for one year, "by special permission of Kaiser William II," as he was at that time conductor at the Royal Opera House in Berlin. His service in Boston began Oct 1 that year.

He was in Berlin on a vacation at the outbreak of the European war, three years ago, and for a few weeks prior to leaving for this country to take up his season's work, he was obliged to do clerical work in the Berlin War Office.

Dr Muck was born in Darmstadt, Ger, in 1859, studied philosophy at Leipsic and Heidelberg, receiving his doctor's degree at the latter university. He was musical conductor successively in the Austrian cities of Salzburg, Brunn, Gratz and Prague. From 1892 till he came to this country, 14 years later, he was at the Royal Opera House in Berlin.

42

Herald - Nov. 5, 1917 -

MAJ. HIGGINSON DEFENDS MUCK

Says Any Blame Due in Anthem Affair Is His Own—Orchestra Played It When Asked.

ACTED ALONE IN PROVIDENCE

Maj. Henry L. Higginson last night issued the following statement regarding the recent controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"In these times of great stress and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

Grateful to Courteous Public.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defence of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful.

"It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for "The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver.'

Played It as Soon as Asked.

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone.

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

#3

Advertiser
—Nov. 3, 1917—

SYMPHONY PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Concession to Public Goes Hand in Hand With Dr. Muck's Resignation

MAJ. HIGGINSON TAKES ALL RESPONSIBILITY

BY LOUIS C. ELSON

Program.

Fourth Symphony in A minor.....Sibelius
G minor Piano Concerto.....St.-Saens
Pianist, Miss Frances Nash.
Leonora Overture, No. 3.....Beethoven

People who expected bombs, hand grenades, or at least empty seats at yesterday's concert were disappointed. The fierce debate and the voluminous letter-writing to the papers came to a peaceful end by the management's sensibly acceding to the request of several, and giving the National Anthem. Just before the concert began the honored founder of the orchestra came upon the stage. The audience at once respectfully rose, and the orchestra followed suit. Maj. Higginson made a terse speech, full of common sense. He stated that the orchestra had never refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," nor Dr. Muck to conduct it. He himself only had been asked for it. He said that Dr. Muck had generously sent in his resignation some time ago, in order not to embarrass the management. He had that resignation in his hands now, but had not accepted it. The National Anthem would be played, as requested, at the end of the concert.

And so it was played, the audience and the orchestra standing up during its performance. The incident may be considered ended, but it is fortunate that so true and noble a patriot as Maj. Higginson is at the head of affairs. One feels that he has no need to play the "Star Spangled Banner" nor to wrap up Symphony Hall in a large American flag, to prove that his beneficent entereprise is loyal. We scarcely care to imitate the English custom of having the national tune heard on every possible occasion. Yet to have begun the musical season with our anthem might have been very appropriate. Maj. Higginson was much applauded, but the ovation to Dr. Muck, when he appeared, was beyond precedent.

The modern pill which we are expected to take once in every little while came first upon the program. We are glad to say that the fourth symphony of Sibelius gains power upon repeated hearing. It is still quite a bitter work, but it becomes a little more intelligible upon nearer acquaintance. It still, however, appears to us that Sibelius is groping after something different from his preceding modes of expression, and has not yet mastered the new language. At times it reminds of Rogers' lines:—

"An old man wand'ring as in search of something,
Something he could not find—he knew not what."

The opening is promising, with the Scandinavian sombreness, and leads one to anticipate something of the impressive gloom of the North. But the expectations are disappointed, for the symphony soon begins to dabble in the whole-tone progressions in which Debussy and the Siamese composers agree and now Sibelius has joined them. It is not a difficult trick when one gets used to it, and it leads to a peculiar flavor which is new enough to be relishable for a while. In the same manner the long organ-points which are introduced are not unimpressive, but not one of the moderns can show us an organ-point which is so powerful or so ingenius as that in the second movement of Tschaikowsky's Pathetic symphony.

The symphony does not demand a very monstrous orchestra. With the exception of bells (Glockenspiel) which are introduced in the Finale it is not more radical than some of Beethoven's scores. But in its modulations it is as far away from the Sibelius that we have known as that Sibelius is from Haydn. It is fragmentary; it has mutterings and groanings, and writhings and twistings, which lead nowhere in particular. It is called Symphony A minor, but it is not a symphony, and it is not in A minor, for it goes into all known and unknown keys. It is a question which must soon be decided, whether in modern music it is right to affix any signature at all to the music. Hans Huber has already made a beginning in this matter by writing his works without any key signature, as if they were in C major, and filling in the accidentals as he goes on.

Perhaps if a program were given to the work, if it portrayed a definite series of events, one might get at something tangible before it was over, but without such a guide the symphony is meaningless, at least to the present writer. We do not know the reason of the awful dissonances, why the sudden interruptions, why the movements end where they cease, or why the long organ-point in the finale suggests an end so long before that end is reached.

It is easy to make fun of such a work, but we certainly do not intend to do so. Sibelius has written enough worthy music to make us believe in his sincerity. There are many impressive moments in the work for all its ugliness and its vagueness. We can only hope that, if Sibelius is to speak further in this new language, he may master it more completely, so that he may be more perfectly understood.

The work received the applause that is now becoming customary; that is, Dr. Muck was twice recalled and the orchestra obliged to rise. This is becoming so much "de rigueur" that it is scarcely worth chronicling. The new Sibelius, as here revealed, is one whom we can "first endure, then pity"—but we doubt if we could go beyond that.

Miss Frances Nash could not have wished for a better introduction for her piano playing, for the audience were hungry for tune after the tuneless proceedings of the first hour, and St.-Saens' G-minor concerto is medolic enough, and its brightness told well against the darkness of the symphony. The work is symmetrical, and as intelligible as a bugle call. Miss Nash, like the lamented Mr. Lochinvar, comes out of the west. She is from Omaha, and proved that good can come out of Nazareth, for she played with much brilliancy and freedom. In the first movement her octave work was very clear and her chords sufficiently crashing, but there was an overuse of pedal, and the ensemble was not always perfect. Miss Nash did her best work in the Allegretto, where her dainty, crisp and playful style deserves all praise. There was brilliancy in the finale, too, and the young pianist evidently captured her audience, judging by the applause and recalls.

Then came Beethoven's greatest dramatic overture (although we prefer the "Egmont" as more condensed and less inflated), and ended the concert in a perfectly legitimate manner, so that the clarity of the end made full amends for the troubles of the beginning. Of course there is nothing new to be said about the overture nor about the impassioned manner in which it was read and played. "Happy are those nations which have no history" and pleasant are those compositions which require no explanations or apologies.

GLOBE
— Nov. 3, 1917 —

CHICAGO CANNOT UNDERSTAND BOSTON SYMPHONY ATTITUDE

CHICAGO, Nov 2—Chicago musical organizations cannot understand the reported attitude of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to "The Star Spangled Banner."

Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, was out of town today, but P. E. Voegeli, assistant manager, testified as to their and Mr Stock's willingness to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

"We opened our season this year with the National Anthem," he said. "We also opened the season of popular concerts with it."

The Chicago Grand Opera Company is equally patriotic.

"Mr Campanini plays 'The Star Spangled Banner' every night on the tour he is now making," said Julius Daiber, his secretary. "Although there are many musicians of German birth in the orchester I have never heard of their offering any objections to the anthem."

DETROIT MAN WANTS NAME ERASED OFF SYMPHONY LIST

DETROIT, Nov 2—The Detroit music lovers strongly resent the attitude of Dr Karl Muck, of Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Maj Higginson, who is alleged to support Dr Muck in his opinion that "The Star Spangled Banner" should not be played at the concerts.

Thomas J. Anketel, an ardent Detroit music patron, and one of the guarantors of the Detroit Orchestral Association, under whose auspices the Boston Orchestra is booked for an appearance here next February, has sent the following letter to N. J. Corey, secretary of the association:

"If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is permitted to play in Detroit this Winter, please erase my name as one of your guarantors. I do not care at present to contribute to any German organization."

American
Oct 4, 1917

U. S. INQUIRY ON CONDUCT OF DR. MUCK

Federal Agents Seek to Establish Reason for Attitude of Symphony Leader Toward Anthem

Dr. Karl Muck, the famous German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is still under investigation by the Department of Justice, according to dispatches from Washington yesterday.

Officials of that department said at Washington that, if Dr. Muck was found to be an enemy of the United States, he would be interned.

The playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading in person, at the public rehearsal Friday afternoon, was taken as complete acceptance of the growing public demand that this orchestra, or any other, play the national anthem if the issue arises.

Meanwhile Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial patron of the archestra, has under consideration Dr. Muck's tender of resignation.

Major Higginson has frankly said that the conductor's loss would be a disaster to the orchestra.

SECURED FOR SYMPHONY.

In April, 1906, C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in Europe, seeking a man to succeed Wilhelm Gericke as conductor of the Boston organization.

Mr. Ellis had a list of a score of possibilities but three of these were mentally noted as the most desirable. Dr. Muck was one of the three.

It was an ambitious and a daring conception, from the Teuton standpoint, that this American musical manager should even consider obtaining the services of the conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, the great Muck, friend of the Emperor.

Nor did Dr. Muck seem at all anxious to come here. He held one of the two best musical posts in Europe, with the weight of imperial sanction at his back and the ardent admiration of the most critical German musical set before him.

But finally he consented to come to Boston for a season. Then it was necessary to obtain the Emperor's consent. It was at a time when the German movement to cement friendly relations with this country was becoming a marked public policy. It was pleasant, too, for the Teutons to think that the "Athens of America" had asked Berlin for the loan of its great music master.

CONQUEST OF BOSTON.

Dr. Muck came and saw and, like Caesar, he conquered. He won Boston, the orchestra body and everyone else with whom he came in contact.

This city of reputed coldness warmed to the German musical genius. The only question at the end of his first season was; "Can he stay longer?" Mr. Ellis and Major Higginson were able to secure an extension of his one year's leave of absence, so that he remained for the season of 1907-08.

Then he returned to Berlin and resumed his old position. He was further honored by the Emperor by being appointed Koeniglicher Preussischer General Musik Dorektor or general musical director, the highest post at the imperial theatres.

Nearly four years passed. Early in 1912 Boston was delighted and Berlin was scandalized to hear that Dr. Muck had resigned as conductor of the Royal Opera House of Berlin and was to return to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra again.

The question was raised then whether the artistic temperament of the great conductor had not rebelled against the Imperial dominance which restricts the individual scope of any conductor at the Berlin Royal Opera House.

CAUSED POLITICAL DEBATE.

The matter even came up in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, inspired court newspaper, hinted that Dr. Muck had let American gold lure him from a post of honor in the Fatherland.

But Representative Kopsch rose in the German House in Dr. Muck's defance. He scored that "despotic authority of Prussian militarism, which extends even to the temples of the Muses."

Particularly did Representative Kopsch criticize Count von Huelsen-Haeslen, intendant of the Royal Opera House, who attained "bureaucratic domination at the cost of artistic merit."

Despite German displeasure, they gave Dr. Muck a rousing farewell on his final appearance in Berlin. The opera house was jammed. They cheered the departing conductor again and again with repeated "Auf Wiedersehens" and "Wiederkomens."

His return here was a continuance of the triumphs he had gained in his first two seasons. He grew constantly in musical favor.

BUYS HOME ON FENWAY.

In February, 1914, Dr. Muck bought the residence at No. 50 Fenway, for a home during whatever time he was to stay here. He still occupies it.

The house is a four-story brick structure standing on 8,000 feet of land. The property was rated, at the time of purchase, at $30,000. It is one of the finest in the Fenway section.

Dr. Muck came back here on a five-year contract, said to call for a salary of $18,000. His contract ran out last Spring.

Major Higginson told the rehearsal audience Friday that Dr. Muck consented last Spring, at the major's earnest request, to remain in charge of the orchestra. Major Higginson said that he considered Dr. Muck essential to the continuance of the Symphony concerts.

GLOBE
Nov. 3, 1917.

DR MUCK LEADER IN PLAYING OF ANTHEM

Maj Higginson Applauded for Response in Crisis

Orchestra Stands While "Star Spangled Banner" Is Rendered

The fourth Friday afternoon concert of this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra saw other interests overshadow the anticipated program. No word had come officially from Symphony Hall that there would be any answer to the recent agitation concerning the playing of the National anthem.

What did happen drew deepened gratitude to Maj Higginson for his response in this crisis of the orchestra, just as he has met other crises that have imperiled its career, and brought forth a wave of applause for Dr Muck.

Following the overture to "Leonore," No. 3, which was the closing number on the printed program, the entire orchestra stood, excepting the two harpists and the choir of 'cellos, and played "The Star Spangled Banner" as the insert in the program book had announced.

Every member was present except the alternating horn quartet, which is not on duty this week. The arrangement used was the finale from Victor Herbert's "American Fantasy," which gives the melody and part writing to the wind instruments, while the strings embellish vigorously in flowing counterpoint.

Dr Muck conducted in his usual manner and at the conclusion left the stand. This is said to be the first rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in a subscription series under the first conductor of the orchestra. It was played nightly at the "Pops" last Spring and Summer by Mr Jaccia.

Sibelius' fourth symphony, prevailingly gray and ascetic in mood, did not draw enthusiastic applause from the audience at its performances in 1913 or 1914. Again yesterday its stern exterior provoked expression of uncertainty, at best, but little favor.

The abrupt endings for the first movement and the scherzo appeared puzzling to many. This is not music of sensuous warmth nor charm. Sibelius speaks, in an individual tongue in which he makes no concessions, no apologies.

The physiognomy of the score is bleak, melancholy and the gray half light of the moor is allowed to chill the heart. Watchers with one sick unto death are seen in the early dawn, and hope is dim. There is little to inspirit, to fire the soul. The strength even in suffering of the first symphony is not found. Dr Muck's performance was consistent and sympathetic.

Miss Frances Nash, as the soloist in Saint-Saens' G minor concerto for piano, showed promise. Hers is a musical nature. She has been well taught In the allegretto Miss Nash found her best opportunity and played the piquant embellishment with point if not with the brilliance and breadth that should come with years. The heroic final movement is now beyond her. Miss Nash was warmly received and recalled.

New York TIMES NOV. 4, 1917.

44

The Case of Doctor Muck, Major Higginson, and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

DR. KARL MUCK conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home town on Friday, and placed his resignation in the hands of Major Higginson, "that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra." Dr. Muck will continue to conduct till the question of his resignation is settled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played as it should be played.

This appears to be the culmination of an excitement that was unfortunately allowed to be fanned into a lively flame. It should have been foreseen and forestalled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" should have been played at the opening concerts in Boston, and at the opening concerts of the series in other cities. If Dr. Muck did not want to conduct it, the assistant conductor should have done it; or it could have been played at a sign from the concertmaster. We think that Mr. Walter Damrosch is nearer right in saying that he did not wish to hear Dr. Muck conduct our national anthem, feeling as he does and must necessarily feel about the war, than Colonel Roosevelt, who declared that Dr. Muck should be locked up if he refused to.

Dr. Muck declined to follow the example of the New York Symphony Society and the New York Philharmonic Society, which played "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their first concerts. Major Higginson, the founder and supporter of the orchestra, upholds the conductor in this matter, and threatened, as he has at times threatened before, for other reasons, to disband the orchestra. They both declare that their decision was based on the belief that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not good enough to have a place in a concert of the highest class of music; that it would disturb the symmetry of the program as planned; that "art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group"—and art should not be mixed up or connected with patriotism.

Dr. Muck did add to this the statement that he is "not a naturalized American citizen, and naturally no one would expect him to do exactly the same as if he were a citizen of America." This probably had more to do with his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" than his estimate of its musical value.

***

As everybody, even the most musical, knows, the national anthem stands for much more than what it is as music and verse. It stands for patriotism, for devotion to the country, for all the united effort that we are making to preserve it. Thought of this can never, should never, be wholly absent from the minds of any of us, even when we are spending our time in enjoyment of the arts. It is open to any to think that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not all that it should be as music or as verse; but whatever its standing in those respects, it is the embodiment for us of feelings that are all-pervasive in a time of immeasurable solemnity—a solemnity that has not yet been brought home to the minds of all, but which is likely soon to be, in increasing measure.

It is therefore appropriate that any series of concerts should be begun with a performance of the national anthem at the present time. Such a practice is one that nobody in this country need be ashamed of, but all may be proud of, no matter how musically sensitive.

There has been, of course, a considerable dodging of the issue in the reasons given for the Boston Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck is a Prussian; an official of the Prussian Court, as "General Musical Director"; a friend of the Kaiser. He is a German of the Germans, and naturally does not like to conduct the national anthem of a country with which his own is at war. It goes hard against the grain now; it might get him into trouble in Berlin when he returns. Major Higginson correctly regards Dr. Muck as one of the finest conductors his organization has ever had; one who, especially at the present moment, would be quite irreplaceable. He naturally has not wished to force upon him a task so abhorrent that it might be a cause for him to resign, as has proved to be the case.

Paquite Madriguera Pianist at Aeolian Hall.

Dr Karl Muck, Resigning Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Louise Homer, Soloist with the New York Symphony

(C) AIME DUPONT.

Efrem Zimbalist, Violinist at Carnegie Hall

Geraldine Farrar, in Concert at the Biltmore

CALENDAR OF CONCERTS.

November.

4—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
4—Efrem Zimbalist, violin, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
4—Hans Barth, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
4—Mary Zentay, violin, evening, Cort Theatre.
5—Carolyn C. Baldwin, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
5—Mischa Levitzki, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
6—Charles Cooper, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—The Friends of Music, afternoon, Punch & Judy Theatre.
8—Louis Graveure, baritone, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—Boston Symphony Orchestra, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—First of the Morning Musicales, Hotel Biltmore.
9—Luther Festival, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—Christine Langenhan, soprano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Concerts for Children, morning, Aeolian Hall.
10—Boston Symphony Orchestra, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
10—Harold Bauer, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Society, evening, Carnegie Hall.
10—Paquita Madriguera, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
11—Philharmonic Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
11—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
11—Arthur Friedheim, piano, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
11—Eddy Brown, violin, evening, Carnegie Hall.
12—Joseph Bonnet, organ, afternoon, Hotel Astor.
12—Dorothy Berliner, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
12—Antonio Augenti, tenor, evening, Aeolian Hall.
13—Frances Alda, soprano, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
13—Moses Boguslawski, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
13—Mrs. Farrington Smith, songs, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
13—Chamber Music Society, evening, Aeolian Hall.
14—Alice Sovereign, soprano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
15—Symphony Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
15—Arthur Alexander, tenor, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.

Major Higginson's patriotism is, of course, wholly beyond question. His title and the scar upon his face are honorable records of distinguished service in the civil war. And in the fifty years that have passed since he saw that service he has given innumerable proofs of where his heart is. It is almost an insult to recall these things in the record of one who has been so good an American.

***

Dr. Muck has been in a difficult position. He is here because he has been urgently called here; because his qualities as a musician have been so highly valued and so much desired. They have not changed or deteriorated because his country is at war with ours, and is a most malignant, unscrupulous, and dangerous enemy. He has gone about his business, conducting the Boston Orchestra as well as he knows how; and, so far as anybody has sufficient reason to believe, has not worked in any way against the United States.

No doubt he does not like "The Star-Spangled Banner" from a purely musical point of view. But if it were as good music, with as unexceptionable a parentage, as "Gott Erhalte Franz den Kaiser," he would not wish to play it, and for the same cause as now—it is the patriotic hymn of a country at war with his own. That, of course, is the real reason why Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," and resigned after he did it under pressure.

So far as Dr. Muck himself is concerned, it is a fairly good reason. He makes no concealment of his feelings, which are quite inevitable. There might be a grim joy for some in forcing him personally to conduct the tune often, or even to put him into a prison for refusing; but to what advantage to this country, and what disadvantage to Germany? Dr. Muck would not be changed, and nobody would be silly enough to expect him to be.

Some might enter into conjecture as to what might happen to an American conductor in Berlin, supposing there was one there outside of a war prison or an internment camp; and he was desired to play "Deutschland über Alles"—and refused. Major Higginson draws a picture of a man in Germany who gets up and cheers the Kaiser; and thinks this so ostentatious that they would say, "Put that man into the guardhouse and watch him." But it is not difficult to imagine that an American in Germany (however difficult to imagine one at large at the present time in Germany) who refused to cheer the Kaiser or to sing or play "Deutschland über Alles" on occasions when it was expected and universally demanded, would not be likely to get so far as the guardhouse. It is one of the things we are proud of that America is not Germany, and that we do not act in the German way about everything.

***

But the national hymn ought to be played at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's series, as it was at the opening of the New York Symphony Orchestra's and the New York Philharmonic's series, and as it doubtless will be at the first night of the opera. Now was the one time of all others when it was highly advisable for both Dr. Muck and Major Higginson to waive their objections to the national anthem on the score of its musical imperfection and as an intruder in a strictly symphonic program. The national hymn takes only a very few minutes out of the evening. Its shortcomings as music do not infect or invalidate the rest of the program in the slightest degree, in the minds of an audience accustomed to hearing it as a prelude to any important undertaking of the spirit.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Major Higginson will have found any general demand in New York for the elimination of German music because it is German. In that sense Dr. Muck is right when he says that art is not related to any particular nation or group. Dr. Muck has made up his programs very much as he did before the war began. There is no chauvinism in them. He has played German music in larger proportion than that of other nations, for the simple and undeniable reason that there is more and better German music than music of other nations. But he has not hesitated to play French, Russian, Finnish, and Rumanian music. All these nationalities are represented on the two programs that he announced for this week in New York. To these it was necessary that one piece be added closely identified with the United States, though composed in England by an Englishman. Its name is "The Star-Spangled Banner."

RICHARD ALDRICH.

Herald, Nov. 3, 1917.

DR. KARL MUCK

Leader of Symphony Orchestra Who Tenders Resignation.

DR. MUCK OFFERS RESIGNATION

Symphony Director Ready to Retire if It Would Help Orchestra.

MAJ. HIGGINSON TO DECIDE

Great Audience Pays Tribute as Musicians Play the National Anthem.

A patriotic demonstration, such as has rarely been witnessed here, occurred in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Boston's famous orchestra played the American national anthem for the first time and Maj. Henry L. Higginson announced that Dr. Muck's resignation had come to him, but that its acceptance would mean a disaster to the musical world and must have his earnest consideration.

The joy of the great audience of 2800 persons was not confined alone to the thought that "The Star Spangled Banner" was being played for only one concert, but was increased by the announcement that the anthem that millions of Americans love will be on the program at every concert of the orchestra henceforth.

Tempest Calms.

Thus the tempest which has threatened to tear the musical world asunder was quickly calmed, and the fact that Maj. Higginson has not as yet decided to accept the resignation of the famous leader lends hope to those who appreciate the best in music that the famous organization will remain intact.

The orchestra played the national anthem as the concluding number yesterday and the audience, typically American in every respect, gave Dr. Muck a splendid ovation after he had led his 110 trained musicians through it. As the orchestra played nearly all of the 2800 in the audience sang the words of the anthem.

The applause at this point was tame, however, compared to the demonstration accorded Maj. Higginson when he addressed the audience before the concert began. The entire audience arose and applauded vociferously. It was a notable tribute to the man who has made possible the Boston Symphony Orchestra year after year.

Maj. Higginson's Statement.

Maj. Higginson read the following announcement:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the or-

(Continued on Page Two, Column 5.)

DR. MUCK OFFERS RESIGNATION

Herald

(Continued from Page One.)

chestra to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore, the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration."

His statement was hailed with acclaim by the audience, which admired the spirit which prompted him to brave adverse criticism and appear in public to announce his position.

Dr. Muck himself appeared upon the platform and was given an ovation. Those in the audience applauded him heartily, though they did not arise as they did when Maj. Higginson appeared to address them.

When the closing number of the regular program was played the applause was withheld—there was an air of expectancy as Dr. Muck assembled his players. Then the opening strains of the national anthem were recognized, the vast audience arose and Dr. Muck led his instrumentalists in the particular number in which all interest seemed to centre.

Brings Audience to Feet.

The audience rose en masse as the first strains sounded and there was applause from several parts of the hall, applause which died only as the anthem swelled from the stage to the auditorium and everyone in that vast audience realized that for the first time at a Symphony concert the noted director and his musicians were bringing out the rhythm of the American national air.

There was a profound silence until the closing strain and then came the demonstration, an applause which was deafening.

Dr. Muck remained with his back to his audience until he retired from the director's stand, and as he turned at the piano to acknowledge the applause it was deafening.

An official statement from the offices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to the effect that Maj. Higginson's announcement from the stage covered the entire ground, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra players were requested to include the American national anthem in future programs and they had consented. There was nothing more to be said except that the anthem would be included in every future program, including Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New York.

American Nov. 2, 1917.

ORCHESTRA WRANGLE SPREADS

The Star Spangled Banner—the flag itself—now drapes the front of Boston's famous Symphony Hall, the very home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The presence of the national banner over the main entrance to the hall was noted today with satisfaction by the public, which is demanding that the orchestra and its German conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, bow to the popular wish that "The Star Spangled Banner," as the national air, be played by this classic organization.

Who ordered the flag put up? Charles A. Ellis, business manager of the orchestra, who was in Haverhill last night, where Geraldine Farrar sang, said there had been an American flag at the hall last Summer, but he did not know where it was. He was told that it was now draping the main entrance. He said:

"That's the proper place for it, and it will remain there permanently."

It was reported in a dispatch from New York that Mayor Curley had directed that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be included on future Symphony programs. Mr. Ellis said he had been unable to verify that rumor.

continued

(continued)

NEW FEATURES IN ISSUE.

Other features growing out of the issue between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and "The Star-Spangled Banner" included the following points today:

1—Geraldine Farrar sings the national air on her first concert appearance in Haverhill.

2—Providence Chamber of Commerce and aldermen move to require playing of the national air at entertainments.

3—Walter Damrosch, conductor of New York Symphony Orchestra, says "The Star Spangled Banner" is symbol of our war patriotism, and the reasons offered by Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony conductor, for not playing it at Providence are "either foolish or confusing the issue."

4—Baltimore and Worcester plan to compel the Boston Symphony to play the air there.

5—St. Louis Symphony directors vote for the air at all concents, symphony and popular.

FARRAR SINGS ANTHEM.

Miss Farrar sang "The Star Spangled Banner" at the close of her Haverhill concert, which included French, German and Italian songs. The audience of 1,500 was enthusiastic. She had received an advance request for the national air from Rev. James Malcolm-Smith, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church.

The Boston Symphony's failure to play the air at its Providence concert last Tuesday was formally brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen of that city. The board adopted a resolution asking the Police Commission to require that the air be played or sung at entertainments as a condition to granting licenses.

The Providence Chamber of Commerce has asked the Police Commission to refuse further concert permits to any organization conducted by "one Dr. Karl Muck."

George C. Halcott, Worcester, superintendent of public buildings, also chaeirman of the Worcester Licensing Board, has issued an ultimatum that the Boston Symphony cannot play in that city on December 18 unless it includes the national air in its program. Other members of the licensing board are backing up the chairman. At attempt will be made to smooth matters over by getting Dr. Muck's consent to have the air played.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, offers the suggestion that the Boston Symphony could play the air with the assistant conductor leading. Dr. Muck said yesterday:

DR. MUCK'S REASONS.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Mr. Damrosch admitted that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our national air now. He said: "'The Star Spangled Banner' is not played in our country because it is a work of art, but because it is a sym-

ADVERTISER Nov. 6, 1917

TIME TO DESIST

It ought to occur to the pack in pursuit of Dr. Muck that fair play demands a halt. He has played the national anthem — Maj. Higginson says he never declined to play it. He has proffered his resignation, not in anger, but simply as a matter of courtesy to the management of the orchestra and to his associates. He has done nothing to deserve to be baited and hounded.

The original fault—now clear—was in permitting an issue to arise. There should never have been any hesitancy on the part of anybody responsibly connected with the orchestra in meeting willingly the proper desire of the public for due recognition of American patriotic spirit as expressed in music.

But now that this original error has been perceived and atoned for, common fairness requires that bygones should be bygones. What conceivable good is to be had by prolonging the agony?

NEW YORK TO HAVE NO GERMAN OPERAS

Ober, Kurt, Sembach and Braun Not Likely to Appear

Wagner and Beethoven Eliminated by Metropolitan Company

NEW YORK, Nov 2—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the role of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Mme Ober, Mme Selma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, and will, it is said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsive to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Strauss, a living German composer.

PETITIONS TO CURTAIL CAR SERVICE DENIED

The Public Service Commission yesterday refused the request of the Boston Elevated Railway Company for permission to discontinue the line between Fields Corner and the Dorchester-st transfer station in South Boston. It also refused the petition of the Elevated to discontinue the line from Harvard sq to Park-st subway by way of Cottage Farm Bridge.

The petition of the Mattapan Improvement Association for a restoration of the Mattapan-sq and North Station line by way of Columbia road was refused.

The Elevated was given permission to build a loop at the Everett terminal and to place additional leading tracks.

FENNO HOME RENT FREE FOR SURGICAL DRESSINGS WORK

The Surgical Dressings Committee will move Monday, Nov 12, into the home of Mrs L. Carteret Fenno, who has offered rent free, the basement and first two floors of her home, 236 Beacon st, as workrooms during the war. The former headquarters at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital will be used for a shipping room and the executive offices will remain at the hospital.

The committee will set up at Mrs Fenno's home an electric machine to cut gauze, the largest machine of its kind in New England. The new workrooms will be open for inspection next Saturday.

JOHN L. BATES ADVISES BIG VOTE FOR ANTI-AID RESOLVE

"Vote overwhelmingly for the Antiaid amendment at the election next Tuesday, and by so doing eliminate from politics in this State for the future a subject that has long been an irritating one," is the advice of Ex-Gov John L. Bates, chairman of the Constitutional convention, in a statement issued yesterday.

ROUSING PATRIOTIC RALLY AT THE FRANKLIN UNION

The patriotic rally at Franklin Union last evening had a varied and interesting program which included a salute to the flag, led by sailors from the Navy Yard; singing of patriotic songs, motion pictures of war activities and addresses on the value of recreation for soldiers and sailors by Herbert D. Heathfield and Dr Charles Fleischer.

There was a special tribute to our ancient ally, France, introducing "The Marseilles Hymn" and Gen Pershing's sententious remark at Lafayette's tomb: "Lafayette, here we are."

TWO WEEK'S POSTPONEMENT IN MRS BENNETT'S CASES

At the request of counsel for the plaintiff, hearing in the cases of Mrs Mary Alice Bennett of Beverly against Albert Boyden and others and the Beverly National Bank was put over for two weeks.

The cases came up before Judge De Courcy in the Supreme Court yesterday on the report of F. Rockwood Hall, as master. Mr Hall finds in favor of the defendants, stating that none of the charges of the plaintiff was sustained.

Mrs Bennett sought damages for alleged conspiracy to defraud her out of property of her husband, Allen W. Bennett, for 20 years cashier of the Beverly National Bank, who died Dec 13, 1913.

INSURANCE MEN GUESTS AT HICKS' ANNIVERSARY DINNER

J. Everett Hicks, Boston manager of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, gave a dinner at Young's Hotel last night to commemorate his fifth anniversary as local head of the company. He had as guests Sylvan B. Phillips, secretary of the company; Dr Edwin M. Northcott, chief medical director; Dr Albert Awde, superintendent of agencies, all of Portland, Me, the home office; George M. Mask of Nashua, N H, manager for New Hampshire and Vermont; Walter L. Joseph, manager of Montreal William Durbrow, New York manager; Arthur W. Dudley, Maurice P. Porter, David E. Sprague, George E. Mansfield, William R. Spinney and Dr Stephen K. Patten, all of the Boston office.

Informal speaking followed the dinner, a plan for "a drive for [illegible]

45 Herald, Nov. 3, 1917.

DR. KARL MUCK

Leader of Symphony Orchestra Who Tenders Resignation.

DR. MUCK OFFERS RESIGNATION

Symphony Director Ready to Retire if It Would Help Orchestra.

MAJ. HIGGINSON TO DECIDE

Great Audience Pays Tribute as Musicians Play the National Anthem.

A patriotic demonstration, such as has rarely been witnessed here, occurred in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Boston's famous orchestra played the American national anthem for the first time and Maj. Henry L. Higginson announced that Dr. Muck's resignation had come to him, but that its acceptance would mean a disaster to the musical world and must have his earnest consideration.

The joy of the great audience of 2600 persons was not confined alone to the thought that "The Star Spangled Banner" was being played for only one concert, but was increased by the announcement that the anthem that millions of Americans love will be on the program at every concert of the orchestra henceforth.

Tempest Calms.

Thus the tempest which has threatened to tear the musical world asunder was quickly calmed, and the fact that Maj. Higginson has not as yet decided to accept the resignation of the famous leader lends hope to those who appreciate the best in music that the famous organization will remain intact.

The orchestra played the national anthem as the concluding number yesterday and the audience, typically American in every respect, gave Dr. Muck a splendid ovation after he had led his 110 trained musicians through it. As the orchestra played nearly all of the 2600 in the audience sang the words of the anthem.

The applause at this point was tame, however, compared to the demonstration accorded Maj. Higginson when he addressed the audience before the concert began. The entire audience arose and applauded vociferously. It was a notable tribute to the man who has made possible the Boston Symphony Orchestra year after year.

Maj. Higginson's Statement.

Maj. Higginson read the following announcement:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' and they have complied. They have never refused.

(Continued on Page Two, Column 5.)

DR. MUCK OFFERS RESIGNATION

(Continued from Page One.)

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore, the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration."

His statement was hailed with acclaim by the audience, which admired the spirit which prompted him to brave adverse criticism and appear in public to announce his position.

Dr. Muck himself appeared upon the platform and was given an ovation. Those in the audience applauded him heartily, though they did not arise as they did when Maj. Higginson appeared to address them.

When the closing number of the regular program was played the applause was withheld—there was an air of expectancy as Dr. Muck assembled his players. Then the opening strains of the national anthem were recognized, the vast audience arose and Dr. Muck led his instrumentalists in the particular number in which all interest seemed to centre.

Brings Audience to Feet.

The audience rose en masse as the first strains sounded and there was applause from several parts of the hall, an applause which died only as the anthem swelled from the stage to the auditorium and everyone in that vast audience realized that for the first time at a Symphony concert the noted director and his musicians were bringing out the rhythm of the American national air.

There was a profound silence until the closing strain and then came the demonstration, an applause which was deafening.

Dr. Muck remained with his back to his audience until he retired from the director's stand, and as he turned at the piano to acknowledge the applause it was deafening.

An official statement from the offices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to the effect that Maj. Higginson's announcement from the stage covered the entire ground, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra players were requested to include the American national anthem in future programs and they had consented. There was nothing more to be said except that the anthem would be included in every future program, including Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New York.

American Nov. 2, 1917.

ORCHESTRA WRANGLE SPREADS

The Star Spangled Banner—the flag itself—now drapes the front of Boston's famous Symphony Hall, the very home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The presence of the national banner over the main entrance to the hall was noted today with satisfaction by the public, which is demanding that the orchestra and its German conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, bow to the popular wish that "The Star Spangled Banner," as the national air, be played by this classic organization.

Who ordered the flag put up? Charles A. Ellis, business manager of the orchestra, who was in Haverhill last night, where Geraldine Farrar sang, said there had been an American flag at the hall last Summer, but he did not know where it was. He was told that it was now draping the main entrance. He said:

"That's the proper place for it, and it will remain there permanently."

It was reported in a dispatch from New York that Mayor Curley had directed that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be included on future Symphony programs. Mr. Ellis said he had been unable to verify that rumor.

continued

(continued)

NEW FEATURES IN ISSUE.

Other features growing out of the issue between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and "The Star-Spangled Banner" included the following points today:

1—Geraldine Farrar sings the national air on her first concert appearance in Haverhill.

2—Providence Chamber of Commerce and aldermen move to require playing of the national air at entertainments.

3—Walter Damrosch, conductor of New York Symphony Orchestra, says "The Star Spangled Banner" is symbol of our war patriotism, and the reasons offered by Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony conductor, for not playing it at Providence are "either foolish or confusing the issue."

4—Baltimore and Worcester plan to compel the Boston Symphony to play the air there.

5—St. Louis Symphony directors vote for the air at all concents, symphony and popular.

FARRAR SINGS ANTHEM.

Miss Farrar sang "The Star Spangled Banner" at the close of her Haverhill concert, which included French, German and Italian songs. The audience of 1,500 was enthusiastic. She had received an advance request for the national air from Rev. James Malcolm-Smith, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church.

The Boston Symphony's failure to play the air at its Providence concert last Tuesday was formally brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen of that city. The board adopted a resolution asking the Police Commission to require that the air be played or sung at entertainments as a condition to granting licenses.

The Providence Chamber of Commerce has asked the Police Commission to refuse further concert permits to any organization conducted by "one Dr. Karl Muck."

George C. Halcott, Worcester, superintendent of public buildings, also chaeirman of the Worcester Licensing Board, has issued an ultimatum that the Boston Symphony cannot play in that city on December 18 unless it includes the national air in its program. Other members of the licensing board are backing up the chairman. At attempt will be made to smooth matters over by getting Dr. Muck's consent to have the air played.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, offers the suggestion that the Boston Symphony could play the air with the assistant conductor leading. Dr. Muck said yesterday:

DR. MUCK'S REASONS.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Mr. Damrosch admitted that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our national air now. He said:

"'The Star Spangled Banner' is not played in our country because it is a work of art, but because it is a sym-

ADVERTISER Nov. 6, 1917

TIME TO DESIST

It ought to occur to the pack in pursuit of Dr. Muck that fair play demands a halt. He has played the national anthem — Maj. Higginson says he never declined to play it. He has proffered his resignation, not in anger, but simply as a matter of courtesy to the management of the orchestra and to his associates. He has done nothing to deserve to be baited and hounded.

The original fault—now clear—was in permitting an issue to arise. There should never have been any hesitancy on the part of anybody responsibly connected with the orchestra in meeting willingly the proper desire of the public for due recognition of American patriotic spirit as expressed in music.

But now that this original error has been perceived and atoned for, common fairness requires that bygones should be bygones. What conceivable good is to be had by prolonging the agony?

NEW YORK TO HAVE NO GERMAN OPERAS

Ober, Kurt, Sembach and Braun Not Likely to Appear

Wagner and Beethoven Eliminated by Metropolitan Company

NEW YORK, Nov 2—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the role of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Mme Ober, Mme Selma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, and will, it is said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsive to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Strauss, a living German composer.

PETITIONS TO CURTAIL CAR SERVICE DENIED

The Public Service Commission yesterday refused the request of the Boston Elevated Railway Company for permission to discontinue the line between Fields Corner and the Dorchester-st transfer station in South Boston. It also refused the petition of the Elevated to discontinue the line from Harvard sq to Park-st subway by way of Cottage Farm Bridge.

The petition of the Mattapan Improvement Association for a restoration of the Mattapan-sq and North Station line by way of Columbia road was refused.

The Elevated was given permission to build a loop at the Everett terminal and to place additional leading tracks.

FENNO HOME RENT FREE FOR SURGICAL DRESSINGS WORK

The Surgical Dressings Committee will move Monday, Nov 12, into the home of Mrs L. Carteret Fenno, who has offered rent free, the basement and first two floors of her home, 236 Beacon st, as workrooms during the war. The former headquarters at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital will be used for a shipping room and the executive offices will remain at the hospital.

The committee will set up at Mrs Fenno's home an electric machine to cut gauze, the largest machine of its kind in New England. The new workrooms will be open for inspection next Saturday.

JOHN L. BATES ADVISES BIG VOTE FOR ANTI-AID RESOLVE

"Vote overwhelmingly for the Antiaid amendment at the election next Tuesday, and by so doing eliminate from politics in this State for the future a subject that has long been an irritating one," is the advice of Ex-Gov John L. Bates, chairman of the Constitutional convention, in a statement issued yesterday.

ROUSING PATRIOTIC RALLY AT THE FRANKLIN UNION

The patriotic rally at Franklin Union last evening had a varied and interesting program which included a salute to the flag, led by sailors from the Navy Yard; singing of patriotic songs, motion pictures of war activities and addresses on the value of recreation for soldiers and sailors by Herbert D. Heathfield and Dr Charles Fleischer.

There was a special tribute to our ancient ally, France, introducing "The Marseilles Hymn" and Gen Pershing's sententious remark at Lafayette's tomb: "Lafayette, here we are."

TWO WEEK'S POSTPONEMENT IN MRS BENNETT'S CASES

At the request of counsel for the plaintiff, hearing in the cases of Mrs Mary Alice Bennett of Beverly against Albert Boyden and others and the Beverly National Bank was put over for two weeks.

The cases came up before Judge De Courcy in the Supreme Court yesterday on the report of F. Rockwood Hall, as master. Mr Hall finds in favor of the defendants, stating that none of the charges of the plaintiff was sustained.

Mrs Bennett sought damages for alleged conspiracy to defraud her out of property of her husband, Allen W. Bennett, for 20 years cashier of the Beverly National Bank, who died Dec 13, 1913.

INSURANCE MEN GUESTS AT HICKS' ANNIVERSARY DINNER

J. Everett Hicks, Boston manager of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, gave a dinner at Young's Hotel last night to commemorate his fifth anniversary as local head of the company. He had as guests Sylvan B. Phillips, secretary of the company; Dr Edwin M. Northcott, chief medical director; Dr Albert Awde, superintendent of agencies, all of Portland, Me, the home office; George M. Mask of Nashua, N H, manager for New Hampshire and Vermont; Walter L. Joseph, manager of Montreal William Durbrow, New York manager; Arthur W. Dudley, Maurice P. Porter, David E. Sprague, George E. Mansfield, William R. Spinney and Dr Stephen K. Patten, all of the Boston office.

Informal speaking followed the dinner, a plan for "a drive for $1,000,000

N.Y. WORLD Nov. 5, 1917-

BALTIMORE THREAT TO MOB DR. MUCK

Ex-Gov. Warfield Says He Will Lead Patriots' Crowd if German Leads Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 4.—If Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra attempt to give the scheduled concert here next Wednesday night, there will be riot instead of a symphony, unless the situation changes in the mean time.

Ex-Gov. Warfield, who notified the Police Board that there would be serious trouble if an attempt was made to give the concert, said to-day he would be willing to lead a mob in breaking it up.

He has arranged for a patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon. It will be attended by a detachment of National Army men from Camp Meade, and the music will be furnished by the Camp Meade band.

The objects of this meeting are to reaffirm the allegiance of the people of Baltimore to the country, its flag and anthem, and "to protest against the insults to the 'Star Spangled Banner' by Dr. Karl Muck of Germany." N.Y. World 11/5

N.Y. WORLD (EDITORIAL) - NOV. 5, 1917-

MUCH ADO ABOUT DR. MUCK.

Dr. Karl Muck, it seems, has resigned as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pickwickian sense. He continues to lead the orchestra and will lead it at concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington this week, and on the attitude of the audiences in these cities will depend his future status. If they voice "a public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the society's programme," Dr. Muck will go and eventually the orchestra will be disbanded.

Is there not too much ado about Dr. Muck? There is no public clamor against German symphony music, which is wholly different from German opera, and there is no desire anywhere to have the famous Boston orchestra disband.

The whole question is as concerns its alien conductor's position with regard to playing the national anthem, a position he made needlessly offensive by his failure to use ordinary tact in the matter. His artistic usefulness in this country may be done for, but that fact in no way impairs the orchestra's usefulness. It was a great musical organization before Muck and should continue to exemplify its high ideals without him.

POST - NOV. 6, 1917-

PHILADELPHIA CORDIAL TO BOSTON ORCHESTRA

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, gave the first of the season's series of concerts at the Academy of Music tonight. Both were cordially received.

GLOBE NOV. 4, 1917-

MUCK TO TOUR WITH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

No Move Yet on Proffered Resignation by Leader

Ex-Governor Threatens Violence If Muck Goes to Baltimore

Globe Nov. 4

The proffered resignation of Dr Karl Muck as leader of the Symphony Orchestra had not been acted upon by Maj Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the orchestra, late last night.

Dr Muck will conduct the orchestra on its concert tour of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, this week, it was announced at the close of last night's concert here, and will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of each concert.

Dr Muck conducted while the orchestra played the National anthem as the closing number of last evening's concert. An audience which filled Symphony Hall stood while it was played, and not another sound could be heard. When it was finished there was enthusiastic applause. Dr Muck walked up-stage among the musicians and then turned toward the audience and bowed.

A canvass of the Symphony Orchestra last evening revealed that there are 27 musicians who are subjects of the Central Powers, and three others whose citizenship is doubtful.

Germans predominate. There are 41 Germans, including Dr Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, of whom three are naturalized.

Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, five of Great Britian, and one of Bohemia.

In addition, there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

EX-GOVERNOR THREATENING BALTIMORE MOB VIOLENCE

BALTIMORE, Nov 3—If Dr Karl Muck comes to Baltimore, as expected, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Wednesday, it looks as if there will be trouble at the Lyric.

Ex-Gov Warfield, who has arranged a great protest meeting in the Lyric for Tuesday afternoon, declared Muck would be prevented from conducting in Baltimore, "by mob violence, if necessary."

He has warned the Police Board not to grant a permit for the concert, if Muck is to conduct it. The commissioners replied that they had no right to interfere unless assured that peace would be menaced.

HERALD, NOV. 6, 1917-

A MUSICAL PRECEDENT.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr. Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra, by violent attacks in the daily press, are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to "strafe" the French. They are "shelling" the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to "strafe" its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

As for "The Star Spangled Banner" episode, a similar situation occurred in the Thomas Orchestra in New York at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The many German ticket-holders of the Thomas concerts demanded that the orchestra should play the "Wacht am Rhein" to celebrate the Prussian victory, after its regular program was ended. Theodore Thomas was an American, first, last and all the time, and although he was very willing to play the German national hymn for his German friends, he was not willing to humiliate the one French musician in the orchestra, who was equally his friend. So he sent for the player during the intermission and said: "We shall play the "Wacht am Rhein" tonight after the program, and probably for a number of other evenings. I know this will be very painful to you, so I give you permission to leave the stage and go home before the closing number of the program whenever this is the case."

Maj. Higginson cannot, perhaps, excuse Dr. Muck and his German colleagues from the orchestra when "The Star Spangled Banner" is to be played, nor can he ignore the desire of the public to hear from time to time our national anthem rendered by our greatest musical organization. But we may safely trust him to do what is wise, just and right, not only to his country and the public, but to the members of his orchestra, whatever their nationality, and he alone should be the judge of when and how often his German musicians shall be required to play the music which above all other most deeply incites American hearts to "carry on" with the war against their fatherland. Nor should he be forced by popular clamor from unreflecting people into any course which "may bring disaster" (to use his own words) upon the precious institution which he has created and for so many years maintained for the joy and the spiritual uplift of our city.

MRS. THEODORE THOMAS.

2 Willard court, Cambridge, Nov. 2.

- N.Y. WORLD, NOV. 5, 1917 -

46

CARUSO KISSES HAND TO AMERICA'S ROCKS

"Star Spangled Banner" Is Artistic Enough for Him, and He Will Sing It.

ENRICO CARUSO.
by World Staff Photographed Yesterday.

Enrico Caruso, gay of heart and in excellent health, reached New York yesterday. On Monday, Nov. 12, he will make his initial appearance of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House.

The celebrated tenor was so happy when setting foot on Manhattan Island, following his arrival at an American port, that he knelt and kissed his hand to the rock-ribbed foundations upon which the city is built. His ocean trip was from Brazil and he chose as his route the only neutral line from the United States to South American republics, the Commercial-South America Line.

While waiting for his friends to arrange for his start to the Hotel Knickerbocker, where he will make his home, Caruso was told of the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who resigned after playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

It's Good Enough for Him.

"Why, I will sing 'The Star Spangled Banner; it's good enough music for me!" he said.

Caruso was then told that some friends of Dr. Muck have stated his refusal was because the music of the national anthem was not artistic.

"Ah, art! It ought to be good enough for those who make a living in this country! I think it was very foolish of Dr. Muck to refuse to play it. Now, as for me, I intend to practice, for one must study hard to learn it. Of course, I know the air and I wish to impress upon you that I wouldn't be ashamed to sing it."

The situation in Italy was of great interest to Caruso. He asked for the latest news and seemed deeply grieved to hear of the continuous retreat of the armies.

"Well, if they need me, I'll go!" he said, and those hearing him knew he spoke from the depth of his heart. He is forty-four years old though, and as yet men of his age have not been called to the colors.

The commander of the vessel bringing Caruso to the United States said that on the night the wireless brought the first news of the great attack upon the Italians Caruso remained awake until daylight. He walked up and down in the saloon, with his head bowed and in great grief.

Upon reaching New York Caruso was greeted and embraced by Gatti-Casazza, Antonio Scotti, Andreas de Segurola, Salvatore Fuciti, Otto Weil and Miss Jacoletti, sister of his brother's wife.

Sang Often for Charity.

After the greetings were exchanged and arrangements completed for removal to his hotel of the thirty-four pieces of baggage he brought with him, Caruso stated to interviewers that he had appeared forty times in the opera houses at Buenos Ayres, Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, although his contract called for only thirty performances. He also sang at twelve concerts, given for American, Italian, British, French and Belgian relief organizations.

"I am glad to say that more than $100,000 was realized," he said. He then added that his other fond remembrance of this tour in South America is the gold medal presented him by the American colony in Buenos Ayres.

Caruso said that on the opening night at the Metropolitan he will sing Rhadames in Verdi's "Aida." During the voyage northward he was constantly in practice of his roles in two operas new to him. One is "Le Prophete" and the other "Love of Three Kings," by Montemezzi.

The steamship bringing Caruso also brought Signor Vincenzo Bellezza, second conductor of the Colon Opera House in Buenos Ayres. He is here to conduct concerts for war charities. Signorina Placida Battazzi, premiere danseuse of the same opera house, who may become known to patrons of the Metropolitan Opera House, also arrived.

ADVERTISER - NOV. 6, 1917-

MUSICIANS' HEAD CENSURES MUCK

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was criticised yesterday in a letter issued by J. N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians. He takes the stand that the playing of the National Anthem could not interfere with an artistic program, but would give it distinction.

Weber states in a letter to Mayor Curley:—

"The American Federation of Musicians feels it is its duty to take notice of your patriotic action in insisting that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The position taken by Dr. Muck, which is to the effect that the playing of our sacred National Anthem would interfere with the artistic standard of a musical program is, in the opinion of the 85,000 musicians belonging to the American Federation, untenable, as the national anthem, in so far as we Americans are concerned, expresses love of country, respect for our Flag, as well as true patriotism, and thereby gives to any program a distinction far outweighing in nobility of sentiment and descriptive powers any number ever composed during all times by any composer, no matter how illustrious he may be."

ADVERTISER - NOV. 6, 1917 -

BALTIMORE BARS BOSTON SYMPHONY

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore today sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered. The action came at the recommendation of the Grand Jury, after plans had been perfected for a huge mass-meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Formal protest against the concert was filed with the police board by the Grand Jury today.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore, and that the concert should not be held, as it was feared that a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said that a letter would be sent by the Grand Jury to former Gov. Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

GLOBE
-Nov. 6, 1917-

BAR SYMPHONY IN BALTIMORE

Agitation Against Muck Results in Action

Grand Jury Fears Disorder and Even Bloodshed If He Appears

Special Dispatch to the Globe

BALTIMORE, Nov 5—Dr Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from appearing in Baltimore Wednesday night.

As a result of threats of mob violence and protests, in which Ex-Gov Edwin Warfield, descendant of a distinguished Revolutionary family, took a leading part, the Grand Jury today notified the Police Commissioners that, owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, Dr Muck should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore, and that the concert should be called off.

The Police Commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Continued on the Eighth Page.

Police Fear Outbreak

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert being given by the orchestra, whether under the direction of Dr Muck or not. The marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused, he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

Upon learning the action of the Police Commissioners, Ex-Gov Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for tomorrow, said:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck and is in the interest of peace and order.

"Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore.

"We never had any objection to the orchestra; we would have been willing to have the concert take place if somebody else had conducted. We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic program.

Music Lovers Disappointed

"The Grand Jury's protest and the police commissioners' action will be read from the stage at the meeting tomorrow and resolutions will be adopted for the playing of the anthem in the future."

The many devotees of music and lovers of the Symphony concert are much disappointed. Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said "it should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

MAJ HIGGINSON SILENT ON BALTIMORE'S ACTION

Maj Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Symphony Orchestra, was told of the refusal of the Baltimore Police Commissioners to allow the orchestra to play in Baltimore, while he was dining at the Tavern Club last night. Word was sent back that he was too busy to comment on it.

COMMENDS MAYOR'S STAND ON PLAYING U. S. ANTHEM

Pres J. N. Weber of the American Federation of Musicians yesterday wrote to Mayor Curley, commending the Mayor, in behalf of that organization, upon his action in insisting that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Record
Nov. 5, 1917.

When this Symphony rumpus is all nicely settled and tucked away why not see to it that every stump speaker hereafter shall drape himself in the flag and sing the National Anthem in that key which least violates his vocal apparatus, self-esteem and the public welfare?

BOSTON AMERICAN
Nov. 5, 1917-

THREAT TO MOB DR. MUCK IN BALTIMORE

Dr. Karl Muck will meet with mob violence if he is permitted to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its scheduled concert in Baltimore Wednesday night, according to ex-Governor Edwin Warfield of Maryland.

Incensed at the failure of the noted leader to play the "Star Spangled Banner" until public clamor forced its inclusion in the Symphony program, the aged ex-Governor threatens to lead a mob against Dr. Muck if the Police Board members sanction his appearance in the Maryland capital, Baltimore dispatches stated today.

"Karl Muck shall not lead an orchestra in Baltimore," ex-Governor Warfield is quoted as saying. "I told the Police Board members that this man would not be allowed to insult the people of the birthplace of the 'Star Spangled Banner.' I told them that mob violence would prevent it, if necessary, and that I would gladly lead the mob to prevent the insult to my country's flag. I told them that I knew of a thousand others who would gladly aid in leading the throng.

"HAVE ONLY CONTEMPT."

"Our people have only contempt for the man who utters a criticism of the demand to play our national anthem.

"We consider it a symphony incomparable at a time like this, greater than anything ever composed in Germany, more glorious and befitting the hearing of true Americans than the works of any composer living or dead. We deny that our anthem jars with any harmony or symphony to which the American people should listen."

"'The Star Spangled Banner' will be sung when the others are long since forgotten."

Ex-Governor Warfield has called a patriotic meeting tomorrow afternoon to protest against Dr. Muck leading the orchestra at Wednesday night's concert.

In the meantime, in an open letter to the public, Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra and staunch defender of Dr. Muck, takes upon himself all the blame for the failure of the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at the recent concert at Providence.

He states positively that Dr. Muck not only had never refused to play the anthem, but had never been asked to play it, and did not know of "requests" from Providence women until after his return to Boston.

Major Higginson confessed he was provoked at an apparent "hold up," and perhaps made a mistake in refusing to change the program, but he begs the public to blame him, and him alone.

THE LETTER.

His letter reads:

"In these times of great stress and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defence of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me thirty-six years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that "The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Providence, Tuesday night.

"Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

ABUSIVE LETTERS.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful.

"It should seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of the orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

PLAYED WHEN ASKED.

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. To the many men and women often strangers to me—who have written or spoken in sympathy with this plan I offer hearty thanks.

PRAISES PLAYERS.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone.

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON.
"Boston, Nov. 4, 1917."

TRAVELER
Nov. 5, 1917

COMES TO DEFENCE OF DR. MUCK

Maj. Higginson Assumes Any Blame Due in Anthem Affair.

ALONE RESPONSIBLE FOR PROVIDENCE ACT

Maj. Henry L. Higginson last night issued the following statement regarding the recent controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"In these times of great stress and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

Grateful to Courteous Public.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defence of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful.

"It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for "The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver.'

CONTINUED

TRAVELER
(continued)

Played It as Soon as Asked.

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone.

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Pastor Praises Dr. Muck and Symphony Orchestra

The Rev. William M. Gilbert, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Temple street, in his sermon last night on "Our National Asset" appealed for fair play toward the Germans in this country while the United States is at war.

He said:

"The greatest national asset is biological, or the mixture of other races into one. Scotland gives us backbone; Sweden gives us cleanliness; France her romance; Italy her music; Germany her scientific thoroughness; that thus far has been able to defy the world. Add all these together, with several others, and you get an American.

"Even though at war with Germany, we must mention the training that we owe to her. I admire greatly the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck and his orchestra in complying with the popular clamor of the thoughtless crowd. Put the shoe on the other foot, and how would you feel if, living temporarily in Berlin, you were compelled to play the German national anthem?

"I wish to voice a word of appreciation for their doing it, and add an appeal to American sense of fair play. Let's be square with the loyal Germans in our land. They are in an awkward position.

"Their judgment points one way and the ingrained patriotism of their fathers struggles for the mastery. While we fight for democracy, let us not forget our heritage from the Germans who have helped us in building our nation. Let us not forget Baron Steuben any more than we forget Lafayette of France."

POST
Nov. 5, 1917.

IS IT TRUE OR NOT?

A Pittsburg despatch tells of the cancelling of the engagement of Fritz Kreisler, the eminent Austrian violinist, who was to play to a couple of clubs in that city, on the ground that the musician is an Austrian officer and is reported to be sending money he receives from concerts back to his country for the support of his former comrades-in-arms.

Americans need not refrain from hearing this great artist because he is an Austrian, or even because he has served as an officer in the Austrian army. But if the latter part of the report is true, no patriotic citizen of the United States can consistently give him any financial support.

Not an American dollar should go to the support of the soldiers of a country that is an ally of the enemy of this country. Is the Kreisler story true, or not?

POST, OCT. 6, 1917.

BALTIMORE SHUTS OUT SYMPHONY

Pro-Muck

Threats of Violence if Dr. Muck Appears —Puts Up Bars

DR. KARL MUCK,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MAJOR HIGGINSON DECLINES TO COMMENT

Major Henry L. Higginson last night declined to comment on the news that Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been barred by the city of Baltimore and that the scheduled concert for tomorrow night had been forbidden by the police.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 5.—Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore Wednesday night.

As a result of threats of mob violence, in which former Governor Edwin Warfield took a leading part, the grand jury today notified the police commissioners that owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed,

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA BARRED IN BALTIMORE

Post 7th

Continued From First Page

the conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore and that the concert should be called off. The police commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

OPPOSED CONCERT ANYWAY

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert being given by the orchestra whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

Upon learning the action of the police commissioner, former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for tomorrow, said:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra, we would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the Symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

MONITOR
NOV. 5, 1916

APPEAL MADE FOR CONDUCTOR MUCK

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, Founder, Says He Alone Is to Blame for Situation With Regard to 'Star Spangled Banner'

Appealing to the public not to lay the blame for the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30, on Karl Muck, the conductor, and his men, Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and sustainer of the organization issues a statement, as follows:

"In these times of great stress and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence, unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful.

"It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone."

RECORD
NOV. 5, 1917-

MUCK CATCHES IT FROM HEAD OF MUSICIANS

Record——Nov. 5

Pres. Weber Says His Position on National Anthem Is Bad

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was criticised today in a letter issued by J. N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians. He takes the stand that the playing of the National Anthem could not interfere with an artistic program, but would give it distinction.

Weber states in a letter to Mayor Curley:—

"The American Federation of Musicians feels it is its duty to take notice of your patriotic action in insisting that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The position taken by Dr. Muck, which is to the effect that the playing of our sacred National Anthem would interfere with the artistic standard of a musical program is, in the opinion of the 85,000 musicians belonging to the American Federation, untenable, as the national anthem, insofar as we Americans are concerned, expresses love of country, respect for our Flag, as well as true patriotism, and thereby gives to any program a distinction far outweighing in nobility of sentiment and descriptive powers any number ever composed during all times by any composer, no matter how illustrious he may be."

"AIN'T NATURE WONDERFUL?" Do

N.Y. TIMES
- NOV. 5, 1917.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

All's Well That Ends Well.

It is a safe prophecy that the terrible tempest that has been raging around the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. MUCK as the pivot of cyclonic revolution, will now die away and that visitors to the scene of disturbance will find that it caused neither loss of life nor destruction of property.

The eminent conductor, having discovered many indications that the American nation faced with composure his warning that for him to order, or even to ask, his musicians to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" would cause the instant dissolution of the admirable organization built up by the toil of years, evidently came to the conclusion that the danger to the orchestra was as great from the outside as from the inside. Whether it was a request or a command that he issued to his aids is not for common folk to know, but—the anthem was played, with Dr. MUCK as leader, and nothing at all happened except that his auditors applauded with vigor. His Prussian heart did not break, the musicians did not revolt, and musical art, so far as has yet been reported, seems likely to survive for some time this granting by one group of its votaries of a slight concession to public sentiment as it exists in time of war.

That the doctor thus promptly and gracefully descended to earth from a horse of notable altitude is highly creditable to his common sense, and even if it was a little surprising in one of such iron rigidity as men of Prussian birth are supposed to be, we are all ready to accept as satisfactory his assurance that he loves us as much as—and no more than—he did before.

No great apprehensions will be excited by the news that coincidentally, or contemporaneously, with his coming down from the steed aforementioned Dr. MUCK placed his resignation in the hands of Major HIGGINSON. Everybody knows that between the action meant by that dear old phrase and the real resigning of anything there is a difference so large that between the two there is practically no relation at all.

As the end, if end it be, of an episode promising many agreeable excitements, this is a bit disappointing to sincere sportsmen, but there is enough of war going on elsewhere than in symphony orchestras to satisfy the demands of all except the morbidly militant, and about the best of advice that could be given to all concerned can be condensed into the inelegant but perspicuous locution, "Forget it!"

HERALD
NOV. 6, 1917.

48

FORBID CONCERT BY SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Herald Nov-6

Baltimore Police Commissioners Fear Disturbance Based on Patriotism.

THE GRAND JURY PROTESTED

Great Mass Meeting Today Will Voice State's Devotion to National Anthem.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5—The police commissioners of Baltimore today sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony orchestra Wednesday night on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the state will denounce the reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the grand jury to former Gov. Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

TRAVELER (EDITORIAL) NOV. 5, 1917.

But why should any ex-mayor of Baltimore try to prevent Dr. Muck from leading the symphony orchestra in that city? Isn't that carrying "patriotism" a little beyond a reasonable limit?

RECORD, NOV. 2, 1917.

"The Star Spangled Banner" Again

The Record has received the following letter from Major Higginson, which it is glad to print:—

I have the word of the reporter of The Record, as well as an editorial. Certainly The Record is entitled to its own opinion. It omits the fact that at the popular concerts last spring the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner every night, as well as America.

The reporter prints that I said I would abandon the orchestra altogether rather than break the contract with the players and the public. I did not say so; and, what is more, the paragraph contradicts itself. If you touch the matter at all, pray state that I alone am responsible. As a matter of opinion, it would seem to me inadvisable for the public to undertake the management of these concerts which have been under my charge and on my account for so many years. If they have not been satisfactory, why not let them and me alone?

Once more, Doctor Muck has not been asked to play the Star Spangled Banner. I have been asked.

Yours very truly,
H. L. Higginson.

Major Higginson's irritation is as natural as the situation is deplorable. The superlative excellence of the Symphony Orchestra and its concerts has not and cannot be questioned; nor do we think any good Bostonian could fail to take a fine pride in the band and in Major Higginson's work in making it possible and permanent. The exoneration of Dr. Muck is recorded with satisfaction.

The public's state of mind just now is not normal. There has arisen in this connection an issue of taste and tact. The artistic objections to introduction of a Symphony concert with the National anthem may be admitted. But it seems to us that in view of a somewhat excited public opinion the tactful course, and the wise one, would be to yield the point and place the anthem where this public demand asks it to be placed. Our great orchestra is a public institution, and in view of its importance it is not quite sufficient to say that its performances concern only those who play and those who listen. We quite agree that it would be inadvisable for the public to undertake the management of these concerts; but it is inevitable that the performances of so prominent an institution should be a public concern. Business has found that the comfortable slogan "business as usual" will not hold now. We must come to the parallel discovery that taste must bend to emotional emergencies.

MONITOR
NOV. 3, 1917

RECORD
NOV. 5, 1917

CONCERT PUBLIC ASSERTS ITSELF

Playing of National Air by Boston Orchestra Studied in Light of Providence, R. I., Incident

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor; Miss Frances Nash, Soloist—Fourth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Nov. 2, 1917: Sibelius, fourth symphony in A minor, op. 63; Saint-Saëns, piano concerto in G minor, op. 22; Beethoven, overture to "Leonore," No. 3, op. 72; "The Star Spangled Banner."

The playing of the national anthem of the United States at the close of the concert on Friday afternoon is to be taken, in part, as an acknowledgment by the Boston public of a rebuke administered to it by the public of Providence, R. I. The performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" tune on this occasion must be regarded as an expression of regret that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, acting in obedience to a decision of the business management, did not present the piece, when requested to do so, at its appearance in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30. Whether the Boston public will go so far as to demand that the resignation of the Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in the hands of the founder and sustainer of the organization, Maj. Henry L. Higginson, be accepted, remains to be seen. But enough surely has been done so that the amenities which have always subsisted between the larger and the smaller of the two New England communities are restored.

Apology has been made, and it will not have to be made to the citizens of any town where the orchestra appears hereafter, since the anthem is to be on every program presented the rest of the season. But while satisfaction may have been given, the origin of the strained situation of the past few days is worth a word. The refusal of the Symphony Orchestra management to have the national air performed, even though the people who made the request were not patrons of the Providence concerts, can hardly be called anything but an inexcusable affront. For the women who were the chief signers to the telegram sent to C. A. Ellis, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played in Infantry Hall, stood in a comprehensive way for the city of Providence and for the State of Rhode Island, being officers of social and educational clubs and federations. Their interest in a nationally renowned organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not to be ignored simply on the ground that they did not directly represent the concert subscribers. The people as a whole assuredly have a certain right of access to the great educative institutions of the land, even to institutions which a comparatively small part of the population supports. The moment they do not have this right, the institutions become exclusive. And exclusive is precisely what the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed itself in Providence.

Now who wants any high and mighty nonsense about music? Or about art of any kind? Business managers may want it, but certainly those who attend concerts do not, though they may pay $50, more or less, for their season tickets. No, indeed; music does not thrive on exclusiveness. The Boston musical public, its sentiments voiced in the brief address of Major Higginson at the opening of the Friday concert, has hastened to register itself as opposed to the idea that it wishes to detach itself from the rest of the community in the cultivation of art. It has hastened, furthermore, to record itself as frowning upon action, like that of the Symphony Orchestra business management in Providence, which violates the laws of the fundamental fine art, the art of good manners. But perhaps it has carried its chastening far enough. And inasmuch as the national air has become an official number on all programs of the orchestra, let those who have been crying out against what occurred at Providence recognize, in turn, their obligations. Let none of them behave like tax dodgers and leave the hall before "The Star Spangled Banner" is played.

The closing number of the fourth program may be said to be entitled to the bulk of discussion because it was a novelty. Mention, however, should be made of the soloist, Miss ...sh, whose work in the Saint-Saëns ...minor piano concerto was brilliant ...technique and charming in interpretation and was well received. Her appearance was a delight to the eye.

MAJOR HIGGINSON LAUDS ORCHESTRA

Says Members Deserve Thanks For Working Together So Loyally

"PLAYED ANTHEM FIRST TIME THEY WERE ASKED"

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Symphony Orchestra, issued another statement last night, in which he again assumes the entire responsibility for the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its recent Providence concert; points out that the first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play the National Anthem, they played it; and declares that each member of the organization merits hearty thanks for "working well and loyally under most trying circumstances."

"In these times of great stress and woe," begins Maj. Higginson, "it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of tickets at once and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person.

"The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who have written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be dictinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone."

Maj. Higginson is still in possession of the proffered resignation of Dr. Muck, and is giving it his consideration.

Dr. Muck will continue conducting the orchestra on its concert tour of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore this week, and will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of each concert.

A canvass of the big orchestra reveals the fact that 27 of the musicians are subjects of the Central Powers. The citizenship of three others is doubtful.

Germans predominate in the orchestra. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of which 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen ative Americans are also members of the famous organization.

Record Nov. 5

JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

OCT 14

As the concert season draws nearer, the number of important events increases and already the definite announcement of the Ellis and Steinert courses has been supplemented by that of single concerts, of which the first will be given this evening at the Strand, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Congress of Mothers for the benefit of the Camp Library Fund. Two weeks later will come a concert by Creatore's Band and Operatic Chorus in Fay's Theatre, to be followed in rapid succession by the first concert of the Ellis course in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, when Geraldine Farrar will make the second of her two appearances this season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the first concert in the Steinert series in Fay's Theatre on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 4, when the soloist will be Frieda Hempel.

With this auspicious beginning, four more concerts in the Ellis course, three in the Steinert course, and the usual two concerts by the University Glee Club announced last week in this column, numerous club concerts of wide variety, with the probability of other announcements soon to follow, Providence will hardly lack for music during the winter.

* * *

RECORD

Philadelphia, Pa.

OCT

—The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Philadelphia this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at George T. Haly's office, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, No. 1119 Chestnut street, tomorrow morning. The season will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra itself and the thirty-third consecutive season in which the orchestra has been a visitor to this city. The orchestra's first appearance here was in the spring of 1885 and since 1888 the number of concerts given each winter has never been less than five and for several years there were 10.

This year, as has been the case for years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music on Monday evenings. The dates are November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. For the first time in its history the orchestra opens a season without any changes in personnel. During the last two or three years, the changes have been few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the army draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call whenever that comes. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madam Melba will appear. She recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia, primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand ... early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring, and in addition to her appearance in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Philadelphia during the coming winter will be at the January concert. The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal the orchestra acclaimed her a remarkable artist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with much success and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

* * *

49
MONITOR
NOV, 3, 1917

RECORD
NOV. 5, 1917

CONCERT PUBLIC ASSERTS ITSELF

Playing of National Air by Boston Orchestra Studied in Light of Providence, R. I., Incident

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor; Miss Frances Nash, Soloist—Fourth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Nov. 2, 1917: Sibelius, fourth symphony in A minor, op. 63; Saint-Saëns, piano concerto in G minor, op. 22; Beethoven, overture to "Leonore," No. 3, op. 72; "The Star Spangled Banner."

The playing of the national anthem of the United States at the close of the concert on Friday afternoon is to be taken, in part, as an acknowledgment by the Boston public of a rebuke administered to it by the public of Providence, R. I. The performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" tune on this occasion must be regarded as an expression of regret that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, acting in obedience to a decision of the business management, did not present the piece, when requested to do so, at its appearance in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30. Whether the Boston public will go so far as to demand that the resignation of the Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in the hands of the founder and sustainer of the organization, Maj. Henry L. Higginson, be accepted, remains to be seen. But enough surely has been done so that the amenities which have always subsisted between the larger and the smaller of the two New England communities are restored.

Apology has been made, and it will not have to be made to the citizens of any town where the orchestra appears hereafter, since the anthem is to be on every program presented the rest of the season. But while satisfaction may have been given, the origin of the strained situation of the past few days is worth a word. The refusal of the Symphony Orchestra management to have the national air performed, even though the people who made the request were not patrons of the Providence concerts, can hardly be called anything but an inexcusable affront. For the women who were the chief signers to the telegram sent to C. A. Ellis, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played in Infantry Hall, stood in a comprehensive way for the city of Providence and for the State of Rhode Island, being officers of social and educational clubs and federations. Their interest in a nationally renowned organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not to be ignored simply on the ground that they did not directly represent the concert subscribers. The people as a whole assuredly have a certain right of access to the great educative institutions of the land, even to institutions which a comparatively small part of the population supports. The moment they do not have this right, the institutions become exclusive. And exclusive is precisely what the Boston Symphony Orchestra showed itself in Providence.

Now who wants any high and mighty nonsense about music? Or about art of any kind? Business managers may want it, but certainly those who attend concerts do not, though they may pay $50, more or less, for their season tickets. No, indeed; music does not thrive on exclusiveness. The Boston musical public, its sentiments voiced in the brief address of Major Higginson at the opening of the Friday concert, has hastened to register itself as opposed to the idea that it wishes to detach itself from the rest of the community in the cultivation of art. It has hastened, furthermore, to record itself as frowning upon action, like that of the Symphony Orchestra business management in Providence, which violates the laws of the fundamental fine art, the art of good manners. But perhaps it has carried its chastening far enough. And inasmuch as the national air has become an official number on all programs of the orchestra, let those who have been crying out against what occurred at Providence recognize, in turn, their obligations. Let none of them behave like tax dodgers and leave the hall before "The Star Spangled Banner" is played.

The closing number of the fourth program may be said to be entitled to the bulk of discussion because it was a novelty. Mention, however, should be made of the soloist, Miss ...sh, whose work in the Saint-Saëns ...minor piano concerto was brilliant ...technique and charming in interpretation and was well received. Her appearance was a delight to the eye.

MAJOR HIGGINSON LAUDS ORCHESTRA

Says Members Deserve Thanks For Working Together So Loyally

"PLAYED ANTHEM FIRST TIME THEY WERE ASKED"

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the Symphony Orchestra, issued another statement last night, in which he again assumes the entire responsibility for the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its recent Providence concert; points out that the first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play the National Anthem, they played it; and declares that each member of the organization merits hearty thanks for "working well and loyally under most trying circumstances."

"In these times of great stress and woe," begins Maj. Higginson, "it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, Oct. 29 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some ladies in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of tickets at once and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person.

"The request of the ladies was not mentioned to Dr. Muck and the orchestra and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr. Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some anonymous, some abusive and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers it would have been pleasantly considered; but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming at the last moment from people unknown to me.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and women—often strangers to me—who have written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be dictinctly understood that Dr. Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence ladies, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone."

Maj. Higginson is still in possession of the proffered resignation of Dr. Muck, and is giving it his consideration.

Dr. Muck will continue conducting the orchestra on its concert tour of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore this week, and will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of each concert.

A canvass of the big orchestra reveals the fact that 27 of the musicians are subjects of the Central Powers. The citizenship of three others is doubtful.

Germans predominate in the orchestra. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of which 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen ative Americans are also members of the famous organization.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
OCT 14

As the concert season draws nearer, the number of important events increases and already the definite announcement of the Ellis and Steinert courses has been supplemented by that of single concerts, of which the first will be given this evening at the Strand, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Congress of Mothers for the benefit of the Camp Library Fund. Two weeks later will come a concert by Creatore's Band and Operatic Chorus in Fay's Theatre, to be followed in rapid succession by the first concert of the Ellis course in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, when Geraldine Farrar will make the second of her two appearances this season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the first concert in the Steinert series in Fay's Theatre on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 4, when the soloist will be Frieda Hempel.

With this auspicious beginning, four more concerts in the Ellis course, three in the Steinert course, and the usual two concerts by the University Glee Club announced last week in this column, numerous club concerts of wide variety, with the probability of other announcements soon to follow, Providence will hardly lack for music during the winter.

* * *

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
OCT

—The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Philadelphia this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at George T. Haly's office, in Heppe's Piano Rooms, No. 1119 Chestnut street, tomorrow morning. The season will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra itself and the thirty-third consecutive season in which the orchestra has been a visitor to this city. The orchestra's first appearance here was in the spring of 1885 and since 1888 the number of concerts given each winter has never been less than five and for several years there were 10.

This year, as has been the case for years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music on Monday evenings. The dates are November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. For the first time in its history the orchestra opens a season without any changes in personnel. During the last two or three years, the changes have been few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the army draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call whenever that comes. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madam Melba will appear. She recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia, primarily to appear with the Chicago [illegible] early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring, and in addition to her appearance in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Philadelphia during the coming winter will be at the January concert. The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, a Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal the orchestra acclaimed her a remarkable artist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with much success and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

* * *

Record Nov. 5

REDUCTION

RATIO

17x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

THE EVENING TRIBUNE PROVIDENCE
~ OCT. 31, 1917 ~

50

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE ON NATIONAL ANTHEM VIGOROUSLY CONDEMNED

SYMPHONY MANAGER'S EXPLANATION

Why "The Star-Spangled Banner" Was Not Played Last Night.

Boston, Oct. 31.—C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said here to-day that he had received a telegram signed by a number of women asking that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played at a concert in Providence last night, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, did not know such a telegram had been received, Ellis added.

"During our pop concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner'," said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the number was not played."

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE VIGOROUSLY CONDEMNED

(Continued from Page One.)

it from many sources in the city, which it will want to receive before giving a definite statement, but we will say at this time that if the Board was requested that an orchestra playing in Providence be required to begin its program with 'The Star Spangled Banner,' we should consider such a suggestion most seriously."

Commissioner Edward J. McCaffrey added: "And don't forget that this Board is composed of three red-blooded Americans."

VETERANS PROTEST.

Thomas W. Connell Post. No. 45, Veterans of Foreign Wars, who were refused admittance to the concert last evening, among other local organizations of a patriotic and semi-patriotic nature, has made a formal protest to the Police Commission, and the Commission has been in informal conversation with a number of bodies concerning the obligatory playing of the American national air at the opening concert program in this city.

VIGOROUS CONDEMNATION.

The Rhode Island branch of the Council of National Defence to-day passed resolutions condemning the action of Dr. Karl Muck of Boston, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" when requested to do so at a concert in Infantry Hall last night. The resolutions also urge the Board of Police Commissioners to refuse further permits to this orchestra for concerts in Providence when conducted by Dr. Muck. The resolution is as follows:

"Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, having refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall, Providence, R. I., during the evening of Oct. 30, 1917, although requested to do so by nine State organizations, including the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Council of Defence at a regularly called meeting, held in the Governor's office of the State House, Providence, Oct. 31, unreservedly condemns the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude and respectfully urges the Police Commission of the city of Providence to refuse permission to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in the city of Providence during the present war when conducted by the said Karl Muck."

REQUEST WAS IGNORED.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was not played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the first of a series of concerts to be given by that organization in this city this season.

The program of Russian, Hungarian and German music was rendered as advertised, the demand of the Presidents of the musical clubs of this city and of the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island that the national hymn of the United States be played, being completely ignored.

In order to prevent the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by many Americans who had announced their intention of attending the concert, including members of Thomas W. Connell Post, No. 45, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and prominent members of local women's clubs and musical societies, the management refused to sell tickets at the door of Infantry Hall last night, to any but regular subscribers to the series.

There were many vacant seats in the hall throughout the evening, but even when this fact was called to the attention of the management none of those present who wished to attend the concert were able to purchase a ticket.

That the management of the orchestra expected trouble last evening was made evident when it became known that Col. Henry L. Higginson of Lee, Higginson & Co. of Boston, the patron of the organization, had come here with the orchestra. He returned with the musicians to Boston.

ONLY SUBSCRIBERS.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the organization in Boston, did not appear in Infantry Hall until the time for the concert to begin had arrived. In the meantime the hall was in charge of Assistant Manager Brennan, who announced that no one could purchase tickets at the door unless the applicants were regular subscribers to the series.

Among those who were unable to secure admission to the hall was Mrs. James E. McConnell, President of the Chaminade Club. Mrs. McConnell was told, she said, that Mr. Ellis had announced that none of the women who had signed the joint request which was telegraphed to Mr. Ellis yesterday requesting that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played was a subscriber to the symphony course.

Federal Agent Recommends Prohibition of Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra.--Local Police Board Says Anthem Must Be Played.

DR. KARL MUCK
Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Whose Action in Refusing to Have the Orchestra Play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Is Vigorously Condemned.

Special Agent Tom Howick of the Department of Justice is sending a detailed report to the department in Washington and the special agent in Boston concerning the action of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Prof. Karl Muck, in refraining from playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the concert in Infantry Hall last evening.

"It was an outrage," said Mr. Howick this morning, "and I am sending a detailed report of the concert and the feelings of the people concerning the absence of the national anthem on the program to Washington and Boston. I am recommending that the orchestra be prohibited from giving any more concerts in American cities unless the national anthem is a part of he program and that the privlege of halls be denied to Dr. Muck and his musicians unless the orchestra acts in a more American manner than it did last evening."

Mr. Howick added that he has had a score of complaints against the orchestra since last evening. He also stated that he had been warned before the orchestra came to this city that Dr. Muck had not had the national anthem placed on his program.

MUST BE PLAYED.

Either "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra or any other company occupying a local stage or concert hall in the future, or they won't play at all, is the ultimatum of the Board of Police Commissioners.

Chairman Walter A. Presbrey said this morning, relative to the incident at Infantry Hall last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, neglected to play the American national air:

"The Board has not passed upon the issue yet, because it understands that there are to be communications sent to

(Continued on Page 4, Column Four.)

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&D

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE ON NATIO
ANTHEM VIGOROUSLY CONDE

THE EVENING TR

SYMPHONY MANAGER'S EXPLANATION

Why "The Star-Spangled Banner" Was Not Played Last Night.

Boston, Oct. 31.—C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said here to-day that he had received a telegram signed by a number of women asking that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played at a concert in Providence last night, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, did not know such a telegram had been received, Ellis added.

"During our pop concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner'," said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the number was not played."

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE VIGOROUSLY CONDEMNED

(Continued from Page One.)

it from many sources in the city, which it will want to receive before giving a definite statement, but we will say at this time that if the Board was requested that an orchestra playing in Providence be required to begin its program with 'The Star Spangled Banner,' we should consider such a suggestion most seriously."

Commissioner Edward J. McCaffrey added: "And don't forget that this Board is composed of three red-blooded Americans."

VETERANS PROTEST.

Thomas W. Connell Post. No. 45, Veterans of Foreign Wars, who were refused admittance to the concert last evening, among other local organizations of a patriotic and semi-patriotic nature, has made a formal protest to the Police Commission, and the Commission has been in informal conversation with a number of bodies concerning the obligatory playing of the American national air at the opening concert program in this city.

VIGOROUS CONDEMNATION.

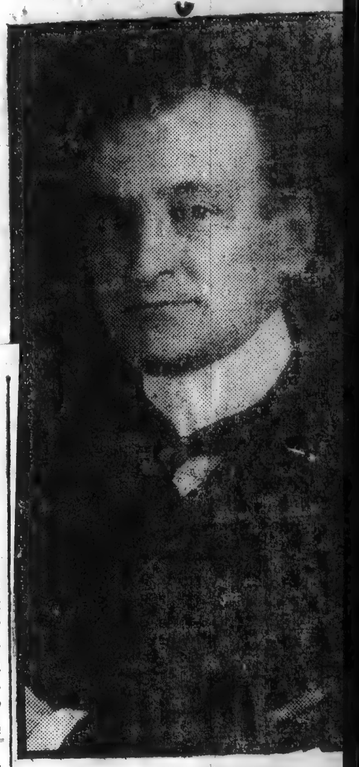
The Rhode Island branch of the Council of National Defence to-day passed resolutions condemning the action of Dr. Karl Muck of Boston, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" when requested to do so at a concert in Infantry Hall last night. The resolutions also urge the Board of Police Commissioners to refuse further permits to this orchestra for concerts in Providence when conducted by Dr. Muck. The resolution is as follows:

"Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, having refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall, Providence, R. I., during the evening of Oct. 30, 1917, although requested to do so by nine State organizations, including the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Council of Defence at a regularly called meeting, held in the Governor's office of the State House, Providence, Oct. 31, unreservedly condemns the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude and respectfully urges the Police Commission of the city of Providence to refuse permission to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in the city of Providence during the present war when conducted by the said Karl Muck."

REQUEST WAS IGNORED.

Federal A mends H Concerts I phony Or Police Bo them Mu

DR. KARL MUCK
Director of the Boston Symphony chestra Whose Action in Refusin Have the Orchestra Play "The S Spangled Banner" Is Vigorously demned.



"The Star Spangled Banner" played by the Boston Symphony tra at the first of a series of co be given by that organization in this season.

The program of Russian, H and German music was rendere vertised, the demand of the Pres the musical clubs of this city a Chairman of the Liberty Loan tee of Rhode Island that the hymn of the United States be pl ing completely ignored.

In order to prevent the singing Star-Spangled Banner" by many cans who had announced their i of attending the concert, includi bers of Thomas W. Connell Post Veterans of Foreign Wars of th States and prominent members women's clubs and musical socie management refused to sell ticke door of Infantry Hall last night but regular subscribers to the s There were many vacant seat hall throughout the evening, b when this fact was called to th tion of the management none o present who wished to attend the were able to purchase a ticket.

That the management of the o expected trouble last evening wa evident when it became known t Henry L. Higginson of Lee, Hi & Co. of Boston, the patron of ganization, had come here with chestra. He returned with the m to Boston.

ONLY SUBSCRIBERS.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the or tion in Boston, did not appear in I Hall until the time for the concer gin had arrived. In the meanti hall was in charge of Assistant M Brennan, who announced that could purchase tickets at the doo the applicants were regular subs to the series.

THE EVENING TRIBUNE PROVIDENCE
~ OCT. 31, 1917 ~

50

ON NATIONAL SLY CONDEMNED

SYMPHONY MANAGER'S EXPLANATION

Why "The Star-Spangled Banner" Was Not Played Last Night.

Boston, Oct. 31.—C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said here to-day that he had received a telegram signed by a number of women asking that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played at a concert in Providence last night, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, did not know such a telegram had been received, Ellis added.

"During our pop concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the number was not played."

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE VIGOROUSLY CONDEMNED

(Continued from Page One.)

it from many sources in the city, which it will want to receive before giving a definite statement, but we will say at this time that if the Board was requested that an orchestra playing in Providence be required to begin its program with 'The Star Spangled Banner,' we should consider such a suggestion most seriously."

Commissioner Edward J. McCaffrey added: "And don't forget that this Board is composed of three red-blooded Americans."

VETERANS PROTEST.

Thomas W. Connell Post. No. 45, Veterans of Foreign Wars, who were refused admittance to the concert last evening, among other local organizations of a patriotic and semi-patriotic nature, has made a formal protest to the Police Commission, and the Commission has been in informal conversation with a number of bodies concerning the obligatory playing of the American national air at the opening concert program in this city.

VIGOROUS CONDEMNATION.

The Rhode Island branch of the Council of National Defence to-day passed resolutions condemning the action of Dr. Karl Muck of Boston, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" when requested to do so at a concert in Infantry Hall last night. The resolutions also urge the Board of Police Commissioners to refuse further permits to this orchestra for concerts in Providence when conducted by Dr. Muck. The resolution is as follows:

"Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, having refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall, Providence, R. I., during the evening of Oct. 30, 1917, although requested to do so by nine State organizations, including the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Council of Defence at a regularly called meeting, held in the Governor's office of the State House, Providence, Oct. 31, unreservedly condemns the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude and respectfully urges the Police Commission of the city of Providence to refuse permission to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in the city of Providence during the present war when conducted by the said Karl Muck."

REQUEST WAS IGNORED.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was not played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the first of a series of concerts to be given by that organization in this city this season.

The program of Russian, Hungarian and German music was rendered as advertised, the demand of the Presidents of the musical clubs of this city and of the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island that the national hymn of the United States be played, being completely ignored.

In order to prevent the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by many Americans who had announced their intention of attending the concert, including members of Thomas W. Connell Post, No. 45, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and prominent members of local women's clubs and musical societies, the management refused to sell tickets at the door of Infantry Hall last night, to any but regular subscribers to the series.

There were many vacant seats in the hall throughout the evening, but even when this fact was called to the attention of the management none of those present who wished to attend the concert were able to purchase a ticket.

That the management of the orchestra expected trouble last evening was made evident when it became known that Col. Henry L. Higginson of Lee, Higginson & Co. of Boston, the patron of the organization, had come here with the orchestra. He returned with the musicians to Boston.

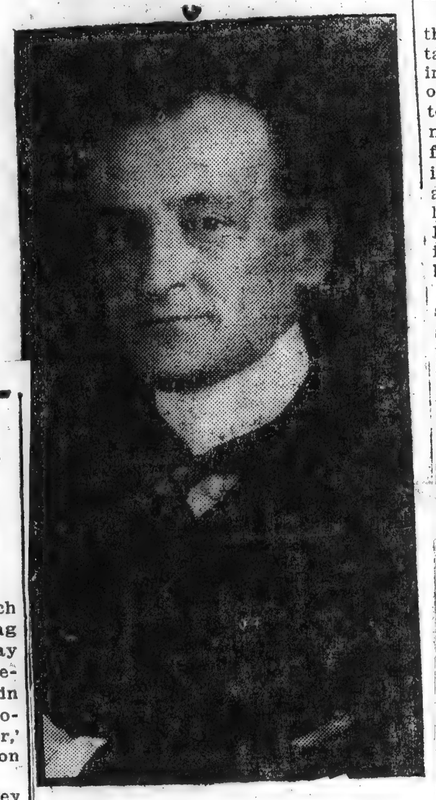
ONLY SUBSCRIBERS.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the organization in Boston, did not appear in Infantry Hall until the time for the concert to begin had arrived. In the meantime the hall was in charge of Assistant Manager Brennan, who announced that no one could purchase tickets at the door unless the applicants were regular subscribers to the series.

Among those who were unable to secure admission to the hall was Mrs. James E. McConnell, President of the Chaminade Club. Mrs. McConnell was told, she said, that Mr. Ellis had announced that none of the women who had signed the joint request which was telegraphed to Mr. Ellis yesterday requesting that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played was a subscriber to the symphony course.

Federal Agent Recommends Prohibition of Concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra.--Local Police Board Says Anthem Must Be Played.

DR. KARL MUCK
Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Whose Action in Refusing to Have the Orchestra Play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Is Vigorously Condemned.



Special Agent Tom Howick of the Department of Justice is sending a detailed report to the department in Washington and the special agent in Boston concerning the action of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Prof. Karl Muck, in refraining from playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the concert in Infantry Hall last evening.

"It was an outrage," said Mr. Howick this morning, "and I am sending a detailed report of the concert and the feelings of the people concerning the absence of the national anthem on the program to Washington and Boston. I am recommending that the orchestra be prohibited from giving any more concerts in American cities unless the national anthem is a part of he program and that the privlege of halls be denied to Dr. Muck and his musicians unless the orchestra acts in a more American manner than it did last evening."

Mr. Howick added that he has had a score of complaints against the orchestra since last evening. He also stated that he had been warned before the orchestra came to this city that Dr. Muck had not had the national anthem placed on his program.

MUST BE PLAYED.

Either "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra or any other company occupying a local stage or concert hall in the future, or they won't play at all, is the ultimatum of the Board of Police Commissioners.

Chairman Walter A. Presbrey said this morning, relative to the incident at Infantry Hall last evening, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, neglected to play the American national air:

"The Board has not passed upon the issue yet, because it understands that there are to be communications sent to

(Continued on Page 4, Column Four.)

n Journal

ress: Providence, R. I.

e OCT 30 1917

Concerning Dr. Karl Muck

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to appear in Providence this evening under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

Professor Muck is a man of notoriously pro-German affiliations and the programme as announced is almost entirely German in character.

It has been said that Dr. Muck has not yet played any patriotic American air at his concerts, whereas Mr. Damrosch began his New York season with a patriotic address and "The Star-Spangled Banner," and Mr. Stransky included the national anthem and an American symphony in his initial programme for the year.

It is as good a time as any to put Professor Muck to the test. The Boston Symphony Orchestra should play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence to-night.

---

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Oct. 31, 1917.

CONDEMN DR. MUCK

Providence, R. I., October 31—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said today he had reecived a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that "The Star-Bangled Banner" be played, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

---

om EVENING WORLD

ldress: New York City.

te OCT 31 1917

CALLS ORCHESTRA INSULTING

Rhode Island Defense Council Condemns Failure to Play National Anthem.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude in failing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense.

It was stated that an agent of the Department of Justice would make a detailed report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the National Anthem is included in its programme.

---

om EVENING GLOBE

ldress: New York City

Oct. 31, 1917

MAY BAR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so were adopted to-day by the Rhode Island Council for Defense.

The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war, "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, would report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the National Anthem is included in its programme.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said to-day he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that the "Star Spangled aBnner" be played, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored.

Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

NOV 1 1917

FAMOUS BOSTON ORCHESTRA MAY BE DISBANDED

Major Curley Threatens to Cancel License If National Anthem Is Not Played.

FOUNDER OF ORGANIZATION IS DEFIANT.

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—Boston is in a fair way to lose its famous Symphony Orchestra and Symphony Hall, the organization's home. Major Henry L. Higginson, its founder, and Charles A. Ellis, its manager, declare the orchestra will be disbanded if Mayor James M. Curley, of this city, persists in his order that it play "The Star Spangled Banner" at all of its concerts.

When the orchestra refused to play the National Anthem at a concert in Providence, R. I., Tuesday night, the Mayor issued an order cancelling the license of Symphony Hall, if it again failed to play the piece. The Mayor insists his order will stand and the orchestra officials declare the National Anthem will not be played.

Major Higginson, when informed of the Mayor's order, said:—

"Then there will be no concerts. Why should the Mayor or any one else dictate what should be played?"

"An Artistic Organization."

Dr. Karl Muck, German born leader of the orchestra, said:—"The public has no right to ask such a question of a purely artistic organization. We are simply an artistic organization, and as such have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

Mr. Ellis was asked if "The Star Spangled Banner" would be played when the orchestra gave its next concert in New York.

"I do not know," he replied. "That is a question that will have to be decided by Dr. Muck. It has not been the custom. I do not see why the custom should be changed. Those who protested in Providence were not subscribers. We do not ordinarily heed protests unless they come from our subscribers."

Mayor Is Determined.

Major Higginson in his statement said:—"If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which probably would mean its disorganization. It might also mean that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now. I do not purpose to have the public interfere with the programmes. They were made in the summer and I had nothing to do with them. If Dr. Muck goes the orchestra probably would be broken up. This probably is the last year that the Symphony will go to Providence.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' has no place in an art concert. If it had it would be played. At our summer concerts we played that and 'America' every night. But those were popular concerts. These are not."

Mayor Curley, before starting for New York, said:—"My order means just what it says. Either they play the national anthem or they give no more concerts in Boston."

EVENING JOURNAL

: New York.

'Star Spangled Banner' to Be Cut Out by Muck In N. Y. Programme

Boston, Mass., Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said to-day that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert programme next Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall.

Dispatches from Providence, where failure of the orchestra to play the national anthem last Tuesday night gave rise to the present discord, said to-day that the Rhode Island Council of Defense had asked the Providence Police Commission to "refuse permits for further concerts during the war when conducted by Karl Muck."

The Council condemned the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his "deliberately insulting" attitude.

---

rom CALL

ddress: New York City

NOV 1 - 1917

ate

No National Anthem, So "Raus Mit Muck!"

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 21.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so were adopted today by the Rhode Island council for defense.

The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

EVENING POST

ss: New York City

Major Henry L. Higginson is a poor sort of patriot. True, he bears the marks of his honorable wounds of Civil War days, and he has been conspicuous in his support of this war, urging men to enlist and contributing largely of his means. But he is also the sponsor and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the greatest organization of its kind in America, which he has laboriously built up at a cost to himself of no less than a million dollars. Now, this orchestra has refused to open its concerts with the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner," and, what is more, Major Higginson has upheld the German conductor in his refusal to do so, saying that this piece of music has no place on a symphonic programme. This, we submit, stamps Major Higginson as a secret enemy, a pro-German without any question, and we suggest that something like the Bigelow treatment be meted out to him forthwith by Harvard graduates. Fortunately, the Rhode Island Council of Defence has asked the authorities in Providence to forbid the orchestra's appearance in that city without the anthem, and an enterprising agent of the Department of Justice has wired to Washington, urging that the President forbid any further concerts of the Boston Orchestra. While we are glad that our liberties are being safeguarded by these alert officials, we sincerely trust that, under the Trading-with-the-Enemy Act, the President will, through the Postmaster-General, decree that this orchestra play the anthem at least three times at every concert, this in the name of both democracy and musical art.

STANDARD UNION

ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAY DISBAND BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

BOSTON, Nov. 1—The future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is at stake, according to Major Henry L. Higginson, its founder, in a statement to-day. It was intimated that if the public continues to demand that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played in its concerts the orchestra probably will disband.

Major Higginson says he will not "permit the public to interfere" with the programs of the concerts, and if they are too insistent he will withdraw his support, which probably would mean disbanding the orchestra.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

1 1917

DR. MUCK AND "THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, have been caught in the rising waves of the war fever in this country. The German conductor of this American orchestra is accused of refusing to play the national hymn at the symphony concerts. His excuse is that his orchestra is devoted to the playing of classical music only and it would be a violation of the artistic principle which animates it if it played the "Star-Spangled Banner." In this attitude Dr. Muck is upheld by the patron of the orchestra, Colonel Higginson. The American people, we can assure the doctor and his patron, will not approve their views. They believe that when the country is at war it is right and proper to stimulate the people's patriotism by the playing of the hymn which the people venerate.

They see nothing to shock the artistic proprieties in an orchestra—even a symphony orchestra—paying this tribute to the national sentiment. There is nothing small or ungenerous in Americans. Dr. Muck, for example, as a Teuton would not be permitted to lead a French or English orchestra at this time. The Austrian violinist, Fritz Kreisler, who fought with the Austrian army in Galicia, is taking in American dollars by the thousand and American musical critics rapturously eulogize his playing. Yet Austria has interned the French opera singer, Dinh Gilly, since the outbreak of the war and refuses to release him, although a non-combatant.

---

rom EVENING SUN

ddress: New York City

ate

MUCK BARS NATION'S ANTHEM.

Boston Symphony Leader Says Public Has No Right to Demand It.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—It takes more than the participation of the United States in a war for democracy to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, its German-born leader, Dr. Karl Muck, says is "a purely artistic organization," play "The Star Spangled Banner."

It is easier far to bring about the disbandment of the orchestra, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the organization asserts, than to force it to play that which affects its sense of the artistic.

Asked whether the national anthem would be played at the Symphony's concert in Carnegia Hall next Thursday night, Dr. Muck announced emphatically that never would his orchestra accede to the public demand in this respect.

SUN

s: New York City.

NOV 1 - 1917

DR. MUCK'S LOYALTY ASSAILED

Failure to Play "Star Spangled Banner" Arouses Criticism.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted to-day by the Rhode Island Council of Defence. The Police Commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said to-day that Dr. Muck did not know such a request had been made.

EVENING SUN
s: New York City

DAMROSCH TOO AGAINST ANTHEM

Backs Muck in Refusing to Play 'Star Spangled Banner.'

SAYS HE SEES AN INJUSTICE

Can't Understand Why Citizen of Prussia Should Comply.

Walter Damrosch took issue to-day with those musicians who are criticising Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for refusing to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner." He expressed the belief that it was unfair to attempt to force Dr. Muck to conduct the national air while the United States is at war with Germany, of which country he is a subject. Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation.

"I should think that the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play "The Star Spangled Banner" under the direction of an assistant conductor. I cannot see what purpose could be gained by endeavoring to force Dr. Muck to do so."

War Doesn't Cut Any Figure.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—It takes more than the participation of the United States in a war for democracy to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, its German-born leader, Dr. Karl Muck, says is "a purely artistic organization," play "The Star Spangled Banner."

It is easier far to bring about the disbandment of the orchestra, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the organization, asserts, than to force it to play that which affects its sense of the artistic.

Asked whether the national anthem would be played at the Symphony's concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night, Dr. Muck announced emphatically that never would his orchestra accede to the public demand in this respect.

"The public has no right to make such a demand on a purely artistic organization. We are simply an artistic organization, and as such have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

The question had been asked following the failure of the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert in Providence on Tuesday night, in spite of requests from the audience that it be given. When news of the orchestra's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" reached Mayor Curley of Boston he immediately cancelled the license of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra, which will not be reissued until Dr. Muck and his patron, Major Higginson, have sacrificed their artistic spirits to public sentiment.

Actions Are Condemned.

Resolutions condemning the actions of Dr. Muck and his associates have been adopted by the Rhode Island Council of Defence, which characterize the failure of the orchestra to play the national anthem at Providence as the result of "a deliberately insulting attitude."

Disregarding the fact that the Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera Company's orchestra have all played "The Star Spangled Banner" on many occasions recently, although they cannot be described as brass bands or "ballroom orchestras," and without causing any international complications, Dr. Muck said to-day:

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

Art International, He Says.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of [illegible] introduce such a thing would disrupt an orgnization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art."

Baltimore Makes Protest.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 1.—A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here on Nov. 14, and unless the national anthem is played it will be demanded from the floor of the Lyric.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand to-day and it was also brought to the attention of the Federal and municipal authorities. Baltimore has never needed much excuse for mob action. Unless the orchestra plays the national anthem here it is a safe bet there will be something doing.

"Outrageous," was the comment of one prominent patron of music here to-day. "I shall certainly insist that the national anthem be played. I shall [illegible] demand to the floor of the [illegible]

om TIMES
dress: New York City
NOV 1 - 1917
te.....

THREAT TO DISBAND BOSTON SYMPHONY

Major Higginson, Founder of Orchestra, Resents Call for 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'

GERMAN LEADER CRITICISED

Rhode Island Defense Council Condemns Dr. Muck's Failure to Heed Request for Anthem.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 31.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced today that the orchestra would be disbanded and Symphony Hall sold if public clamor for the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" continued.

The matter was brought to a head by the demands that the anthem be played by the orchestra at a concert in Providence last night. This followed protests over Geraldine Farrar's all-German program when she was the soloist at the orchestra's pension fund concert in Boston on Sunday.

Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice at Providence, today recommended to Washington that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the anthem is played.

Major Higginson said the anthem was out of place in purely harmonic programs. It has no place in a program of artistic symphony music, he said. He added that the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, a German, made up the programs in the Summer and that when the war started he addressed the orchestra and asked the musicians to forget their racial differences. More than a dozen nationalities are represented in the orchestra. The Major said that the Department of Justice had reported to him that none of the German members, even Dr. Muck, was under suspicion.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem," said the Major. "Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheered the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the guard house and watch him.'"

Dr. Muck said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

Orchestra and Muck Condemned.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played, but that, as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

The telegram asking that the national anthem be played at the concert was signed by the Presidents of various local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island. The signers of the joint request were Mrs. Emma Winslow Childs, Mrs. Harold J. Gross, Mrs. George S. Mathews, Miss Mary S. Winsor, Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, Mrs. George Hail, Mrs. James E. McConnell, and Mrs. Gilbert C. Carpenter, representing the Chopin, Monday Morning, MacDowell, Schubert, and Chaminade Clubs, the State Federation of Musical Clubs, and the State and National Federation of Women's Clubs.

"Expected Trouble."

The orchestra "expected trouble," according to reports of the incident published today in Providence. Major Higginson, its founder and patron, made the trip from Boston with his musicians, and returned with them after the concert. According to The Providence Journal, the management said this was "because of editorial comment in the papers and the telegram sent by the women."

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra played 'The Star-Spangled Banner' every night for ten weeks during the 'pop' concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, where it was appropriate."

To a question whether Dr. Muck led the national anthem at the "pop" concerts, Mr. Ellis replied that "Dr. Muck does not lead the pop concerts." Asked if the conductor had ever led "The Star-Spangled Banner," he replied, "I do not know."

WORLD
New York City
Nov.

U. S. ANTHEM NOT ART TO DR. MUCK

Impertinent to Ask Boston Symphony to Play "Star Spangled Banner," Declares German Leader.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Oct. 31.—A special report to Washington on the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence last night, despite a request that it do so from the Presidents of nine musical societies and the Rhode Island Liberty Loan Committee, was made to-day by Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice in Providence.

He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the national anthem is played at each.

Resolutions condemning the orchestra and Dr. Muck, the director of the orchestra, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commissioner was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

"If the public goes too far in this thing," declared Major Henry L. Higginson to-day, "I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which probably would mean its disorganization. And if it should break up I don't believe it would ever be reorganized.

"I do not propose to have the public interfere with the programmes."

The Major spoke of the obstacles in the conduct of an orchestra composed of men of twelve nationalities and continued:

"Now, as to the 'Star Spangled Banner,' why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. Last spring and summer we played the anthem and 'America' every night. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging.

"There are those who accuse Dr. Muck of un-Americanism. Would you expect his sympathies to be other than German?"

Dr. Muck had this to say:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"The Symphony Orchestra is a classical, musical organization, composed of the finest musicians with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play such compositions would be almost an insult. To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost impertinent. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art."

Hitherto in Boston the orchestra had been immune from criticism, because it is a sacred institution and because Major Higginson is a leading banker and philanthropist, whose own loyalty is unquestioned. He has been one of the foremost workers for the Liberty Loan.

Sunday Geraldine Farrar sang nine songs at the orchestra's pension fund concert. They were all in German, and many protests were made. She was the soloist again last night in Providence.

Local Symphony Bands Both Played the Anthem

The Boston Orchestra gives the first of its series of concerts here in Carnegie Hall a week from to-night, and letters have already appeared in some of the papers asking whether the German leader of the Boston organization intends to open his local concerts with the anthem. Both the Philharmonic and New York Symphony Orchestras played it at their concerts last week.

n HERALD
ress: New York City
Nov. 1, 1917
e NOV 1

BOSTON ORCHESTRA ORDERED TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mayor Curley, of That City, Threatens to Cancel License—Major Higginson Defiant.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Wednesday.—As a result of the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, R. I., last night, Mayor James M Curley to-night issued an order for the cancellation of the license of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra, if it fails to play the National Anthem at all future concerts here.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, and Charles A. Ellis, its manager, to-night said they knew no reason why "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played by the orchestra.

Major Higginson, when informed of the Mayor's order, said:—

"Then there will be no concerts. Why should the Mayor on any one else dictate what should be played?"

Dr. Karl Muck, German born leader of the orchestra, said:—"The public has no right to ask such a question of a purely artisttic organization. We are simply an artistic organization, and as such have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

Mr. Ellis was asked if "The Star Spangled Banner" would be played when the orchestra gave its next concert in New York.

"I do not know," he replied. "That is a question that will have to be decided by Dr. Muck. It has not been the custom. I do not see why the custom should be changed. Those who protested in Providence were not subscribers. We do not ordinarily heed protests unless they come from our subscribers."

Major Higginson in his statement said:—

"If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which probably would mean its disorganization. It might also mean that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now. I do not propose to have the public interfere with the programmes. They were made in the summer and I had nothing to do with them. If Dr. Muck goes the orchestra probably would be broken up. This probably is the last year that the symphony will go to Providence.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' has no place in an art concert. If it had it would be played. At our summer concerts we played that and 'America' every night. But those were popular concerts. These are not.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play that anthem. Suppose you were in Germany and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say:—'Put that man in the guard house and watch him.'"

Mayor Curley, before starting for New York to-night, said:—"My order means just what it says. Either they play the national anthem or they give no concerts in Boston."

TIMES
ess: New York City

Willing to Give Up Music.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is true that "Les blesses n'ont pas la nationalite." The same thing used to be true of art, but not today. In war art has nationality. Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony, and a German Doctor of Philosophy, is using the hypocrisy of Kultur to override the playing of our national anthem at the concerts which he is conducting in the United States. There can be no half-way action of music lovers in this matter. Let us if necessary starve for music in this country until our war is ended, just as our allies are hungry for food across the ocean. It is a privilege and not a sacrifice to relinquish what we love in order that we may down Prussian arrogance and Kultur here where today war is on our own soil, being fought by Teuton incendaries, Teuton spies, and Teuton money.

FLORA MACDONALD POTTER.
(Mrs. Frank Hunter Potter.)

New York, Nov. 1, 1917.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date NOV 1

Request to Play Nation's Hymn Hurts Dr. Muck

Embarrasses Artistic Sensibilities, Says Boston Orchestra Leader

Backed Up by Society's Patron

Musicians Here Denounce Defence as Attempt at Evasion

BOSTON, Oct. 31.—To ask Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" is very embarrassing to his artistic sensibilities. The request, he says, is almost insulting. To push it would be destructive to musical art.

This, in brief, is the gist of the director's reply to the query, "Are you going to play the national anthem in New York at your Carnegie Hall concert next Thursday evening?"

Statements from Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, indicated that he was behind Dr. Muck in his refusal to play the patriotic air. He threatened to disband the orchestra if the public was insistent in its demands for the undesired addition to its programme, and added that the Symphony Hall, which is losing $15,000 a year, might be sold or closed up if he were pushed by these demands.

Dr. Muck Condemned

Meanwhile, Dr. Muck and the orchestra are being attacked from other quarters. Resolutions condemning him and his organization were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defence, in which his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" there last night is characterized as a "deliberately insulting attitude." The police commission was called upon by the council to refuse further licenses for concerts there until Dr. Muck changed his attitude or the orchestra changed its leader.

To-day Thomas Howick, special agent for the Department of Justice at Providence, recommended to Washington that the concerts of the orchestra be prohibited unless the anthem is played. This action followed publication of the fact that Dr. Muck had refused the requests of numerous patrons of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Last Sunday Geraldine Farrar added to the feelings of the people of Providence against pro-German artists by singing nine German songs at the Pension Fund benefit, singing none in English, French or Italian.

In his statement to-night, Dr. Muck says:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band? or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"Request Embarrassing"

"To ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it. I am following Manager Higginson's wishes."

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, writes as follows:

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year, and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract.

"The tickets were sold as usual; that is, very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York and more are asked for. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra, and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters, alleging this or that and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurances have come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra—this in reply to a question about the matter."

Musicians Here Call Dr. Muck Pro-German

Musicians here failed to accept Dr. Muck's explanation of his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" on the grounds that his orchestra numbered too many different nationalities among its membership. They called attention to the fact that the Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera company's orchestra all had played the national anthem without fear of international complications.

TIMES
New York City
NOV 2 - 191

ST. LOUIS ORCHESTRA TO PLAY THE ANTHEM

Directors Vote for "The Star-Spangled Banner," Though Director Was Opposed.

AGITATION IN BROOKLYN

Demand That Boston Symphony Change Its Attitude—Damrosch Discusses Dr. Muck's Position.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The Directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that "The Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons. Last Spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, Director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 1.—A request of the local branch of the Danish Society to raise the Danish flag and play Danish music in Golden Gate Park on Nov. 18, Denmark's annual patriotic holiday, was unanimously refused by the Park Commission, it became known today.

"Not this time," replied Judge Curtis H. Lindley of the commission. "Scandinavia has been unfair to the United States. Through the back door of Denmark have gone American goods and supplies to help the Germans."

An agitation has been started among the members of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under the auspices of which a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been announced for this Winter, to force Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," which he has on several occasions recently refused to do. The matter will be considered at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Academy to be held next Thursday. The first of the concerts is scheduled to take place next Friday night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute, said yesterday that he had heard there was a feeling among some of the 9,000 members of the institute that Dr. Muck should play the national anthem or the concerts should be canceled.

"Anything that would deprive this or any other community of these concerts would be a musical calamity," he said. "All I can do is to express the hope that Dr. Muck will recognize the prevailing patriotic sentiment and not persist in his refusal to play the national anthem."

UPHOLDS DR. MUCK'S STAND

"Hypocrisy for Him to Conduct American Anthem," Says Damrosch.

Walter Damrosch, who opened the Symphony Society's season in New York recently by conducting "The Star-Spangled Banner," as did also Josef Stransky with the Philharmonic Society later the same day, had this to say last evening of the excitement in many cities over the reported refusal of Karl Muck to lead the American anthem with the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"Dr. Muck is a loyal citizen of Prussia, where he has lived the greater part of his professional life. He is in this country not because of his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson of Boston, who without doubt is a loyal American, and would not insist on retaining Dr. Muck as conductor of his orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's strictly honorable attitude in a very trying position.

"Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess I should not enjoy hearing him do so. Considering his citizenship and his feeling regarding our war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could be easily met by having an assistant conductor lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 'The Star-Spangled Banner' mands."

Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the New York Philharmonic Society, has written in The Chronicle, just issued for the current month, an article on "German Music and German Opera," in which she deprecates the performance of operas while favoring the retention of the works of Teutonic composers in concert halls during the war. Mrs. Jay in the course of her argument says:

"I feel that to give German operas, particularly those of Wagner, at this time would be a great mistake. Given in the German language, and depicting scenes of violence and conflict, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering. Perhaps gala nights of German operas could be used as a political propaganda to imply a division of sentiment in this country. As the Metropolitan is practically a national institution, we should take into consideration the sensitiveness of all patrons, and especially the patriotic ones. There can be no imputation of bigotry, since Americans continue to welcome the instrumental music of the great Germans, in spite of the status of war."

It was said at the Metropolitan Opera House last night that "when the repertoire of the opening week of the Metropolitan opera season is announced the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offense to the most patriotic American."

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date NOV 2 191

DAMROSCH BACKS MUCK IN STAND

Director of Symphony Orchestra Declares It Unfair to Ask German to Play "Star Spangled Banner."

"IS LOYAL CITIZEN OF PRUSSIA"

Protests From All Parts of Country Pour in at Musical Headquarters in This City.

Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra, came out flat-footedly yesterday in support of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the latter's stand in refusing to lead his musicians in "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Damrosch said he thought it most unfair to ask the Boston musician to conduct the national anthem of this country when we were at war with Germany. Dr. Muck is a subject of the latter country and, on the word of Mr. Damrosch yesterday, "a loyal citizen of Prussia."

"It seems to me," declared Damrosch, "it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The latter is an American of undoubted loyalty and he would certainly not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra were he not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation.

Suggests an Assistant.

"I should think the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play 'The Star Spangled Banner' under the direction of an assistant conductor. I cannot see what purpose could be gained by endeavoring to force Dr. Muck to do so."

Meantime, all day yesterday, protests against the action of Dr. Muck in Boston in refusing to play the national anthem came pouring in on the local musical headquarters. Word was received from Boston that Major Higginson was standing firm in his determination to have "The Star Spangled Banner" incorporated into the program of the Symphony Orchestra, or take steps to disband the organization. It is far easier to bring about the disbandment of the orchestra, however, the patron declares, than to force it to play that which affects its sense of the artistic.

"The Symphony," is the contention of Dr. Muck, "is a purely artistic organization, and the public has no right to make such a demand on an artistic organization. As the latter we have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

From this statement, wired here yesterday, it must follow the concert arranged for Carnegie Hall on next Tuesday night will be held without the usual rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner," which has been the rule at all concerts in this city since the nation entered the war.

Baltimore Also Protests.

Following its engagement here, the Boston Symphony is booked for Baltimore on November 14, and a score of letters from musical patrons in that city were received yesterday protesting the attitude of Dr. Muck.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand in a most serious manner, according to the advices wired to this city, and even went so far as to bring the case to the attention of the authorities of Baltimore as well as the Federal officials.

"There is every indication of trouble here," declared one Baltimorean, "if the national anthem is omitted."

"Outrageous," was the declaration of another. "I shall certainly insist the national anthem be played. I shall carry this demand to the floor of the concert hall if necessary and shout it to the stage from there."

Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, and educated at Heidelburg and Leipsig. His German sympathies have been evident in the selection of his programs and his opening bill for Thursday at Carnegie Hall is devoted to German composers with the single exception of a short overture by the French composer, Hector Berlioz.

Dr. Muck has conducted the Kaiser's opera in Berlin, at Bayreuth and other German centers of music. In 1908 the Kaiser conferred upon him the title of the King's Prussian General Musical Director.

Dr. Muck's yearly salary as conductor of the Boston Symphony is estimated at $20,000.

---

m EVENING SUN
ress: New York City
te NOV 2 1917

GERMAN OPERAS WILL BE BARRED

Muck's Attitude Brings Action at Metropolitan.

STIR IS NOW COUNTRYWIDE

Refusal to Play National Anthem Resented Everywhere.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck consents to having the Boston Symphony Orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts when the orchestra is on tour he may find halls all over the United States barred to him. This became evident to-day when despatches from Boston brought word that the German conductor would maintain his position in refusing to include the "inartistic" national anthem in his programme.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire at the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Mme. Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclusion of the anthem or the cancelling of the concert.

Higginson Backs Up Muck.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has expended almost $1,000,000 to make the Boston Symphony what it is, will back Dr. Muck to the limit of his resources, and it is believed court action will follow any attempt to cancel engagements already made. In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has declined to make any statement, but it is generally conceded that the decision to drop the Teutonic works was no sudden one.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date NOV 1

Request to Play Nation's Hymn Hurts Dr. Muck

Embarrasses Artistic Sensibilities, Says Boston Orchestra Leader

Backed Up by Society's Patron

Musicians Here Denounce Defence as Attempt at Evasion

BOSTON, Oct. 31.—To ask Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" is very embarrassing to his artistic sensibilities. The request, he says, is almost insulting. To push it would be destructive to musical art.

This, in brief, is the gist of the director's reply to the query, "Are you going to play the national anthem in New York at your Carnegie Hall concert next Thursday evening?"

Statements from Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, indicated that he was behind Dr. Muck in his refusal to play the patriotic air. He threatened to disband the orchestra if the public was insistent in its demands for the undesired addition to its programme, and added that the Symphony Hall, which is losing $15,000 a year, might be sold or closed up if he were pushed by these demands.

Dr. Muck Condemned

Meanwhile, Dr. Muck and the orchestra are being attacked from other quarters. Resolutions condemning him and his organization were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defence, in which his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" there last night is characterized as a "deliberately insulting attitude." The police commission was called upon by the council to refuse further licenses for concerts there until Dr. Muck changed his attitude or the orchestra changed its leader.

To-day Thomas Howick, special agent for the Department of Justice at Providence, recommended to Washington that the concerts of the orchestra be prohibited unless the anthem is played. This action followed publication of the fact that Dr. Muck had refused the requests of numerous patrons of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Last Sunday Geraldine Farrar added to the feelings of the people of Providence against pro-German artists by singing nine German songs at the Pension Fund benefit, singing none in English, French or Italian.

In his statement to-night, Dr. Muck says:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band? or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"Request Embarrassing"

"To ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it. I am following Manager Higginson's wishes."

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, writes as follows:

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year, and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract.

"The tickets were sold as usual; that is, very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York and more are asked for. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra, and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters, alleging this or that and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurances have come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra —this in reply to a question about the matter."

Musicians Here Call Dr. Muck Pro-German

Musicians here failed to accept Dr. Muck's explanation of his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" on the grounds that his orchestra numbered too many different nationalities among its membership. They called attention to the fact that the Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera company's orchestra all had played the national anthem without fear of international complications.

TIMES
New York City
NOV 2 - 191

ST. LOUIS ORCHESTRA TO PLAY THE ANTHEM

Directors Vote for "The Star-Spangled Banner," Though Director Was Opposed.

AGITATION IN BROOKLYN

Demand That Boston Symphony Change Its Attitude—Damrosch Discusses Dr. Muck's Position.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The Directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that "The Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons. Last Spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, Director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 1.—A request of the local branch of the Danish Society to raise the Danish flag and play Danish music in Golden Gate Park on Nov. 18, Denmark's annual patriotic holiday, was unanimously refused by the Park Commission, it became known today.

"Not this time," replied Judge Curtis H. Lindley of the commission. "Scandinavia has been unfair to the United States. Through the back door of Denmark have gone American goods and supplies to help the Germans."

An agitation has been started among the members of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under the auspices of which a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been announced for this Winter, to force Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," which he has on several occasions recently refused to do. The matter will be considered at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Academy to be held next Thursday. The first of the concerts is scheduled to take place next Friday night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute, said yesterday that he had heard there was a feeling among some of the 9,000 members of the institute that Dr. Muck should play the national anthem or the concerts should be canceled.

"Anything that would deprive this or any other community of these concerts would be a musical calamity," he said. "All I can do is to express the hope that Dr. Muck will recognize the prevailing patriotic sentiment and not persist in his refusal to play the national anthem."

UPHOLDS DR. MUCK'S STAND

"Hypocrisy for Him to Conduct American Anthem," Says Damrosch.

Walter Damrosch, who ended the Symphony Society's season in New York recently by conducting "The Star-Spangled Banner," as did also Josef Stransky with the Philharmonic Society later the same day, had only a hint last evening of the excitement in many cities over the reported refusal of Karl Muck to lead the American anthem with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Dr. Muck is a loyal citizen of Prussia, where he has lived the greater part of his professional life. He is in this country not because of his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson of Boston, who without doubt is a loyal American, and would not insist on retaining Dr. Muck as conductor of his orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's strictly honorable attitude in a very trying position.

"Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess I should not enjoy hearing him do so. Considering his citizenship and his feeling regarding our war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could be easily met by having an assistant conductor lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 'The Star-Spangled Banner' demands."

Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the New York Red Cross Society, has written in The Evening Sun, just issued for the week-end, an article on "German Music and German Opera," in which she deprecates the performance of operas while favoring the retention of the works of Teutonic composers in concert halls during the war. Mrs. Jay in the course of her argument says:

"I feel that to give German operas, particularly those of Wagner, at this time would be a great mistake. Given in the German language, and depicting scenes of violence and conflict, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering. Perhaps gala nights of German operas could be used as a political propaganda to imply a division of sentiment in this country. As the Metropolitan is practically a national institution, we should take into consideration the sensitiveness of all patrons, and especially the patriotic ones. There can be no imputation of bigotry, since Americans continue to welcome the instrumental music of the great Germans, in spite of the status of war."

It was said at the Metropolitan Opera House last night that "when the repertoire of the opening week of the Metropolitan opera season is announced the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offense to the most patriotic American."

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date NOV 2 191

DAMROSCH BACKS MUCK IN STAND

Director of Symphony Orchestra Declares It Unfair to Ask German to Play "Star Spangled Banner."

"IS LOYAL CITIZEN OF PRUSSIA"

Protests From All Parts of Country Pour in at Musical Headquarters in This City.

Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra, came out flat-footedly yesterday in support of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the latter's stand in refusing to lead his musicians in "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Damrosch said he thought it most unfair to ask the Boston musician to conduct the national anthem of this country when we were at war with Germany. Dr. Muck is a subject of the latter country and, on the word of Mr. Damrosch yesterday, "a loyal citizen of Prussia."

"It seems to me," declared Damrosch, "it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The latter is an American of undoubted loyalty and he would certainly not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra were he not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation.

Suggests an Assistant.

"I should think the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play 'The Star Spangled Banner' under the direction of an assistant conductor. I cannot see what purpose could be gained by endeavoring to force Dr. Muck to do so."

Meantime, all day yesterday, protests against the action of Dr. Muck in Boston in refusing to play the national anthem came pouring in on the local musical headquarters. Word was received from Boston that Major Higginson was standing firm in his determination to have "The Star Spangled Banner" incorporated into the program of the Symphony Orchestra, or take steps to disband the organization. It is far easier to bring about the disbandment of the orchestra, however, the patron declares, than to force it to play that which affects its sense of the artistic.

"The Symphony," is the contention of Dr. Muck, "is a purely artistic organization, and the public has no right to make such a demand on an artistic organization. As the latter we have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

From this statement, wired here yesterday, it must follow the concert arranged for Carnegie Hall on next Tuesday night will be held without the usual rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner," which has been the rule at all concerts in this city since the nation entered the war.

Baltimore Also Protests.

Following its engagement here, the Boston Symphony is booked for Baltimore on November 14, and a score of letters from musical patrons in that city were received yesterday protesting the attitude of Dr. Muck.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand in a most serious manner, according to the advices wired to this city, and even went so far as to bring the case to the attention of the authorities of Baltimore as well as the Federal officials.

"There is every indication of trouble here," declared one Baltimorean, "if the national anthem is omitted."

"Outrageous," was the declaration of another. "I shall certainly insist the national anthem be played. I shall carry this demand to the floor of the concert hall if necessary and shout it to the stage from there."

Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, and educated at Heidelburg and Leipsig. His German sympathies have been evident in the selection of his programs and his opening bill for Thursday at Carnegie Hall is devoted to German composers with the single exception of a short overture by the French composer, Hector Berlioz.

Dr. Muck has conducted the Kaiser's opera in Berlin, at Bayreuth and other German centers of music. In 1908 the Kaiser conferred upon him the title of the King's Prussian General Musical Director.

Dr. Muck's yearly salary as conductor of the Boston Symphony is estimated at $20,000.

m EVENING SUN
dress: New York City
te NOV 2 191

GERMAN OPERAS WILL BE BARRED

Muck's Attitude Brings Action at Metropolitan.

STIR IS NOW COUNTRYWIDE

Refusal to Play National Anthem Resented Everywhere.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck consents to having the Boston Symphony Orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts when the orchestra is on tour he may find halls all over the United States barred to him. This became evident to-day when despatches from Boston brought word that the German conductor would maintain his position in refusing to include the "unartistic" national anthem in his programme.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire of the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Max Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclusion of the anthem or the cancelling of the concert.

Higginson Backs Up Muck.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has expended almost $1,000,000 to make the Boston Symphony what it is, will back Dr. Muck to the limit of his resources, and it is believed court action will follow any attempt to cancel engagements already made. In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs, I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has declined to make any statement, but it is generally conceded that the decision to drop the Teutonic works was no sudden one.

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.

TO ASK BOSTON ORCHESTRA FOR ANTHEM HERE

Refusal by Dr. Muck May Lead to Cancellation of Great Concert.

"STAR SPANGLED BANNER" MAY BRING DISBANDMENT

Dr. Atkins Hopes Conductor Will Recognize the Justice of Patriotic Demand.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will be requested to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first concert of its Brooklyn season on Friday, November 9, at the Academy of Music. The program, so far, does not contain the number. Beethoven, Sibelius and Liszt are represented. If Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, refuses to comply with the request for the anthem, the concert, always one of the year's greatest music events, may not take place.

The matter will be taken up and discussed at Thursday's meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the local season of the orchestra is conducted. A. Augustus Healy, the art patron, is the chairman. The meeting has not been called for this specific purpose by any means; it is merely the regular scheduled gathering, but it is an absolute certainty that the attitude of Conductor Muck will present one of the topics, and that a demand will be made by certain members for an official request for the rendition.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, stated definitely today no specific request for the playing of the anthem, nor any official protest against the position taken by Mr. Muck, had reached him, but he would not deny the likelihood of such action as a result of the trustees' meeting.

"Anything that would deprive this or any other community of the Boston's concerts," he said, "would be a musical calamity. All I can do is to express my sincere hope that Dr. Muck will recognize the prevailing patriotic sentiment and not persist in his refusal to play the National Antthem."

Mr. Healy, who has been out of town for several days, returning only last night, was not prepared to express himself fully on the question.

"I have not yet been informed of any plan to request Dr. Muck to play the national anthem here on Friday," he said to a representative of the Brooklyn Times today. "If the matter is brought up it will be promptly acted on. Without being informed myself of all the details of the case, I am, of course, unprepared to give expression to advice, but I do know that the trustees of the Institute will act with justice and fair-mindedly. It is a fine thing, of course, to sing and play 'The Star Spangled Banner' on every possible occasion, but it must be borne in mind that the opinions of men like Major Higginson are certainly worthy of the most sincere consideration."

The whole trouble started in Rhode Island, where Dr. Muck refused to accede to a request for the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner."

At that time, C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of Providence, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played, but that, as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received. The telegram, signed by the presidents of various local societies, all prominent in musical [illegible] was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island.

Mr. Ellis intimated that any attempt to accuse Dr. Muck or any of his players of disloyalty was unjust.

"Why," he added, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Baner' every night for ten weeks during the 'pop' concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, where it was appropriate."

Dr. Muck, interviewed in Boston, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and prinicples for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

The real danger to the orchestra's future seems to lie in the attitude taken by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has announced that the orchestra would be disbanded and Symphony Hall in Boston sold if public clamor for the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" continued.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem," said the Major. "Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheered the Kaiser. Dou you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the guard house and watch him.'"

Feeling Strong in Rhode Island?

Providence, R. I., Nov. 1.—Feeling over the alleged refusal of officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in a concert here, grew stronger today and it intimated the orchestra will not be allowed to play here again during the war. The Rhode Island Council of Defense condemned Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, for "his deliberately insulting attitude," and strongly urged the police commission here not to grant any licenses for concerts, "in which Muck would be leader."

It is also reported that Department of Justice agents here will make a full report of the incident to the authorities at Washington.

Francis W. Doughty Dead.

WORLD
:: New York City
NOV 2 1917

DR. MUCK WILL NOT PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM HERE

Director of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says His Programme Has Been Decided Upon—Might Act Differently if He Were an American Citizen.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said to-day that the orchestra would not include The Star Spangled Banner in its New York concert repertoire next week.

"Our programme for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes," he said. "The American national anthem is not on the programme and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be as it has always been to give the music loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best manner possible. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The orchestra goes on tour next week, and Dr. Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit. In a previous statement he said it would be almost an "insult, embarrassing and impertinent" to insist that the anthem be played. To-day to one inquirer he said: "It's not my affair."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge to-day from the position announced yesterday—that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. A mammoth flag, however, has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

Suggests Muck's Assistant Direct Playing of Anthem

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall, said yesterday in reference to the stand of Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston conductor, that, while he thought it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our national anthem now, at the same time he considered Dr. Muck's reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"The issue in the case of the Boston orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it," said Mr. Damrosch.

There was a flare-up yesterday also over the question of German opera this season at the Metropolitan. In the November issue of the Chronicle, the dollar-an-issue publication, Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the Philharmonic Society, has a signed article opposing the presentation of German operas.

"Given, as they must be, in the German language," she says, "and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and bloodshed, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering."

It was said at the Metropolitan, where Mrs. Jay's letter was shown, "When the repertoire of the opening week of the opera season is announced the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offense to the most patriotic American."

AMERICAN
New York City. NOV 2 -

GERMAN OPERA HERE ATTACKED

Boston Director's Refusal to Play National Anthem Prefaces Indictment by New York Leader.

The conflict between American patriotism and German musical directors took on a broader scope yesterday. Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" served as a preliminary flourish for an attack upon German opera by Mrs. William Jay, sister of the late Hermann Oelrichs.

Mrs. Jay is the only woman director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. In an article in The Chronicle, a magazine founded by the late Joseph H. Choate, she urges the banishment of Wagner and other German composers from this season's programme of the Metropolitan Opera House. She writes:

"Given as they must be in the German language, and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and conflict, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering."

Her plea is backed up by an editorial declaring:

"If the operatic arbiters persist in presenting these works in German, the controversy shall be taken to the officials in Washington. There must be no German opera in the United States until the conclusion of peace."

From St. Louis came word yesterday that the directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra had decreed "The Star-Spangled Banner" should be played at every concert, symphony as well as popular. Hitherto the director of the orchestra, Max Zach, had opposed the playing of the National anthem at symphony concerts on the ground that it would be out of place in a classical programme.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Society, suggested yesterday the Muck controversy in Boston might be settled by having an assistant conductor direct the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." He said:

"While I always enjoy hearing Dr. Muck conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' as—considering his citizenship and feeling regarding our war—this would be an act of hypocrisy."

Boston, Nov. 1.—When Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra go to New York, next week, they will not play "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck made this announcement to-day, adding:

"The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our Busi-

SUN
s: New York City.
NOV 2 - 1917

GERMAN OPERA UNDER BAN BY METROPOLITAN

Managament Also Dispenses With Services of Gadski and Goritz.

DAMROSCH BACKS MUCK

Indorses Act of "Loyal Prussian" in Refusing to Play "Star Spangled Banner."

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and in fact the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera here might have a bad political effect and be used in Germany as evidence that the United States is divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused last night to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to allow "The Star Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan's singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said yesterday, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programme for the season. The list of operas announced is merely a tentative selection from which departures may be and almost invariably are made.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, long the financial backer of the organization, continues to rage.

Major Higginson has contributed to the Chronicle a statement outlining the reason for his action and the whole question is likely to be threshed out at the next meeting of the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9. The trustees will meet on Thursday next, and it is understood that a demand will then be made by certain of the members that the national anthem be played at the end of the concert.

In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Walter Damrosch is also lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia," Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discreation in this very trying situation."

354

BARS ANTHEM HERE.

Dr. Muck Will Not Allow Bosto Orchestra to Play It.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, co ductor of the Boston Symphony Orche tra, said to-day the orchestra would n include "The Star Spangled Banner" its New York concert repertoire ne week. In his statement Dr. Muck ma the following remarks: "I am not naturalized American citizen. Natura one would not expect me to do exac the same as if I were a citizen America."

Major Henry L. Higginson did budge to-day from the position nounced yesterday that he would d band the Symphony rather than yield a demand for the anthem. But as evidence of patriotic feeling a American flag has appeared over portico of Symphony Hall, the home the orchestra.

As a matter of fact there has be no demand for the anthem this c cert season, despite the fact that sy phony orchestras in New York, Min apolis, Chicago, Philadelphia and el where have included it. The Sympho is one of Boston's "sacred cows" and newspapers have refrained from cr cism.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The directors the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra day voted that "The Star Spangled B ner" shall be played at every conc This includes the Symphony conc that are given twice a week during orchestra season and also the popu concerts on Sunday afternoon. I spring the national anthem was pla at the popular concerts, but it ne has been played at Symphony conce

Max Zach, director of the orches opposed the playing of the anthem Symphony concerts on the ground it was not artistically in harmony the concert programme, but he willing that it be played at popul certs.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.

TO ASK BOSTON ORCHESTRA FOR ANTHEM HERE

Refusal by Dr. Muck May Lead to Cancellation of Great Concert.

"STAR SPANGLED BANNER" MAY BRING DISBANDMENT

Dr. Atkins Hopes Conductor Will Recognize the Justice of Patriotic Demand.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will be requested to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first concert of its Brooklyn season on Friday, November 9, at the Academy of Music. The program so far does not contain the number. Beethoven, Sibelius and Liszt are represented. If Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, refuses to comply with the request for the anthem, the concert, always one of the year's greatest music events, may not take place.

The matter will be taken up and discussed at Thursday's meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the local season of the orchestra is conducted. A. Augustus Healy, the art patron, is the chairman. The meeting has not been called for this specific purpose by any means; it is merely the regular scheduled gathering, but it is an absolute certainty that the attitude of Conductor Muck will present one of the topics, and that a demand will be made by certain members for an official request for the rendition.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, stated definitely today no specific request for the playing of the anthem, nor any official protest against the position taken by Mr. Muck, had reached him, but he would not deny the likelihood of such action as a result of the trustees' meeting.

"Anything that would deprive this or any other community of the Boston's concerts," he said, "would be a musical calamity. All I can do is to express my sincere hope that Dr. Muck will recognize the prevailing patriotic sentiment and not persist in his refusal to play the National Antthem."

Mr. Healy, who has been out of town for several days, returning only last night, was not prepared to express himself fully on the question.

"I have not yet been informed of any plan to request Dr. Muck to play the national anthem here on Friday," he said to a representative of the Brooklyn Times today. "If the matter is brought up it will be promptly acted on. Without being informed myself of all the details of the case, I am, of course, unprepared to give expression to advice, but I do know that the trustees of the Institute will act with justice and fairmindedly. It is a fine thing, of course, to sing and play 'The Star Spangled Banner' on every possible occasion, but it must be borne in mind that the opinions of men like Major Higginson are certainly worthy of the most sincere consideration."

The whole trouble started in Rhode Island, where Dr. Muck refused to accede to a request for the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner."

At that time, C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of Providence, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played, but that, as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received. The telegram, signed by the presidents of various local societies, all prominent in musical circles, was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island.

Mr. Ellis intimated that any attempt to accuse Dr. Muck or any of his players of disloyalty was unjust.

"Why," he added, "the Boston Symphony Orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Baner' every night for ten weeks during the 'pop' concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, where it was appropriate."

Dr. Muck, interviewed in Boston, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and prinicples for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

The real danger to the orchestra's future seems to lie in the attitude taken by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has announced that the orchestra would be disbanded and Symphony Hall in Boston sold if public clamor for the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" continued.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem," said the Major. "Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheered the Kaiser. Dou you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the guard house and watch him.'"

Feeling Strong in Rhode Island?

Providence, R. I., Nov. 1.—Feeling over the alleged refusal of officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in a concert here, grew stronger today and it intimated the orchestra will not be allowed to play here again during the war. The Rhode Island Council of Defense condemned Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, for "his deliberately insulting attitude," and strongly urged the police commission here not to grant any licenses for concerts, "in which Muck would be leader."

It is also reported that Department of Justice agents here will make a full report of the incident to the authorities at Washington.

Francis W. Doughty Dead.

WORLD
New York City
NOV 2 1917

DR. MUCK WILL NOT PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM HERE

Director of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says His Programme Has Been Decided Upon—Might Act Differently if He Were an American Citizen.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said to-day that the orchestra would not include The Star Spangled Banner in its New York concert repertoire next week.

"Our programme for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes," he said. "The American national anthem is not on the programme and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be as it has always been to give the music loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best manner possible. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The orchestra goes on tour next week, and Dr. Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit. In a previous statement he said it would be almost an "insult, embarrassing and impertinent" to insist that the anthem be played. To-day to one inquirer he said: "It's not my affair."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge to-day from the position announced yesterday—that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. A mammoth flag, however, has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

Suggests Muck's Assistant Direct Playing of Anthem

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall, said yesterday in reference to the stand of Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston conductor, that, while he thought it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our national anthem now, at the same time he considered Dr. Muck's reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"The issue in the case of the Boston orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it," said Mr. Damrosch.

There was a flare-up yesterday also over the question of German opera this season at the Metropolitan. In the November issue of the Chronicle, the dollar-an-issue publication, Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the Philharmonic Society, has a signed article opposing the presentation of German operas.

"Given, as they must be, in the German language," she says, "and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and bloodshed, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering."

It was said at the Metropolitan, where Mrs. Jay's letter was shown, "When the repertoire of the opening week of the opera season is announced the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offense to the most patriotic American."

AMERICAN
New York City. NOV 2 -

GERMAN OPERA HERE ATTACKED

Boston Director's Refusal to Play National Anthem Prefaces Indictment by New York Leader.

The conflict between American patriotism and German musical directors took on a broader scope yesterday. Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" served as a preliminary flourish for an attack upon German opera by Mrs. William Jay, sister of the late Hermann Oelrichs.

Mrs. Jay is the only woman director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. In an article in The Chronicle, a magazine founded by the late Joseph H. Choate, she urges the banishment of Wagner and other German composers from this season's programme of the Metropolitan Opera House. She writes:

"Given as they must be in the German language, and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and conflict, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering."

Her plea is backed up by an editorial declaring:

"If the operatic arbiters persist in presenting these works in German, the controversy shall be taken to the officials in Washington. There must be no German opera in the United States until the conclusion of peace."

From St. Louis came word yesterday that the directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra had decreed "The Star-Spangled Banner" should be played at every concert, symphony as well as popular. Hitherto the director of the orchestra, Max Zach, had opposed the playing of the National anthem at symphony concerts on the ground that it would be out of place in a classical programme.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Society, suggested yesterday the Muck controversy in Boston might be settled by having an assistant conductor direct the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." He said:

"While I always enjoy hearing Dr. Muck conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' as—considering his citizenship and feeling regarding our war—this would be an act of hypocrisy."

Boston, Nov. 1.—When Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra go to New York, next week they will not play "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck made this announcement to-day, adding:

"The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our busi-

SUN
New York City.
NOV 2 - 1917

GERMAN OPERA UNDER BAN BY METROPOLITAN

Managament Also Dispenses With Services of Gadski and Goritz.

DAMROSCH BACKS MUCK

Indorses Act of "Loyal Prussian" in Refusing to Play "Star Spangled Banner."

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and in fact the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera here might have a bad political effect and be used in Germany as evidence that the United States is divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused last night to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to allow "The Star Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan's singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said yesterday, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programme for the season. The list of operas announced is merely a tentative selection from which departures may be and almost invariably are made.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, long the financial backer of the organization, continues to rage.

Major Higginson has contributed to the Chronicle a statement outlining the reason for his action and the whole question is likely to be threshed out at the next meeting of the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9. The trustees will meet on Thursday next, and it is understood that a demand will then be made by certain of the members that the national anthem be played at the end of the concert.

In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Walter Damrosch is also lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discreation in this very trying situation."

BARS ANTHEM HERE.

Dr. Muck Will Not Allow Boston Orchestra to Play It.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said to-day the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week. In his statement Dr. Muck made the following remarks: "I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Major Henry L. Higginson did not budge to-day from the position announced yesterday that he would disband the Symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. But as evidence of patriotic feeling a big American flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra.

As a matter of fact there has been no demand for the anthem this concert season, despite the fact that symphony orchestras in New York, Minneapolis, Chicago, Philadelphia and elsewhere have included it. The Symphony is one of Boston's "sacred cows" and the newspapers have refrained from criticism.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra to-day voted that "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the Symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoon. Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at Symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at Symphony concerts on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert programme, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

REDUCTION RATIO 12x

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

55

TRIBUNE

ess: New York City

NOV 2 1917

German Opera Cut From List At Metropolitan

Contract of Mme. Gadski Not Renewed; Goritz Not to Sing

German operas will not be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House this year lest Germany should make capital of their continued appearance to convince the German people that this nation was not heart and soul in the war. For the same reason Mme. Gadski and Otto Goritz will not be among the stars appearing on the Metropolitan stage.

In the preliminary announcement of the operas that were to be produced during the season at the Metropolitan Wagnerian operas were included. These, it was learned yesterday, are now definitely banned. The decision of the directors of the Metropolitan is not of recent date, nor does it refer in any way, it is believed, to the Boston Symphony episode in Providence.

It was not a question of the playing of the national anthem, nor was the patriotism of any individual or any body of individuals in question. The directors reached the conclusion that to continue to produce German opera might enable Germany, by garbling and patching, to print "news" dispatches for home consumption which would tend to put heart in the German people.

Such a risk, however remote, the directors did not intend to run. The tentative list of productions given out some time ago, it was said, was always considered merely as temporary, and was subject to change.

Mme. Gadski's contract had ended and simply was not renewed. The contract of Otto Goritz, however, still had some time to run. Both singers were said to be distinctly pro-German in their attitude.

The decision of the directors was forecast in a reply made at the Metropolitan Opera House to a suggestion made in "The Chronicle," the society weekly, that no operas of German origin be produced in New York this season.

"When the repertory of the opening week of the Metropolitan opera season is announced," it was said, "the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offence to the most patriotic Americans."

New York Halls May Bar Dr. Muck Unless He Plays National Air in Concerts

Unless Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, overcomes his aversion for "The Star-Spangled Banner" and plays it at his opening concert at Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening he may find it necessary to seek another hall for future concerts here.

A meeting of the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, before which Dr. Muck's orchestra is scheduled to give a series of five concerts, will be held next Thursday, and it was intimated yesterday that that body, too, might take action against him unless he recedes from his present position.

But Dr. Muck shows no sign of recession. In Boston yesterday he dismissed the entire controversy with the announcement that there would be no change in the New York programme to permit the playing of the national anthem.

"I am not a naturalized citizen of America," he said. "Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Difficult to Break Contract

C. C. Smith, administrative manager of Carnegie Hall, was asked yesterday whether he would permit Dr. Muck to use the hall Thursday night if he persisted in his stand. He said that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had already signed a lease for the hall for its concerts, that all the seats had been sold for the series, and that therefore it would be difficult to act against him. No action will be taken before next Thursday, he said, but if Dr. Muck refuses to play the national anthem at the opening concert the board of directors of Carnegie Hall may then take action.

According to the terms of the contract between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Carnegie Hall, it appears that the management of the hall has the legal right to step in if anything happens during a performance there which brings discredit on the hall.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, in a statement to The Tribune after his concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon said that the reasons assigned by Dr. Muck for his attitude were [illegible] and misleading.

Damrosch Defends Muck

"Dr. Muck," said Mr. Damrosch, "is a citizen of Prussia, and is over here not because of his own desire, but because of the wishes of Mr. Higginson, who is the founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It would be to my mind hypocritical of Dr. Muck to conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in this country while we are at war with Germany. Nor should we expect him to do it. He might easily let an assistant director lead when it is played."

St. Louis Symphony to Play Anthem at All Concerts

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that "The Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert programme, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

New York City

NOV - 2 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra May Disband Rather Than Play "The Star Spangled Banner."

A dispatch from the center of New England culture announces that the "famous" Boston Symphony Orchestra may be disbanded. Mayor Curley threatens to cancel its license if the national anthem is not played, while Major Henry L. Higginson and Charles A. Ellis say that if the Mayor insists on "The Star Spangled Banner" at every performance they will disband. Dr. Karl Muck, German born leader of the orchestra, is quoted as saying that "the public has no right to raise such a question with a purely artistic organization," which, "as such, has nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

Here is an opinion so logical that it might have been made in Germany rather than merely inspired in that Empire. "The Star Spangled Banner" is a political composition! A definition of politics is somewhat elastic, to be sure, but usually it implies a divided opinion. If there is any divided opinion in this country concerning the sentiments expressed in our national anthem one will have to go to Boston to find it, perhaps.

We are not narrow, as Dr. Muck ought to know. We have not shelved German opera because it is German, but have accepted it because it is art, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have to accept "The Star Spangled Banner" because it is "The Star Spangled Banner."

The contemptuous reference to the public by Higginson will not hurt much. It is the public and not he who supports the orchestra, although he may have his dollars in it. Dollars, merely, can neither promote art—nor destroy the patriotic impulse.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Nov. 2, 1917 NOV

MUSIC AND WAR.

Sympathy for Dr. Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," must give place to heartfelt commiseration of the many sensitive and nerve-racked virtuosi in the gifted organization for whom he speaks.

The Doctor finds that the National Anthem of the United States is not in harmony with his programme. Nevertheless, if he were back in Germany, where war is considered if not a symphony at least the highest expression of art, we have no doubt that Dr. Muck and most of his artists, if invited to render that great classic "Deutschland über Alles," would find that it was in perfect accord not only with their artistic tastes and temperaments but with their physical and financial welfare.

N.Y. HERALD. NOV. 2, 1917

Prussianizing of Musical Institutions in America Stirs Bitter Controversy

Refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to Play National Anthem Aggravates Dispute.

OPERA PRODUCTIONS IN GERMAN ASSAILED

Only Woman Director of the Philharmonic Joins in Americanism Campaign.

The world of music in America found itself yesterday deep in controversy over that same problem which has menaced political and commercial life—the Prussianizing of American institutions. Of the several musicians who expressed opinions on the question only one, a woman, came out flatfootedly against German music, as it might affect American war spirit.

The whole problem was aggravated by the refusal of a German orchestra conductor to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in an American city. The question at debate now involves both "The Star Spangled Banner" incident and the production this winter of German operas by the several grand opera companies.

The disturbance, which began with the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the national anthem on Tuesday night at Providence, R. I., by no means subsided yesterday. The apparent intention of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, to back up Dr. Muck and the purported explanations by Dr. Muck himself only heightened the indignation of all Americans.

PERMIT FOR DANISH FESTIVAL REFUSED

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Thursday.—A request of the local branch of the Danish Society to raise the Danish flag and play Danish music in Golden Gate Park on November 18, Denmark's annual patriotic holiday, was refused unanimously by the Park Commission, it became known to-day.

"Not this time," replied Judge Curtis H. Lindley, of the commission. "Scandinavia has been unfair to the United States. Through the back door of Denmark have gone American goods and supplies to help the Germans."

Concert May Be Forbidden.

"It has come to a pretty pass," they said, "when American audiences must be told by a German music master that they can't hear 'The Star Spangled Banner' at this critical time."

"To hell with Dr. Muck; he ought to be in jail," roared one prominent operatic musician, and then added: "But please don't quote me as saying so. They might stick a knife in my back—figuratively or literally."

At the office of Carnegie Hall it was said that no orders had been received for cancellation of the concert here on Thursday of the Boston orchestra, led by Dr. Muck; that all seats for the season had been sold and that Dr. Muck's orchestra would play at Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia before coming here. Many predicted that the Mayors of those cities and perhaps of New York might follow the precedent set by Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, in forbidding the orchestra to play in the city unless the programme was opened with the national anthem.

HERALD (CONTINUED)

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society and the Oratorio Society of New York, took a dispassionate view of the situation. He argued that Dr. Muck as a "loyal citizen of Prussia" was in this country only at the request of Major Higginson. But he challenged Dr. Muck's assertion that the many nationalities represented in his orchestra precluded its playing the American anthem.

Compromise Is Suggested.

"The real reason is that Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national anthem, "he said," and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

Mr. Damrosch suggested that the difficulty be met by another conductor directing the national anthem before Dr. Muck takes the baton for the evening.

Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, and Arthur Bodonzky director of German opera of the Metropolitan Opera Company, both have directed their orchestras while they played the national anthem, Mr. Bodonzky on the day President Wilson sent his war message to Congress and Dr. Stransky only last week. Both are Austrians.

Max Rabinoff, managing director of the Boston Grand Opera Company, said last night that "The Star Spangled Banner" and the Marseillaise would be sung before every performance of his season, soon to begin. He said every German and Austrian had been ejected from his organization. It is understood that about one-third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are Germans or Austrians.

German Operas Attacked.

The question of German opera was brought up again with much argument apropos of the Dr. Muck controversy. It was announced last night that Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, had joined the campaign of the Chronicle against rendering German opera until the end of the war. The November edition of that magazine contains an article by Mrs. Jay in which she argues that German orchestral music would not be injurious, but German operas might be, "particularly those of Wagner, depicting in many cases scenes of violence and conflict."

"They must inevitably," she argues, "draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering. In dropping all German operas from the programmes there can be no imputation or prejudice or bigotry, since the Americans continue to welcome the instrumental music of the great Germans in spite of the war."

A new development is giving concern to the management of the Metropolitan Opera House. A large manufacturing concern which has always subscribed for a page or more in advertising in the opera programmes has notified the management that these advertisements are not to be used at performances of German operas and that the contract payments will not be made in such instances.

This definite stand in the matter is said to be the forerunner of similar protests by other advertisers which will crystalize the very extensive sentiment against German operas—especially if sung in German—during the war. The discussion of the advisability of continuing the German operas began last spring and hass resulted in a controversy in which both sides are inflexible in their attitude.

Officials at the Metropolitan yesterday refused to discuss this phase of the matter.

The Chronicle supplements Mrs. Jay's views with an editorial saying:—"The Metropolitan Opera Company announces the entire category of operas by Wagner for its ensuing season in New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia. Mrs. Jay valiantly fires the first shot against the menace of this insidious German propaganda. If the operatic arbiters persist in presenting these works in German the controversy shall be taken to the officials in Washington."

55

TRIBUNE

ess: New York City

German Opera Cut From List At Metropolitan

Contract of Mme. Gadski Not Renewed; Goritz Not to Sing

German operas will not be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House this year lest Germany should make capital of their continued appearance to convince the German people that this nation was not heart and soul in the war. For the same reason Mme. Gadski and Otto Goritz will not be among the stars appearing on the Metropolitan stage.

In the preliminary announcement of the operas that were to be produced during the season at the Metropolitan Wagnerian operas were included. These, it was learned yesterday, are now definitely banned. The decision of the directors of the Metropolitan is not of recent date, nor does it refer in any way, it is believed, to the Boston Symphony episode in Providence.

It was not a question of the playing of the national anthem, nor was the patriotism of any individual or any body of individuals in question. The directors reached the conclusion that to continue to produce German opera might enable Germany, by garbling and patching, to print "news" dispatches for home consumption which would tend to put heart in the German people.

Such a risk, however remote, the directors did not intend to run. The tentative list of productions given out some time ago, it was said, was always considered merely as temporary, and was subject to change.

Mme. Gadski's contract had ended and simply was not renewed. The contract of Otto Goritz, however, still had some time to run. Both singers were said to be distinctly pro-German in their attitude.

The decision of the directors was forecast in a reply made at the Metropolitan Opera House to a suggestion made in "The Chronicle," the society weekly, that no operas of German origin be produced in New York this season.

"When the repertory of the opening week of the Metropolitan opera season is announced," it was said, "the public may rest assured that it will contain nothing to cause the least offence to the most patriotic Americans."

New York Halls May Bar Dr. Muck Unless He Plays National Air in Concerts

Unless Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, overcomes his aversion for "The Star-Spangled Banner" and plays it at his opening concert at Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening he may find it necessary to seek another hall for future concerts here.

A meeting of the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, before which Dr. Muck's orchestra is scheduled to give a series of five concerts, will be held next Thursday, and it was intimated yesterday that that body, too, might take action against him unless he recedes from his present position.

But Dr. Muck shows no sign of recession. In Boston yesterday he dismissed the entire controversy with the announcement that there would be no change in the New York programme to permit the playing of the national anthem.

"I am not a naturalized citizen of America," he said. "Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Difficult to Break Contract

C. C. Smith, administrative manager of Carnegie Hall, was asked yesterday whether he would permit Dr. Muck to use the hall Thursday night if he persisted in his stand. He said that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had already signed a lease for the hall for the concerts, that all the seats had been sold for the series, and that therefore it would be difficult to act against him. No action will be taken before next Thursday, he said, but if Dr. Muck refuses to play the national anthem at the opening concert the board of directors of Carnegie Hall may then take action.

According to the terms of the contract between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Carnegie Hall, it appears that the management of the hall has the legal right to step in if anything happens during a performance there which brings discredit on the hall.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, in a statement to The Tribune after his concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon said that the reasons assigned by Dr. Muck for his attitude were foolish and misleading.

Damrosch Defends Muck

"Dr. Muck," said Mr. Damrosch, "is a citizen of Prussia, and is over here not because of his own desire, but because of the wishes of Mr. Higginson, who is the founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It would be to my mind hypocritical of Dr. Muck to conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in this country while we are at war with Germany. Nor should we expect him to do it. He might easily let an assistant director lead when it is played."

St. Louis Symphony to Play Anthem at All Concerts

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that "The Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert programme, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

: New York City

NOV 2 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra May Disband Rather Than Play "The Star Spangled Banner."

A dispatch from the center of New England culture announces that the "famous" Boston Symphony Orchestra may be disbanded. Mayor Curley threatens to cancel its license if the national anthem is not played, while Major Henry L. Higginson and Charles A. Ellis say that if the Mayor insists on "The Star Spangled Banner" at every performance they will disband. Dr. Karl Muck, German born leader of the orchestra, is quoted as saying that "the public has no right to raise such a question with a purely artistic organization," which, "as such, has nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

Here is an opinion so logical that it might have been made in Germany rather than merely inspired in that Empire. "The Star Spangled Banner" is a political composition! A definition of politics is somewhat elastic, to be sure, but usually it implies a divided opinion. If there is any divided opinion in this country concerning the sentiments expressed in our national anthem one will have to go to Boston to find it, perhaps.

We are not narrow, as Dr. Muck ought to know. We have not shelved German opera because it is German, but have accepted it because it is art, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have to accept "The Star Spangled Banner" because it is "The Star Spangled Banner."

The contemptuous reference to the public by Higginson will not hurt much. It is the public and not he who supports the orchestra, although he may have his dollars in it. Dollars, merely, can neither promote art—nor destroy the patriotic impulse.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Nov. 2, 1917

MUSIC AND WAR.

Sympathy for Dr. Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," must give place to heartfelt commiseration of the many sensitive and nerve-racked virtuosi in the gifted organization for whom he speaks.

The Doctor finds that the National Anthem of the United States is not in harmony with his programme. Nevertheless, if he were back in Germany, where war is considered if not a symphony at least the highest expression of art, we have no doubt that Dr. Muck and most of his artists, if invited to render that great classic "Deutschland über Alles," would find that it was in perfect accord not only with their artistic tastes and temperaments but with their physical and financial welfare.

HERALD (CONTINUED)

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society and the Oratorio Society of New York, took a dispassionate view of the situation. He argued that Dr. Muck as a "loyal citizen of Prussia" was in this country only at the request of Major Higginson. But he challenged Dr. Muck's assertion that the many nationalities represented in his orchestra precluded its playing the American anthem.

Compromise Is Suggested.

"The real reason is that Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national anthem, "he said," and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

Mr. Damrosch suggested that the difficulty be met by another conductor directing the national anthem before Dr. Muck takes the baton for the evening.

Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, and Arthur Bodonzky director of German opera of the Metropolitan Opera Company, both have directed their orchestras while they played the national anthem. Mr. Bodonzky on the day President Wilson sent his war message to Congress and Dr. Stransky only last week. Both are Austrians.

Max Rabinoff, managing director of the Boston Grand Opera Company, said last night that "The Star Spangled Banner" and the Marseillaise would be sung before every performance of his season, soon to begin. He said every German and Austrian had been ejected from his organization. It is understood that about one-third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are Germans or Austrians.

German Operas Attacked.

The question of German opera was brought up again with much argument apropos of the Dr. Muck controversy. It was announced last night that Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, had joined the campaign of the Chronicle against rendering German opera until the end of the war. The November edition of that magazine contains an article by Mrs. Jay in which she argues that German orchestral music would not be injurious, but German operas might be, "particularly those of Wagner, depicting in many cases scenes of violence and conflict."

"They must inevitably," she argues, "draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering. In dropping all German operas from the programmes there can be no imputation or prejudice or bigotry, since the Americans continue to welcome the instrumental music of the great Germans in spite of the war."

A new development is giving concern to the management of the Metropolitan Opera House. A large manufacturing concern which has always subscribed for a page or more in advertising in the opera programmes has notified the management that these advertisements are not to be used at performances of German operas and that the contract payments will not be made in such instances.

This definite stand in the matter is said to be the forerunner of similar protests by other advertisers which will crystalize the very extensive sentiment against German operas—especially if sung in German—during the war. The discussion of the advisability of continuing the German operas began last spring and hass resulted in a controversy in which both sides are inflexible in their attitude.

Officials at the Metropolitan yesterday refused to discuss this phase of the matter.

The Chronicle supplements Mrs. Jay's views with an editorial saying:—"The Metropolitan Opera Company announces the entire category of operas by Wagner for its ensuing season in New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia. Mrs. Jay valiantly fires the first shot against the menace of this insidious German propaganda. If the operatic arbiters persist in presenting these works in German the controversy shall be taken to the officials in Washington."

N.Y. HERALD. NOV. 2, 1917

Prussianizing of Musical Institutions in America Stirs Bitter Controversy

Refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to Play National Anthem Aggravates Dispute.

OPERA PRODUCTIONS IN GERMAN ASSAILED

Only Woman Director of the Philharmonic Joins in Americanism Campaign.

The world of music in America found itself yesterday deep in controversy over that same problem which has menaced political and commercial life—the Prussianizing of American institutions. Of the several musicians who expressed opinions on the question only one, a woman, came out flatfootedly against German music, as it might affect American war spirit.

The whole problem was aggravated by the refusal of a German orchestra conductor to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in an American city. The question at debate now involves both "The Star Spangled Banner" incident and the production this winter of German operas by the several grand opera companies.

The disturbance, which began with the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the national anthem on Tuesday night at Providence, R. I., by no means subsided yesterday. The apparent intention of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, to back up Dr. Muck and the purported explanations by Dr. Muck himself only heightened the indignation of all Americans.

PERMIT FOR DANISH FESTIVAL REFUSED

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Thursday.—A request of the local branch of the Danish Society to raise the Danish flag and play Danish music in Golden Gate Park on November 18, Denmark's annual patriotic holiday, was refused unanimously by the Park Commission, it became known to-day.

"Not this time," replied Judge Curtis H. Lindley, of the commission. "Scandinavia has been unfair to the United States. Through the back door of Denmark have gone American goods and supplies to help the Germans."

Concert May Be Forbidden.

"It has come to a pretty pass," they said, "when American audiences must be told by a German music master that they can't hear 'The Star Spangled Banner' at this critical time."

"To hell with Dr. Muck; he ought to be in jail," roared one prominent operatic musician, and then added:—"But please don't quote me as saying so. They might stick a knife in my back—figuratively or literally."

At the office of Carnegie Hall it was said that no orders had been received for cancellation of the concert here on Thursday of the Boston orchestra, led by Dr. Muck; that all seats for the season had been sold and that Dr. Muck's orchestra would play at Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia before coming here. Many predicted that the Mayors of those cities and perhaps of New York might follow the precedent set by Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, in forbidding the orchestra to play in the city unless the programme was opened with the national anthem.

THE MORNING MERCURY
EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

-Oct. 31, 1917-

A great deal of twaddle is being written regarding Dr. Muck's failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" when the Boston Symphony orchestra gave a concert in Providence several nights ago. Among those who are seeking to induce the city council to refuse a license for further concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra unless the national anthem is played is the Musicians' union of Providence. To perfectly understand the state of mind of one group that is behind the present controversy the public should know that the Boston Symphony orchestra has remained outside the Musicians' union in spite of every effort to compel it to capitulate. Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and supporter of the orchestra, has been made the subject of personal attack for his refusal to ally his orchestra with the union. It is almost the only large musical organization on the outside and since it is recognized as the finest orchestra in the country, if not in the world, the situation irritates, and the orchestra and all identified with it are attacked by union musicians whenever an opportunity offers. The inspiration of the present attack is the same, probably, as those which have sought to harass Major Higginson in the past, but in this instance it is more insidious, being made upon grounds that have brought a good many unthinking people to consider that they are taking a patriotic stand.

In a neighboring column we are printing a letter written by Major Higginson to a friend, in which Major Higginson announces his purpose, if the silly agitation is pressed, to dispose of Symphony Hall and the orchestra. This will be pleasing to a few people but it will be an irreparable loss to the United States and will be a victory for a narrow minded point of view.

In Great Britain and other nations it has always been the practice to play the national anthem at the theatre, at concerts, and upon all public occasions. If it had always been the custom in the United States to play "The Star Spangled Banner" whenever the public assembled—if the Symphony orchestra had presaged its programmes with the performance—and at this particular time Dr. Muck declined to follow the rule, there might properly be resentment. But such a performance has never been considered in connection with such programmes as the orchestra presents and it would have been regarded as an anachronism. Dr. Muck is a German. We have never heard that he has obtruded his nationality or his sympathies. Major Higginson says he has the assurance of high officials of the United States that there are no imputations against any of the musicians and he has been advised that it would be a national misfortune if he should disband the organization. If anybody is aggrieved that a great German musician is directing an orchestra in this country, they may show their resentment by refusing to patronize the concerts. If Dr. Muck should direct the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" it would signify nothing. It would be an insincere tribute—"sounding brass and tinkling cymbal"—an empty rendering which would not assist the spirit of patriotism, which is the only reason which exists for the ceremony. In declining to participate in such a canting performance, Dr. Muck manifests better taste than his critics.

Major Higginson, the owner of the orchestra, is a patriotic citizen above reproach. He was a gallant officer in the Civil war and bears in his body a bullet which gave him a serious wound when he was fighting for the country and its institutions. Since the Civil war he has been an inspiration in every great philanthropic and patriotic movement and he has just rendered his country the greatest service in doing as much as any individual in the land to make the Liberty loan a success. Major Higginson is a sponsor for the orchestra and a defender of Dr. Muck. Major Higginson would be the last man to encourage or harbor an unpatriotic influence. Knowing what we do of him we will do well to take it for granted that the campaign against the orchestra is the work of selfish detractors, supported by many good people who are thoughtless and who do not understand. The exploitation of the incident is fudge and people with common sense should dismiss it.

TRANSCRIPT. NOV. 5, 1917.

WEEK-END CONCERTS

AS TO A SUPERSTITION ABOUT SIBELIUS

The Absurd Shibboleth That Makes His Music Always Finnish — Franck and Bach Disclose New Qualities in Mr. Zimbalist—Youth from the Metropolitan Opera House in a Sunday Afternoon of Variegated Song—Stravinsky Undanced —Mr. Heifetz in Prospect

HAS not the notion that Sibelius composes under the influence of Finnish landscape, Finnish light and air, and Finnish environment in general become by this time a shibboleth and a superstition? Whatever music he writes, the commentators and the analysts hasten to explain it in terms of the lakes and forests, the skies and seas, the folklore and the racial idiosyncrasies, of the Finns. Grant that Sibelius is a full-blooded and pure-blooded Finlander; that he dwells and works in the country about Helsingfors; that he has written music in which he purposely recounts in tones Finnish folk-tales or incorporates moods out of Finnish scene and temperament. Yet he has also written music that bears no plausible, and in some instances no possible, relation to anything Finnish. Indeed he may, on occasion, like most other composers, have written out of impulse, imagination and emotion wholly within himself and made music that he would have put to paper whether at the moment he happened to be living in Bonn or Butte, whether by birth he were Finn or French.

After all, the individual mind, the individual spirit, is the source whence most composers draw creative impulse, however, much or little race and environment may in past or present, have played upon either. More: it is quite possible to write music in which the influence of both may be virtually nil. Of such, as it seems to some hearers, is this fourth symphony of Sibelius, as played once more at the tranquil Symphony Concert of Saturday evening. Clearly it is the expression of intense individual emotion by as vividly individual a procedure. This procedure is distinctly that of a composer seeking to form and practice an idiom peculiar to himself; while the "poetic content," as it is the custom to say, seems altogether introspective. Were it not the tradition, the convention, and therefore the easy way and the dull way, who would think of referring this symphony to Finnish countryside and what outsiders consider Finnish racial traits? Sibelius has surely written enough frankly Finnish music to deserve now and then "to look in his heart and write."

From an Acute Listener

On this very point one of the devotees of Sibelius in this town—and in the days when his music enjoyed no such prestige as it does now—writes to this department:

> Surely the critic is not the infallible recorder of the soul in icy climates, nor the composer the typification of it. Sibelius does not propound his philosophy, and somehow it would be superfluous to question him, for the symphony is so eloquently its own explanation, and one has always the feeling in its presence of purely musical emotions, inexpressible in any other medium. Quite surprising is the rapidity of acclimatization to a radical, almost a revolutionary musical idiom. Those that were at first baffled at the grotesque shapes and weird intervals, the unexpected endings, the jagged harmonies and "polyharmonies," the key-relationships, feel far differently now. They talk no more of an experimental mania or a haphazard pose, for with familiarity, every trait shows forth as intensely musical, finely wrought and earnestly pondered. The symphony marks the striking, the potent, the well-founded originality of a daring explorer in the uncut realms of musical possibility.

Press. Phila. Pa. Oct 14.

The sale of season tickets for the five concerts to be given in Philadelphia this Winter, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open at George T. Haly's office, 1119 Chestnut Street, tomorrow (Mondoy morning), October 15. The season of 1917 will be the thirty-seventh of the orchestra itself and the thirty-third consecutive season in which the orchestra has been a visitor to this city.

This year, as has been the case for many years past, the concerts will be given in the Academy of Music, on Monday evenings. The dates are November 5, December 3, January 7, February 11 and March 11. For the first time in its history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years, the changes have been very few, but this year, the membership is exactly the same as last. Dr. Muck, despite all prophecies to the contrary, will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had even been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second, Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia, primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early Fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early Spring and, in addition to her appearances in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the Orchestra in Philadelphia during the coming Winter will be at the January concert. The soloist at the February [illegible] Winifred Christie, the

POST. NOV 4, 1917

56

Prophecy of War

Sibelius, the Northman, Unconscious Prophet of World Conflict—Individuality in Interpretation—Concert Notes

Art and politics commingle more often than one would think—which is probably the impression today at Symphony Hall. But we do not refer to the discussion that has raged over a national issue during the week past. That is a matter the people of Boston may be relied upon to settle for themselves. We refer to the impression made by the fourth symphony of Sibelius, performed at the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

When Sibelius raised his voice, only a few years ago, from his fastnesses in the north—Finland, to be specific—one was suddenly and rather shockingly aware of a new, barbaric, indecently-in-earnest soul, who knew no better than to shout out everything that was on his mind for the benefit of whoever might happen to hear. As for a majority of the Boston Symphony audiences, they could not have been more indignant and annoyed if a Norseman in skins, dripping with sea water and smelling of fish, had stepped into the drawing room. "Spilling the beans" would be a popular description of the operations of Mr. Sibelius!

This man did not laugh. He growled. Or in moments of exhilaration he roared in a voice that made the room rattle. He was unpleasantly, even threateningly powerful. Altogether, such an impolite, formidable, serious person, that people drew away from him before they had time to appreciate the tenderness and sweetness that was also in him, and the incredible simplicity and humanity of his music. We often look all about us for real things, and, when they are right at our elbow, choose counterfeits from farther away, partly because it is hard to believe how many great and stupendous things are actually within our reach if we will realize it.

Sibelius was actually an heroic and colossal spirit resurrected out of northern myth. From a land of wild, wind-swept moors, frozen lakes and pine-topped summits he strode with his seven-league stride, and prophesied war.

One was reminded of that yesterday. The fourth symphony is not the most epic of Sibelius's masterpieces. It is more personal and introspective than the second symphony, which is the great saga of the North, with its dark and gloomy prophecies, and the shining light of the finale, as though the gates of Walhalla were swinging open to those who had fallen in the snows. The fourth symphony is not like this, although in the distinction of its material and originality of its workmanship it is a conspicuous advance over the second. But it is one and of a piece with the spirit of this Northman, who seems to have been the only composer of the last two decades who was not lulled to sleep by the apparent security of a materialistic age; for whom it was impossible to succumb to its sophistries and sophistications; and who, with a grimly prophetic vision, as it would almost appear, persisted in chanting his war-songs.

It was never possible to listen to the music of Sibelius without responding to its elemental grandeur, to the supernatural gloom and mystery of many pages—pages in which man confronted by the power and immensity of nature uttered his terrified complaint—and to the heroism and the Berkserker fury of a soul contemptuous of a modern age. That music was a restoration and an awakening. Today it seems one of the few voices in art which do not sound remote and small by the side of the world's travail. It is the man formerly criticised as an artist who harped on but one note, who would not, or could not, come out of his cave in the North and mix with the world of today—who now appears as one of the few musicians who can ride the storm.

The question has already been asked, "What effect will the war have on music?" Will it sweep away all the diaphanous or "weak-chested"—as some have called them—compositions of modern men and substitute something newer, simpler, more virile and fundamental, or not? One person, at least, is abreast of that question and that need, an individual whose peculiar geographical, social and political environment in Finland kept him alive to a spiritual necessity of the world. What reaction, then, will the world war may have on the compositions of the artist who, doubtless unconsciously, was one of its prophets? Will the bitter misanthropy, the melancholy, the despair, which show in all too many pages of the symphony heard yesterday—the fourth—give place to a more confident and optimistic note? Sibelius' fifth symphony was performed at Helsingfors, on the ocasion of his 50th birthday, some two years ago. It has not been published. It doubtless will not be until after the struggle. If that struggle should add to its incalculable benefits to humanity by dispersing the decadent, though intensely original tendencies discoverable in the fourth symphony, it will have added to its inevitable achievements in world-construction

RECORD NOV. 2, 1917.

Martinelli Star of Quartet at Symphony Hall, Sunday

Record 11/7

Lovers of operatic music and those persons who wish to get four singers all for one admission will wallow in delight at this week's Sunday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall.

Mabel Garrison, Sophie Braslau, Arthur Middleton and the great Martinelli, the tenor of the Metropolitan, who is second only to Caruso, will sing at Symphony Hall.

For their program the artists have taken as popular numbers as possible.

The sale of subscription tickets for the three choral concerts which will be given by the Symphony Orchestra and the newly organized Symphony chorus has been in progress at Symphony Hall for several days with gratifying results. As already announced, the three works to be given are the Ninth, or Choral, Symphony of Beethoven on Tuesday, Nov. 20; Mahler's Second Symphony, Tuesday evening, Jan. 22, and the St. Matthew Passion of Bach on Tuesday, March 26.

The date of Mme. Schumann-Heink's Symphony Hall appearance has definitely been set for Sunday, Nov. 25. Another Symphony Hall favorite, Kreisler, will return Sunday, Nov. 18. Elman gives his first local appearance of the season at Symphony Hall Sunday, Nov. 11.

MABEL GARRISON
Coloratura Soprano who sings at Symphony Hall Sunday

some confusion this morning, as matter posted after the last collection, but before midnight, was collected today and bears a Nov. 2 date. Orders have been issued that they shall use their discretion in the matter of holding for more postage, and unless they have reason to think that such correspondence was posted after midnight, it is likely it will proceed unquestioned.

This trouble was eliminated in Boston offices by having an extra mid-

Post Nov. 3, 1917

SIBELIUS' FOURTH BY SYMPHONY

Fantastical Work Impresses—Miss Nash Soloist

Post 11/3

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Sibelius' fourth symphony; Saint-Saens' G-minor piano concerto, played by Miss Frances Nash; Beethoven's third Leonore overture, and, in response to public request, the national anthem, which the orchestra rose to its feet to play, while the audience also stood.

SIBELIUS' ORIGINALITY

The originality and imagination shown by Sibelius in his fourth symphony makes that work the more impressive with each repeated hearing. He is extremely personal, subjective, in his mood. There is no thought of an audience. Most men write music as they write diaries—with the thought that some day people will read or listen. They may write for the few or for the many, with sincerity and impulse, or with craft and pretence, but they nevertheless write for the reader or hearer. Sibelius in this symphony has written only for himself.

It has been said that Sibelius was a Northman who could only talk of the whale, the seal and the aurora-borealis. It is not so in this symphony. True, it is nature music. The spirit of forests, the living silence of great solitudes, is in it. But the expression of these moods, and of the grim despair of a lonely human who shakes his fist at the skies, is of a sort which will command the attention and arouse the feelings of any modern man in any country when once he feels the music.

As chance would have it, the programme put together by Dr. Muck for the concert was less interesting than any of the three that since the middle of October have preceded it. Sibelius's symphony in A minor began it—exacting and to many ears unrewarding music. Saint-Saëns's fifty-year-old concerto in G minor followed and the playing of Miss Nash, the pianist of the day, little glamored a fading piece. Only Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture ministered to the general pleasure, and upon that was to follow the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," for once an "event" and not a custom. The anthem sounded rather better than it usually does for the quick pace and the sharp rhythm at which Dr. Muck led it; while the standing audience comported itself much as audiences do when the piece is ceremonially played in other houses of public entertainment. That is to say, the major part of the company listened decorously; a few conversed; a few mistakenly sang; more were busily putting on their hats; while some watched the demeanor of their neighbors. Perhaps every one concerned welcomed this end to the tension of a concert in which it was hard to be a good listener to music as music and in which the wonder was the high pitch of accomplishment at which conductor and orchestra held themselves. From the first note to the last their mettle praised them.

It is almost possible to believe that had Schönberg's "Five Pieces," once notorious, been played at three pairs of Symphony Concerts in four years, the audience would have become kindly disposed to them. Sibelius's symphony in A minor—with the well-won prestige of the composer to buttress it—seemed hardly less strange of tonal speech, baffling to musical understanding, and barren to awaiting imagination when it was first played "at these concerts" in the autumn of 1913. Now, become familiar through repetition, it interested hearers, stirred hearty plaudits, clarified itself to the listening mind and prompted responsive feeling. Since the war has withheld Sibelius's most recent music from all ears but those of his own Finlanders, it is impossible to say whether he has continued to write in the singular idiom of this symphony of 1911-1912. In any case, as it now sounds, the manner of the music suits the matter it would bear. For, if ever there was a symphony of weary mood and weary voice, it is this tone-poem of disillusion. Out of broken phrases, chance fragments as they often seem, the motives of the darksome first movement, struggle into being, weave themselves, almost painfully, into a tonal fabric in motion. Developed, they lower along as heavy clouds, slowly driven by ominous winds, traverse a stormy sky. A rift and a halt bares the warmer, softer melody, like pale, cold sunshine, but it has hardly expanded, before the clouds, now in as broken progressions as at the beginning, shut thick and fast upon it. Blackly, abruptly, as with falling night, the movement ends.

The scherzo is of like nervous, struggling, broken tonal speech. From one motive Sibelius turns impatiently to another; shivers both into fragments of chords, streaks the music with fantastical instrumental color as in a mood of bitter and sardonic gayety; sets himself to sustained measures quick with rhythm, and then almost as suddenly smothers them away. The slow movement renews in a fashion the spirit and the method of the first. Out of broken interchanges among the orchestral choirs and even between solo instruments within them, out of splintered fragments of motives against ghostly or gloomy harmonic backgrounds, a grave, grim melody almost wrings itself into tonal existence and tonal continuity, deepens, strides, mounts at last to austere proclamation, only to wear itself away in a death-rattle of instrumental murmurs, as though the effort to speak highly, nobly, had cost it life. Similarly, the finale returns to the fantastic procedure and imagery, the sardonic mood of the scherzo. The motives more quickly define and repeat themselves, only to be torn asunder, tossed hither and thither in a wilderness of keys, out-darting into stranger and stranger harmonies—a music that seems almost to mock itself. Next, for a time the composer steadies his spirit and his tones. They goad themselves into a climax as though he would frantically achieve it while the will and the mood are upon him. Then once more the great weariness, the utter disillusion descends and the music wears itself away less into silence, as it seems, than into blankness.

Yet of one thing, as only repetitions of the symphony could prove, Sibelius is not disillusioned—of workmanship. His spirit may be weary, nervous, sardonic, but his mind still keeps an ordering energy, a keen and artful precision. When no more than fragments of motives seem as wisps upon his tonal loom, yet do they gradually weave themselves into strands and web. Impatient as are the moods of scherzo and finale, they never shatter or distort a clear symphonic design, that sometimes, as in the rondo-like repetitions of the last movement, seem ironically to court formality. Painfully born indeed are the songful melodies of the first and the third divisions, painfully they struggle into sustained voice and deep mood, but never, in the pseudo-military jargon of the hour, does Sibelius lose sight of the objectives he has chosen for them and ultimately attains. Measure after measure of stark and strident counterpoint stands in the symphony, yet it has clear method apart from the jangling polyphony that Strauss, for jangle's sake, has distributed over pages, for example, of "Ein Heldenleben." The strange collocations of chords are as astute and pungent as Debussy's own; the harsh timbres are acrid because the mood of the music bids them so be; the harmonies are the black shadows and the wan lights upon a grim, almost a ghastly music. Nowhere in the symphony is a note wasted, according to the usual Sibelian terseness. Grant the composer his idiom and procedure and he is as logical with them as Schönberg, and

After all, in the whole course of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio," in the theatre there is no music so dramatic as the overture, "Leonora," No. 3, which never prefaces it, and which nowadays is usually heard as a symphonic and epitomizing intermezzo between the scene in Florestan's cell and the final choruses within the castle court. Wagner, who had no little divination with Beethoven's purposes, is probably right when he affirms that in this overture lies in germ the music-drama the composer intended to fashion. When, however, he had to work his design and fulfil his imaginings in terms of the theatre his clumsiness with them time and again balked him. In more senses than one Beethoven could be dramatist in tones, but he lacked, as "Fidelio"—and still more his Promethean ballet—proves, the useful instincts of the theatre. Often the music of "Fidelio" stifles itself on the stage because the symphonic substance and style seem a dissertation upon the personages and the action, and not an integral part of a dramatic whole. Often Beethoven seems to see his opera as a sublimated and incorporeal drama in tones, while, in fact, actual singing-players must embody it and his music according to the literalness and the limitations of the theatre.

In the overtures that Beethoven wrote to "Fidelio," especially in this "Leonora, No. 3," the most concentrated and eloquent of them all, he escaped these restrictions. Le unhampered tones he could write the music-drama that he perceived and felt. More and more, "Fidelio," the opera, even on German-speaking stages, declines into the lot of a classic to be dutifully exhibited a few times a year and elaborately restudied and reproduced once in a decade or two. Not to it, but to "Leonora, No. 3," do the sons of men go to hear the foreboding preluding that sets atmosphere about the drama, the woful plight of Florestan imprisoned and condemned, the saving trumpets, thrilling from the outer world; the great cry of Leonora, his wife, at these sounds of salvation, the elation that possesses pair and music. Barely fifteen minutes long is the overture; yet from it the listener rises with more sensation of music-drama clear upon ear and imagination than from two hours and a half of "Fidelio" in the opera house. No matter where or when "Leonora, No. 3" is played, in the course of such performance—Mahler used to say—it wiped out much that had gone before and all that came after.

Between his controversial modern and his eloquent classic, Dr. Muck set Saint-Saëns's concerto and Miss Nash, the pianist. Report says that she gained access to the Symphony Concerts in Boston by the merit which all and sundry found in her playing of the piece in Cambridge last winter. If so, she must have played it in far more glinting, fanciful, elegant fashion than she did yesterday. A natural nervousness besets newcomers to the Symphony Concerts, even when they are as old stagers as Mr. Amato or Mr. Ysaye; Miss Nash, relatively at her beginnings, had also to contend with the unwonted tension upon platform and in parquet. To what degree these circumstances affected her, only she may truly say; but certain it is that she gave no more than a drily accurate, eminently painstaking, technically competent version of the music; whereas it asks of the pianist an exceeding fluency and lightness of finger, an incessant elegance and sparkle of style, a lively sense of rhythm, pervading brightness of tonal color, pretty flights of fancy or scholarship, an exhilarating and changeful grace. Saint-Saëns himself must in his prime have played the concerto to perfection, since even in his old age he could summon these qualities; while the music is a very epitome of his composing mind and manner in such pieces. Unfortunately, Miss Nash was no more than glib and literal with it, under which treatment it merely wizened and teetered like an old beau. A kindly audience generously applauded her—quite as though it were sitting in the complaisance of Cambridge and not the exaction of Boston.

H. T. P.

Transcript (continued)

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

MUSIC, EPISODES AND OMENS OF THE FUTURE

New Angles of an Obscure Situation—Sibelius's Controverted Symphony of Weariness and Disillusion in All Things but Workmanship—The Singular and Significant Music—Beethoven and His Drama of "Leonora"—A Pianist, Miss Nash, Who Falls Short of Her Piece

How far the incidents of yesterday afternoon assure the continuance of the Symphony Orchestra and its concerts in Boston and elsewhere remains to be seen. Much depends upon the fate of the resignation that Dr. Muck has naturally laid in Mr. Higginson's hands; much also depends upon the continuance of the attacks upon him from the miscellaneous public as distinguished from the public frequenting the concerts. The mood of the subscribers of Fridays was sufficiently established — as programme-books say—by applause when Dr. Muck first came to his place that in volume, duration, sincerity and general participance, has not been heard at a concert in Symphony Hall since it first opened its doors—applause, moreover, renewed at every opportunity that the concert afforded. The subscribers of Saturdays have turn to indicate their temper this evening; while next Thursday and Saturday, another important element in the public of the orchestra—the subscribers to its concerts in New York—will take like opportunity.

"Ovations," however, are only "ovations," and it is not the listening companies of Symphony or of Carnegie Hall that have chiefly fomented the present agitation. If continuance of it compels Mr. Higginson to accept Dr. Muck's resignation, or the conductor, in spite of the loyalty to the orchestra, his calling, the public and his engagements, that brought him to his post yesterday, persists in his departure, the end of the Symphony Orchestra and the Symphony Concerts is probably at hand. In some fashion or other, they would be put through to the end of the season and existing engagements; then finally abandoned to leave behind them such regrets as time and tranquillity may bring. It was a Mr. Higginson looking five years older than he did a week ago, who addressed the audience at the beginning of the concert. The unkindest detractor could not have seen without sympathy the effect upon him of the circumstances now threatening the work to which he has given [illegible] loyalties, the fortune, the ambition of

Traveler — Nov. 3, 1917 —

Frances Nash Soloist with Boston Symphony

Those who attended yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, and the hall was crowded, are not likely soon to forget its unusual features. The program was:

Sibelius, symphony No. 4; Saint-Saens, piano concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Frances Nash, pianist); Beethoven, Leonore overture No. 3.

An announcement slipped into the program book was to the effect that the national anthem would be played as the last number of the concert, an echo of the recent incident in connection with the Providence concert. Then as everybody was seated and the concert was about to begin, Maj. Higginson came on the stage, the audience rising as one in tribute, and announced that he had asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the national anthem and they had acquiesced. He then startled the audience with the announcement Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation that the orchestra be free of any embarrassment his presence may cause. Maj. Higginson, after declaring such resignation would be a disaster, said he would give it careful consideration.

When Dr. Muck came to the conductor's stand he was given an ovation and was enthusiastically applauded at every opportunity throughout the concert. His superb reading of the great Sibelius work was followed by several recalls. Sibelius is always Sibelius and never more so than in this work. There is no mistaking his writing. There are no reminders of this or that composer in his compositions. While in this symphony he takes radical steps there is never any question of his sincerity and ability to clearly express his thoughts.

Herald, Nov. 7, 1917

DR. MUCK RECEIVES AN OVATION IN WASHINGTON

Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra as It Plays "The Star Spangled Banner."

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6—The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra by official and social Washington this afternoon was only a little less gratifying than in former seasons, while the applause greeting the much-discussed leader, Dr. Karl Muck, as he stepped on the stage at the National Theatre, was long and earnest, with special emphasis from the music-loving gallery.

Although not named on the program, "The Star Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Dr. Muck leading and the entire orchestra standing.

This was followed by Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4. The program closed with the overture to "Tannhauser," which received the applause of the entire house.

Only one box remained empty and less than 50 seats, although some former patrons of the orchestra have relinquished their tickets since the controversy arose over the inclusion of the national anthem in the performance.

The diplomatic attendance was smaller than usual, which, with the absence from town of the President and Mrs. Wilson, robbed the opening performance of some of its interest. The Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Gen. and Mrs. Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box holders.

Advertiser — Nov. 7, 1917 —

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS GIVEN OVATION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, its director, were given an ovation when they appeared today at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

POST NOV. 3, 1917.

TRANSCRIPT (continued)

TRAVELER — NOV. 3, 1917 —

SIBELIUS' FOURTH BY SYMPHONY

Fantastical Work Impresses—Miss Nash Soloist

Post 11/3

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Sibelius' fourth symphony; Saint-Saens' G-minor piano concerto, played by Miss Frances Nash; Beethoven's third Leonore overture, and, in response to public request, the national anthem, which the orchestra rose to its feet to play, while the audience also stood.

SIBELIUS' ORIGINALITY

The originality and imagination shown by Sibelius in his fourth symphony makes that work the more impressive with each repeated hearing. He is extremely personal, subjective, in his mood. There is no thought of an audience. Most men write music as they write diaries—with the thought that some day people will read or listen. They may write for the few or for the many, with sincerity and impulse, or with craft and pretence, but they nevertheless write for the reader or hearer. Sibelius in this symphony has written only for himself.

It has been said that Sibelius was a Northman who could only talk of the whale, the seal and the aurora-borealis. It is not so in this symphony. True, it is nature music. The spirit of forests, the living silence of great solitudes, is in it. But the expression of these moods, and of the grim despair of a lonely human who shakes his fist at the skies, is of a sort which will command the attention and arouse the feelings of any modern man in any country when once he feels the music.

TRANSCRIPT NOV. 7, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

MUSIC, EPISODES AND OMENS OF THE FUTURE

New Angles of an Obscure Situation—Sibelius's Controverted Symphony of Weariness and Disillusion in All Things but Workmanship—The Singular and Significant Music—Beethoven and His Drama of "Leonora"—A Pianist, Miss Nash, Who Falls Short of Her Piece

HOW far the incidents of yesterday afternoon assure the continuance of the Symphony Orchestra and its concerts in Boston and elsewhere remains to be seen. Much depends upon the fate of the resignation that Dr. Muck has naturally laid in Mr. Higginson's hands; much also depends upon the continuance of the attacks upon him from the miscellaneous public as distinguished from the public frequenting the concerts. The mood of the subscribers of Fridays was sufficiently established — as programme-books say—by applause when Dr. Muck first came to his place that in volume, duration, sincerity and general participance, has not been heard at a concert in Symphony Hall since it first opened its doors—applause, moreover, renewed at every opportunity that the concert afforded. The subscribers of Saturdays have turn to indicate their temper this evening; while next Thursday and Saturday, another important element in the public of the orchestra—the subscribers to its concerts in New York—will take like opportunity.

"Ovations," however, are only "ovations," and it is not the listening companies of Symphony or of Carnegie Hall that have chiefly fomented the present agitation. If continuance of it compels Mr. Higginson to accept Dr. Muck's resignation, or i the conductor, in spite of the loyalty to the orchestra, his calling, the public and his engagements, that brought him to his post yesterday, persists in his departure, the end of the Symphony Orchestra and the Symphony Concerts is probably at hand. In some fashion or other, they would be put through to the end of the season and existing engagements; then finally abandoned to leave behind them such regrets as time and tranquillity may bring. It was a Mr. Higginson looking five years older than he did a week ago, who addressed the audience at the beginning of the concert. The unkindest detractor could not have seen without sympathy the effect upon him of the circumstances now threatening the work to which he has given the loyalties, the fortune, the ambition of

As chance would have it, the programme put together by Dr. Muck for the concert was less interesting than any of the three that since the middle of October have preceded it. Sibelius's symphony in A minor began it—exacting and to many ears unrewarding music. Saint-Saëns's fifty-year-old concerto in G minor followed and the playing of Miss Nash, the pianist of the day, little glamored a fading piece. Only Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture ministered to the general pleasure, and upon that was to follow the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," for once an "event" and not a custom. The anthem sounded rather better than it usually does for the quick pace and the sharp rhythm at which Dr. Muck led it; while the standing audience comported itself much as audiences do when the piece is ceremonially played in other houses of public entertainment. That is to say, the major part of the company listened decorously; a few conversed; a few mistakenly sang; more were busily putting on their hats; while some watched the demeanor of their neighbors. Perhaps every one concerned welcomed this end to the tension of a concert in which it was hard to be a good listener to music as music and in which the wonder was the high pitch of accomplishment at which conductor and orchestra held themselves. From the first note to the last their mettle praised them.

It is almost possible to believe that had Schönberg's "Five Pieces," once notorious, been played at three pairs of Symphony Concerts in four years, the audience would have become kindly disposed to them. Sibelius's symphony in A minor—with the well-won prestige of the composer to buttress it—seemed hardly less strange of tonal speech, baffling to musical understanding, and barren to awaiting imagination when it was first played "at these concerts" in the autumn of 1913. Now, become familiar through repetition, it interested hearers, stirred hearty plaudits, clarified itself to the listening mind and prompted responsive feeling. Since the war has withheld Sibelius's most recent music from all ears but those of his own Finlanders, it is impossible to say whether he has continued to write in the singular idiom of this symphony of 1911-1912. In any case, as it now sounds, the manner of the music suits the matter it would bear. For, if ever there was a symphony of weary mood and weary voice, it is this tone-poem of disillusion. Out of broken phrases, chance fragments as they often seem, the motives of the darksome first movement, struggle into being, weave themselves, almost painfully, into a tonal fabric in motion. Developed, they lower along as heavy clouds, slowly driven by ominous winds, traverse a stormy sky. A rift and a halt bares the warmer, softer melody, like pale, cold sunshine, but it has hardly expanded, before the clouds, now in as broken progressions as at the beginning, shut thick and fast upon it. Blackly, abruptly, as with falling night, the movement ends.

The scherzo is of like nervous, struggling, broken tonal speech. From one motive Sibelius turns impatiently to another; shivers both into fragments of chords, streaks the music with fantastical instrumental color as in a mood of bitter and sardonic gayety; sets himself to sustained measures quick with rhythm, and then almost as suddenly smothers them away. The slow movement renews in a fashion the spirit and the method of the first. Out of broken interchanges among the orchestral choirs and even between solo instruments within them, out of splintered fragments of motives against ghostly or gloomy harmonic backgrounds, a grave, grim melody almost wrings itself into tonal existence and tonal continuity, deepens, strides, mounts at last to austere proclamation, only to wear itself away in a death-rattle of instrumental murmurs, as though the effort to speak highly, nobly, had cost it life. Similarly, the finale returns to the fantastic procedure and imagery, the sardonic mood of the scherzo. The motives more quickly define and repeat themselves, only to be torn asunder, tossed hither and thither in a wilderness of keys, out-darting into stranger and stranger harmonies—a music that seems almost to mock itself. Next, for a time the composer steadies his spirit and his tones. They goad themselves into a climax as though he would frantically achieve it while the will and the mood are upon him. Then once more the great weariness, the utter disillusion descends and the music wears itself away less into silence, as it seems, than into blankness.

Yet of one thing, as only repetitions of the symphony could prove, Sibelius is not disillusioned—of workmanship. His spirit may be weary, nervous, sardonic, but his mind still keeps an ordering energy, a keen and artful precision. When no more than fragments of motives seem as wisps upon his tonal loom, yet do they gradually weave themselves into strands and web. Impatient as are the moods of scherzo and finale, they never shatter or distort a clear symphonic design, that sometimes, as in the rondo-like repetitions of the last movement, seem ironically to court formality. Painfully born indeed are the songful melodies of the first and the third divisions, painfully they struggle into sustained voice and deep mood, but never, in the pseudo-military jargon of the hour, does Sibelius lose sight of the objectives he has chosen for them and ultimately attains. Measure after measure of stark and strident counterpoint stands in the symphony, yet it has clear method apart from the jangling polyphony that Strauss, for jangle's sake, has distributed over pages, for example, of "Ein Heldenleben." The strange collocations of chords are as astute and pungent as Debussy's own; the harsh timbres are acrid because the mood of the music bids them so be; the harmonies are the black shadows and the wan lights upon a grim, almost a ghastly music. Nowhere in the symphony is a note wasted, according to the usual Sibelian terseness. Grant the composer his idiom and procedure and he is as logical with them as Schönberg, and

After all, in the whole course of Beethoven's opera, "Fidelio," in the theatre there is no music so dramatic as the overture, "Leonora," No. 3, which never prefaces it, and which nowadays is usually heard as a symphonic and epitomizing intermezzo between the scene in Florestan's cell and the final choruses within the castle court. Wagner, who had no little divination with Beethoven's purposes, is probably right when he affirms that in this overture lies in germ the music-drama the composer intended to fashion. When, however, he had to work his design and fulfil his imaginings in terms of the theatre his clumsiness with them time and again balked him. In more senses than one Beethoven could be dramatist in tones, but he lacked, as "Fidelio"—and still more his Promethean ballet—proves, the useful instincts of the theatre. Often the music of "Fidelio" stifles itself on the stage because the symphonic substance and style seem a dissertation upon the personages and the action, and not an integral part of a dramatic whole. Often Beethoven seems to see his opera as a sublimated and incorporeal drama in tones, while, in fact, actual singing-players must embody it and his music according to the literalness and the limitations of the theatre.

In the overtures that Beethoven wrote to "Fidelio," especially in this "Leonora, No. 3," the most concentrated and eloquent of them all, he escaped these restrictions. In unhampered tones he could write the music-drama that he perceived and felt. More and more, "Fidelio," the opera, even on German-speaking stages, declines into the lot of a classic to be dutifully exhibited a few times a year and elaborately restudied and reproduced once in a decade or two. Not to it, but to "Leonora, No. 3," do the sons of men go to hear the foreboding preluding that sets atmosphere about the drama, the woful plight of Florestan imprisoned and condemned, the saving trumpets, thrilling from the outer world; the great cry of Leonora, his wife, at these sounds of salvation, the elation that possesses pair and music. Barely fifteen minutes long is the overture; yet from it the listener rises with more sensation of music-drama clear upon ear and imagination than from two hours and a half of "Fidelio" in the opera house. No matter where or when "Leonora, No. 3" is played, in the course of such performance—Mahler used to say—it wiped out much that had gone before and all that came after.

Between his controversial modern and his eloquent classic, Dr. Muck set Saint-Saëns's concerto and Miss Nash, the pianist. Report says that she gained access to the Symphony Concerts in Boston by the merit which all and sundry found in her playing of the piece in Cambridge last winter. If so, she must have played it in far more glinting, fanciful, elegant fashion than she did yesterday. A natural nervousness besets newcomers to the Symphony Concerts, even when they are as old stagers as Mr. Amato or Mr. Ysaye; Miss Nash, relatively at her beginnings, had also to contend with the unwonted tension upon platform and in parquet. To what degree these circumstances affected her, only she may truly say; but certain it is that she gave no more than a drily accurate, eminently painstaking, technically competent version of the music; whereas it asks of the pianist an exceeding fluency and lightness of finger, an incessant elegance and sparkle of style, a lively sense of rhythm, pervading brightness of tonal color, pretty flights of fancy or scholarship, an exhilarating and changeful grace. Saint-Saëns himself must in his prime have played the concerto to perfection, since even in his old age he could summon these qualities; while the music is a very epitome of his composing mind and manner in such pieces. Unfortunately, Miss Nash was no more than glib and literal with it, under which treatment it merely wizened and teetered like an old beau. A kindly audience generously applauded her—quite as though it were sitting in the complaisance of Cambridge and not the exaction of Boston.

H. T. P.

Frances Nash Soloist with Boston Symphony

Those who attended yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, and the hall was crowded, are not likely soon to forget its unusual features. The program was:

Sibelius, symphony No. 4; Saint-Saens, piano concerto in G minor, No. 2 (Frances Nash, pianist); Beethoven, Leonore overture No. 3.

An announcement slipped into the program book was to the effect that the national anthem would be played as the last number of the concert, an echo of the recent incident in connection with the Providence concert. Then as everybody was seated and the concert was about to begin, Maj. Higginson came on the stage, the audience rising as one in tribute, and announced that he had asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the national anthem and they had acquiesced. He then startled the audience with the announcement Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation that the orchestra be free of any embarrassment his presence may cause. Maj. Higginson, after declaring such resignation would be a disaster, said he would give it careful consideration.

When Dr. Muck came to the conductor's stand he was given an ovation and was enthusiastically applauded at every opportunity throughout the concert. His superb reading of the great Sibelius work was followed by several recalls. Sibelius is always Sibelius and never more so than in this work. There is no mistaking his writing. There are no reminders of this or that composer in his compositions. While in this symphony he takes radical steps there is never any question of his sincerity and ability to clearly express his thoughts.

HERALD, NOV. 7, 1917

DR. MUCK RECEIVES AN OVATION IN WASHINGTON

Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra as It Plays "The Star Spangled Banner."

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6—The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra by official and social Washington this afternoon was only a little less gratifying than in former seasons, while the applause greeting the much-discussed leader, Dr. Karl Muck, as he stepped on the stage at the National Theatre, was long and earnest, with special emphasis from the music-loving gallery.

Although not named on the program, "The Star Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Dr. Muck leading and the entire orchestra standing.

This was followed by Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4. The program closed with the overture to "Tannhauser," which received the applause of the entire house.

Only one box remained empty and less than 50 seats, although some former patrons of the orchestra have relinquished their tickets since the controversy arose over the inclusion of the national anthem in the performance.

The diplomatic attendance was smaller than usual, which, with the absence from town of the President and Mrs. Wilson, robbed the opening performance of some of its interest. The Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Gen. and Mrs. Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box holders.

ADVERTISER — NOV. 7, 1917 —

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS GIVEN OVATION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, its director, were given an ovation when they appeared today at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

m REPUBLICAN

lress: Springfield,

OCT 25 191

SMITH COLLEGE CONCERT

Boston Symphony Gives First of the Series—A. W. Locke of Smith Music Faculty Appears as Soloist

The Boston symphony orchestra was heard last evening at Northampton in a splendid concert, which opened the Smith college series. This excellent series has proved so attractive that the John M. Greene hall long ago proved too small, and this year another fine series of Wednesday afternoon concerts has been arranged; for which tickets may be had, the price of season tickets being remarkably low. The afternoon series will open with a joint recital by the pianist Mlle Novaes and the violinist Eddy Brown, the 31st, and will include recitals by Louise Homer, Marcella Craft and Josef Hofmann, besides a trio concert and concert by the trio de Lutece, flute, 'cello and harp.

Last night Dr Muck gave a fine program, which offered several features of unusual interest, notably the beautiful Variations Symphonique for piano and orchestra, by Cesar Franck, in which according to commendable precedent a member of the musical faculty of the college appeared as soloist. This was Arthur W. Locke, with whose distinguished ability as a pianist the Northampton public had already been made familiar. His playing of the variations was masterly, with a beautiful tone and a breadth and dignity of style worthy of this fine work by a composer of singular originality and power. No part of the concert dwells more pleasantly in the memory.

In place of the Beethoven C minor symphony which had originally been announced, the orchestra opened the concert with Tschaikowsky's F minor symphony, No 4—no equivalent, of course, in musical worth, yet heard with all the more pleasure because less frequently heard. The warmest admirer of Tschaikowsky can hardly put it on a level with the two on which his fame as a symphonist mainly rests, the fifth and the sixth, yet it represents well some sides of his genius, as well as certain defects such as a lack of that inward rather than formal unity which gives weight and sustained interest; even the most beautiful passages have a somewhat haphazard character. It is interesting throughout, but the totality is not so impressive as it should be from such wealth and freshness of musical expression.

Very different in kind and style is the Berlioz "King Lear" overture which followed, and was heard for the first time at these concerts. How much Lear or how much Shakespeare there may be in it is perhaps a question on which opinion may differ, but at all events the belated discovery of Shakespeare inspired Berlioz to a notable work, in the tragic accents of which we may probably find more of his own emotional crisis than of the drama. It is in no way a sensational work, nor does it illustrate his orchestral virtuosity in its full development, but it has both the restraint and the bigness of style for which this composer was remarkable. Not a first-rate melodist, and with very little contrapuntal science, he none the less had both genuine musical inspiration and an intellectual grasp of architectonic which served him where counterpoint might have led so highly cerebral a composer astray. His overture has thin spots, but it is distinguished in style and shows everywhere the hand of a great master. It was admirably played, and on the whole was the most interesting part of the orchestral program, which closed with a fine performance of Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal."

...WESTFIELD

STAR

Baltimore, Md. , 1917

OCT 13 1917

58

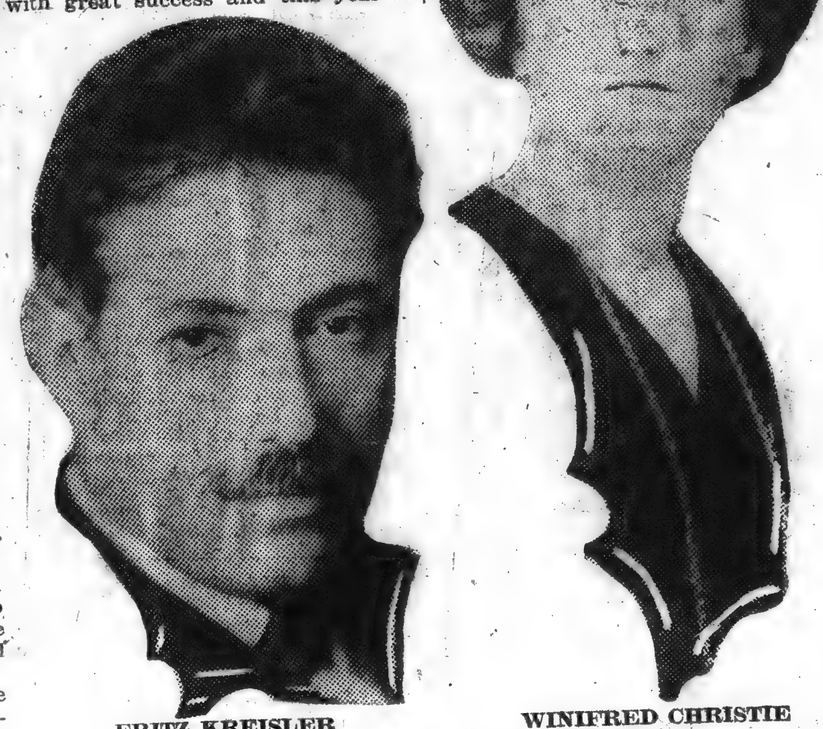
Winifred Christie and Fritz Kreisler

This year, as has been the case for many years past, the Boston Symphony concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings. The dates are November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck, despite all prophecies to the contrary, will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring and, in addition to her appearance in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Baltimore during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago, when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal the orchestra acclaimed her a very remarkable artist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with great success and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.



FRITZ KREISLER WINIFRED CHRISTIE

Artists who will appear with the Boston Symphony.

- GLOBE, NOV. 7, 1917 -

MUCK TWICE LEADS IN PLAYING ANTHEM

Audiences in Washington Applaud Symphony

Special Dispatch to the Globe

WASHINGTON, Nov 6—Dr Karl Muck director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted wide condemnation, appeared at two concerts, this afternoon and tonight, at the National Theatre. The audiences included many Army and Navy officers in uniform.

Dr Muck led the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts. After he finished, the audiences applauded. Dr Muck bowed acknowledgment.

Many persons who had tickets for the concert gave them up at the last minute, and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr Muck.

Mrs Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather because of the inability of the holders to attend.

BULK OF MUSIC LOVERS WANT MUCK RETAINED

Maj Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has received letters and other communications indicating a decided public sentiment in favor of the retention of Dr Karl Muck as conductor of the orchestra.

Although the Baltimore police forbade the Symphony Orchestra to give a concert in that city tonight, Maj Higginson received word yesterday that the concert in Philadelphia Monday night was a success, and that no evidence of official displeasure has come from any city except Baltimore.

Concerts are scheduled for Brooklyn and New York Thursday and Friday and Dr Muck will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" as the closing number of each program.

Maj Higginson yesterday refused to discuss the Baltimore incident.

Asked whether it would mean that Baltimore would hereafter be crossed off the Symphony's tour list or whether money would be refunded to ticket buyers, Mr Higginson stated that he had given these questions no thought, as a matter of fairness to musicians he said, the money will probably be refunded, but the hall will not be paid for.

Maj Higginson said that about 90 per cent of the people who have written him about the matter favor the retention of Dr Muck.

"One man," said Mr Higginson, "wrote in from Marblehead urging that I drop all foreigners and have a purely American organization, American leader and play American music. I know of only one American Symphony. But most of these people appear to be satisfied with the present state of things and do not want the orchestra dismissed."

DR MUCK DENOUNCED AT MEETING IN BALTIMORE

BALTIMORE, Md, Nov 6—Ex-Gov Warfield denounced Dr Karl Muck to a large gathering at a patriotic meeting in the Lyric this afternoon. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to have taken place tomorrow night. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinney ordered the removal of the posters announcing the concert.

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the National Army band from Camp Meade the audience sang a number of patriotic songs.

Gov Warfield read this letter from James Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore, secondly, it is the National song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Capt Hughes, representing Gen Kuhn and Gen Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his Generals of the Army here and the Army over there.

He concluded: "Muck's reference to 'The Star Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave," and he said he hoped that "Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck." Deafening applause greeted the remarks.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Dr Muck for having refused to play the National anthem.

MUCK'S STAND COWARDLY SAYS WALTER DAMAOSCH

Saying that he has been misquoted and that his attitude in regard to Dr Muck, and the "Star Spangled Banner," is misunderstood, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society of New York, has issued a new statement in regard to the matter, in which he attacks Dr Muck's stand as "cowardly."

He says in part: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the National hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding this war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could easily be met by having an assistant conductor lead in the 'Star Spangled Banner.'"

TRANSCRIPT

- NOV. 6, 1917 -

SYMPHONY IS SHUT OUT

Baltimore Grand Jury Fears Appearance of Dr. Muck Might Lead to Grave Disorder—A Disappointment to Music Lovers

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not give a concert at the Lyric Theatre here tomorrow evening, as had been planned. Threats of violence have been made and accordingly the grand jury has notified the police commissioners that the appearance of Dr. Muck and his orchestra might lead to grave disorder and even bloodshed; and permission for the concert has been denied by the commissioners.

Former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a patriotic meeting for tomorrow, declares that even if the orchestra had come to Baltimore, Dr. Muck would not have been allowed to conduct; and that he will never again be allowed to conduct a concert here. Mr. Warfield said there was no objection to the concert, if somebody else conducted.

According to Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, music lovers in the city are greatly disappointed at the decision. "It should not be lost sight of," says Mr. Randolph, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a strictly reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

Post. NOV. 7, 1917.

RECALL MUCK AT WASHINGTON

Secretary Lane in Box at Concert

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the German director, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre.

The encore was given at the close of the programme, the audience refusing to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed. Such an encore at dignified orchestra concerts is said never to have occurred before in Washington.

Secretary of the Interior Lane and party occupied the White House box, the President being in Princeton.

- TRAVELER, NOV. 6, 1917 -

CARUSO AND THE FLAG

Caruso has returned to the United States and has brought his art with him. He has no compunctions concerning the national anthem. He will be glad to sing it. He will not feel that it is almost an insult if he is asked to sing it.

Meanwhile the cause of musical art is bound to triumph in this country, regardless of the position of distinguished musicians on the subject of patriotism plus art. Maj. Higginson has explained that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence and that, if blame should fall on anybody, it should fall on the major. But everybody knows Maj. Higginson as one whose devotion to patriotism was long ago demonstrated and whose allegiance to the cause of music is as practical as that of any other citizen of the United States.

The whole matter may well be dropped. Misunderstandings have been smoothed out, and the star spangled banner still waves. Moreover, Caruso is ready to wave it whenever requested to do so. What more could earnest patriots desire?

m REPUBLICAN

lress: Springfield,

OCT 25 191

SMITH COLLEGE CONCERT

Boston Symphony Gives First of the Series—A. W. Locke of Smith Music Faculty Appears as Soloist

The Boston symphony orchestra was heard last evening at Northampton in a splendid concert, which opened the Smith college series. This excellent series has proved so attractive that the John M. Greene hall long ago proved too small, and this year another fine series of Wednesday afternoon concerts has been arranged, for which tickets may be had, the price of season tickets being remarkably low. The afternoon series will open with a joint recital by the pianist Mlle Novaes and the violinist Eddy Brown, the 31st, and will include recitals by Louise Homer, Marcella Craft and Josef Hofmann, besides a trio concert and concert by the trio de Lutece, flute, 'cello and harp.

Last night Dr Muck gave a fine program, which offered several features of unusual interest, notably the beautiful Variations Symphonique for piano and orchestra, by Cesar Franck, in which according to commendable precedent a member of the musical faculty of the college appeared as soloist. This was Arthur W. Locke, with whose distinguished ability as a pianist the Northampton public had already been made familiar. His playing of the variations was masterly, with a beautiful tone and a breadth and dignity of style worthy of this fine work by a composer of singular originality and power. No part of the concert dwells more pleasantly in the memory.

In place of the Beethoven C minor symphony which had originally been announced, the orchestra opened the concert with Tschaikowsky's F minor symphony, No 4—no equivalent, of course, in musical worth, yet heard with all the more pleasure because less frequently heard. The warmest admirer of Tschaikowsky can hardly put it on a level with the two on which his fame as a symphonist mainly rests, the fifth and the sixth, yet it represents well some sides of his genius, as well as certain defects such as a lack of that inward rather than formal unity which gives weight and sustained interest; even the most beautiful passages have a somewhat haphazard character. It is interesting throughout, but the totality is not so impressive as it should be from such wealth and freshness of musical expression.

Very different in kind and style is the Berlioz "King Lear" overture which followed, and was heard for the first time at these concerts. How much Lear or how much Shakespeare there may be in it is perhaps a question on which opinion may differ, but at all events the belated discovery of Shakespeare inspired Berlioz to a notable work, in the tragic accents of which we may probably find more of his own emotional crisis than of the drama. It is in no way a sensational work, nor does it illustrate his orchestral virtuosity in its full development, but it has both the restraint and the bigness of style for which this composer was remarkable. Not a first-rate melodist, and with very little contrapuntal science, he none the less had both genuine musical inspiration and an intellectual grasp of architectonic which served him where counterpoint might have led so highly cerebral a composer astray. His overture has thin spots, but it is distinguished in style and shows everywhere the hand of a great master. It was admirably played, and on the whole was the most interesting part of the orchestral program, which closed with a fine performance of Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal."

STAR

Baltimore, Md. , 1917

OCT 13 1917

58

Winifred Christie and Fritz Kreisler

This year, as has been the case for many years past, the Boston Symphony concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings. The dates are November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. For the first time in its history the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens a season without any changes in its personnel. During the last two or three years the changes have been very few, but this year the membership is exactly the same as last. So far, at least, the draft has not affected any of the younger members, although the chances are several will be summoned in the second call, whenever that comes. Dr. Muck, despite all prophecies to the contrary, will be the conductor, as no other arrangement had ever been contemplated by Mr. Higginson. This will be Dr. Muck's sixth consecutive season as conductor of the orchestra and his eighth season in America.

The plans for the concerts call for three soloists. There will be no soloist at the first concert, but at the second Madame Melba will appear. Madame Melba has recently arrived in this country from her home in Australia primarily to appear with the Chicago Grand Opera Company on its early fall tour and for a limited number of times in Chicago. She will probably remain in America, as her custom has been on her recent visits, until the early spring and, in addition to her appearance in opera and to her several appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she will give a limited number of concerts.

Fritz Kreisler's only appearance with the orchestra in Baltimore during the coming winter will be at the January concert.

The soloist at the February concert will be Winifred Christie, the Scotch pianist. Miss Christie was one of the very pleasing surprises that the Boston Symphony had two seasons ago, when she was engaged to play at one of the smaller concerts of the orchestra in New England. After her rehearsal the orchestra acclaimed her a very remarkable artist. Last year she played in Boston with the orchestra with great success and this year to her have been allotted appearances at several of the most important concerts.

FRITZ KREISLER

WINIFRED CHRISTIE

Artists who will appear with the Boston Symphony.

- GLOBE, NOV. 7, 1917 -

MUCK TWICE LEADS IN PLAYING ANTHEM

Audiences in Washington Applaud Symphony

Special Dispatch to the Globe

WASHINGTON, Nov 6—Dr Karl Muck director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted wide condemnation, appeared at two concerts, this afternoon and tonight, at the National Theatre. The audiences included many Army and Navy officers in uniform.

Dr Muck led the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts. After he finished, the audiences applauded. Dr Muck bowed acknowledgment.

Many persons who had tickets for the concert gave them up at the last minute, and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr Muck.

Mrs Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather because of the inability of the holders to attend.

BULK OF MUSIC LOVERS WANT MUCK RETAINED

Maj Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has received letters and other communications indicating a decided public sentiment in favor of the retention of Dr Karl Muck as conductor of the orchestra.

Although the Baltimore police forbade the Symphony Orchestra to give a concert in that city tonight, Maj Higginson received word yesterday that the concert in Philadelphia Monday night was a success, and that no evidence of official displeasure has come from any city except Baltimore.

Concerts are scheduled for Brooklyn and New York Thursday and Friday and Dr Muck will lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" as the closing number of each program.

Maj Higginson yesterday refused to discuss the Baltimore incident.

Asked whether it would mean that Baltimore would hereafter be crossed off the Symphony's tour list or whether money would be refunded to ticket buyers, Mr Higginson stated that he had given these questions no thought, as a matter of fairness to music lovers he said, the money will probably be refunded, but the hall will not be paid for.

Maj Higginson said that about 90 percent of the people who have written him about the matter favor the retention of Dr Muck.

"One man," said Mr Higginson, "wrote in from Marblehead urging that I drop all foreigners and have a purely American organization, American leader and play American music. I know of only one American Symphony. But most of these people appear to be satisfied with the present state of things and do not want the orchestra dismissed."

DR MUCK DENOUNCED AT MEETING IN BALTIMORE

BALTIMORE, Md, Nov 6—Ex-Gov Warfield denounced Dr Karl Muck to a large gathering at a patriotic meeting in the Lyric this afternoon. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to have taken place tomorrow night. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinney ordered the removal of the posters announcing the concert.

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the National Army band from Camp Meade the audience sang a number of patriotic songs.

Gov Warfield read this letter from James Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore, secondly, it is the National song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Capt Hughes, representing Gen Kuhn and Gen Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his Generals of the Army here and the Army over there.

He concluded: "Muck's reference to 'The Star Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave," and he said he hoped that "Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck." Deafening applause greeted the remarks.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Dr Muck for having refused to play the National anthem.

MUCK'S STAND COWARDLY SAYS WALTER DAMAOSCH

Saying that he has been misquoted and that his attitude in regard to Dr Muck, and the "Star Spangled Banner," is misunderstood, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society of New York, has issued a new statement in regard to the matter, in which he attacks Dr Muck's stand as "cowardly."

He says in part: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the National hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding this war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could easily be met by having an assistant conductor lead in the 'Star Spangled

---

TRANSCRIPT
• NOV. 6, 1917 -

SYMPHONY IS SHUT OUT

Baltimore Grand Jury Fears Appearance of Dr. Muck Might Lead to Grave Disorder—A Disappointment to Music Lovers

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not give a concert at the Lyric Theatre here tomorrow evening, as had been planned. Threats of violence have been made and accordingly the grand jury has notified the police commissioners that the appearance of Dr. Muck and his orchestra might lead to grave disorder and even bloodshed; and permission for the concert has been denied by the commissioners.

Former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a patriotic meeting for tomorrow, declares that even if the orchestra had come to Baltimore, Dr. Muck would not have been allowed to conduct; and that he will never again be allowed to conduct a concert here. Mr. Warfield said there was no objection to the concert, if somebody else conducted.

According to Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, music lovers in the city are greatly disappointed at the decision. "It should not be lost sight of," says Mr. Randolph, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a strictly reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

Post. Nov. 7, 1917.

RECALL MUCK AT WASHINGTON

Secretary Lane in Box at Concert

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the German director, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre.

The encore was given at the close of the programme, the audience refusing to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed. Such an encore at dignified orchestra concerts is said never to have occurred before in Washington.

Secretary of the Interior Lane and party occupied the White House box, the President being in Princeton.

- TRAVELER, NOV. 6, 1917 -

CARUSO AND THE FLAG

Caruso has returned to the United States and has brought his art with him. He has no compunctions concerning the national anthem. He will be glad to sing it. He will not feel that it is almost an insult if he is asked to sing it.

Meanwhile the cause of musical art is bound to triumph in this country, regardless of the position of distinguished musicians on the subject of patriotism plus art. Maj. Higginson has explained that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence and that, if blame should fall on anybody, it should fall on the major. But everybody knows Maj. Higginson as one whose devotion to patriotism was long ago demonstrated and whose allegiance to the cause of music is as practical as that of any other citizen of the United States.

The whole matter may well be dropped. Misunderstandings have been smoothed out, and the star spangled banner still waves. Moreover, Caruso is ready to wave it whenever requested to do so. What more could earnest patriots desire?

59

Post. Nov. 7, 1917

HISS NAME OF MUCK AT BALTIMORE

Cardinal Gibbons Sends Flag Tribute to Mass Meet

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck," shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was voicing the protest of the vast gathering against Dr. Karl Muck's reported action in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" as part of the programme of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

Little available space was left when former Governor Warfield marched to the centre of the stage and began his denunciation of Dr. Muck, whose name he did not once mention.

ARMY BAND PLAYS

From the audience came hisses whenever any reference was made to Dr. Muck, and from one of the boxes a woman shouted: "Kill such a man."

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders, with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the national army band from Camp Meade, Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson called upon the audience to sing "America." This was followed by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The former Governor, during his address, read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the cardinal said he was sorry he could not be present, but was with the gathernig in spirit, and paid a glowing tribute to the American flag.

Cardinal Gibbon's Letter

In his letter the cardinal said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the Star Spangled Banner, but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

For several minutes when Governor Warfield stood before the assemblage the cheering was deafening, and throughout his address he was repeatedly interrupted by applause.

Refund Ticket Money

Before the meeting Manager Kinsey, of the Lyric, directed one of his men to remove the posters advertising the Symphony concert. Mr. Kinsey said he had talked with representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and they had agreed, since the police prohibition of the concert, which was to have been held tomorrow night, to refund the money of those who had purchased boxes and seats.

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals, and of the army here and the army over there.

American
Nov. 6, 1917

SYMPHONY IS CANCELLED BY BALTIMORE

oy and gloom both for the Boston mphony Orchestra and its troubles er "The Star Spangled Banner."

Baltimore bars Dr. Karl Muck and the orchestra.

But Philadelphia extends them the "glad musical hand."

Dispatches today showed that the popular wind was blowing both hot and cold for the celebrated Boston makers of sweet sounds.

The orchestra, with Dr. Muck conducting, opened the concert season at the Philadelphia Academy of Music and received a cordial reception. But Baltimore dispatches said the Grand Jury there had notified the police that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, and should not be permitted and that the Boston Symphony concert for Wenesday night should be called off.

The Baltimore Police Commission notified the manager of the Lyric Theatre, where the concert was to be held, that the concert would not be permitted.

The Grand Jury action resulted from threats of mob violence. Former Governor Edwin Warfield, of Revolutionary ancestry, was one of the leaders in denouncing Dr. Muck. He said after the concert was cancelled:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra, and we would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted."

Baltimore music lovers are not all pleased at the police commission's action. Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore said that cancellation of the concert was nothing short of a catastrophe, and that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Monitor
Nov. 6, 1917.

MUCK BALTIMORE CONCERT OMITTED

Boston Symphony Orchestra Cancels Maryland Engagement—Otherwise Continues Its Tour

The concert which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, was scheduled to give in Baltimore on Wednesday night has been canceled, according to word given out this morning at Symphony Hall. The orchestra is to appear today in Washington and is to go from there to New York, where it will appear on Thursday. Symphony Hall officials verify press reports from Philadelphia that the orchestra and Dr. Muck won the applause of the public of that city at the concert they gave on Monday night.

BALTIMORE, Md.—The police commissioners of Baltimore on Monday sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theater, forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action was taken at the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been made for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State are to denounce the reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and that possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the grand jury to former Governor Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, gave the first of the season's series of concerts at the Academy of Music on Monday night, playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of the program. Both Dr. Muck and the orchestra were cordially received.

Herald
Nov. 8, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY ONCE MORE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

In the controversy over the Symphony orchestra the main point is being missed. The fact that Dr. Muck has consented to play "The Star Spangled Banner" is of little consequence; neither is the wish of the audience to have him continue as director of much weight. A very small part of the public can attend these concerts but the great outside public has feelings as well as the favored few.

The point is that our men have died and are dying in increasing numbers by the hands of Dr. Muck's countrymen and we are engaged in a life and death struggle with them. It is admitted that Dr. Muck is heart and soul with Germany; that is he wishes our destruction. The Germans refused to let the art of the great cathedral of Rheims weigh against the life of a single German soldier; shall we, for the sake of art, permit an institution in our midst to give not only aid and comfort but honor and applause to one who would delight in the overthrow of all we hold dear?

It is not necessary that he should actually plot against us. He is a German who occupied a high position in Germany. He is now in America with a Swiss passport. These facts are sure to bring him under suspicion. The public which is suffering by the war naturally resents what is taking place in Symphony Hall and the feelings of the public at this time are entitled to respect. MARSHALL B. FANNING.

Herald Nov. 8, 1917

CALLS DR. MUCK PROPAGANDIST

Providence Journal Charges Him with Spreading Vicious German Doctrines.

"ACTIVE HEAD IN BOSTON"

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 7—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

"In May, 1915, when Dr. Muck was in California, he was approached by one Frederick Greisheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly the Fatherland, on its feet.

Obtained $300.

"Greisheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of the Fatherland for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and secured $300 from him in order to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Greisheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested.

"The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in San Quentin penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by the Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes. Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help the Fatherland came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement over Viereck's own signature, that, if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany, the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by replies to questions sent out by the Fatherland, had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the righteousness of Germany's cause.

"Active Head in Boston."

"Ever since the United States entered the war, Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Speyer and other men of the same type.

"By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it apparent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character."

59

Post. Nov. 7, 1917

HISS NAME OF MUCK AT BALTIMORE

Cardinal Gibbons Sends Flag Tribute to Mass Meet

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck," shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was voicing the protest of the vast gathering against Dr. Karl Muck's reported action in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" as part of the programme of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

Little available space was left when former Governor Warfield marched to the centre of the stage and began his denunciation of Dr. Muck, whose name he did not once mention.

ARMY BAND PLAYS

From the audience came hisses whenever any reference was made to Dr. Muck, and from one of the boxes a woman shouted: "Kill such a man."

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders, with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the national army band from Camp Meade, Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson called upon the audience to sing "America." This was followed by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The former Governor, during his address, read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the cardinal said he was sorry he could not be present, but was with the gathernig in spirit, and paid a glowing tribute to the American flag.

Cardinal Gibbon's Letter

In his letter the cardinal said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the Star Spangled Banner, but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

For several minutes when Governor Warfield stood before the assemblage the cheering was deafening, and throughout his address he was repeatedly interrupted by applause.

Refund Ticket Money

Before the meeting Manager Kinsey, of the Lyric, directed one of his men to remove the posters advertising the Symphony concert. Mr. Kinsey said he had talked with representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and they had agreed, since the police prohibition of the concert, which was to have been held tomorrow night, to refund the money of those who had purchased boxes and seats.

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals, and of the army here and the army over there.

American
Nov. 6, 1917

SYMPHONY IS CANCELLED BY BALTIMORE

oy and gloom both for the Boston mphony Orchestra and its troubles er "The Star Spangled Banner."

Baltimore bars Dr. Karl Muck and the orchestra.

But Philadelphia extends them the "glad musical hand."

Dispatches today showed that the popular wind was blowing both hot and cold for the celebrated Boston makers of sweet sounds.

The orchestra, with Dr. Muck conducting, opened the concert season at the Philadelphia Academy of Music and received a cordial reception. But Baltimore dispatches said the Grand Jury there had notified the police that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, and should not be permitted and that the Boston Symphony concert for Wenesday night should be called off.

The Baltimore Police Commission notified the manager of the Lyric Theatre, where the concert was to be held, that the concert would not be permitted.

The Grand Jury action resulted from threats of mob violence. Former Governor Edwin Warfield, of Revolutionary ancestry, was one of the leaders in denouncing Dr. Muck. He said after the concert was cancelled:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra, and we would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted."

Baltimore music lovers are not all pleased at the police commission's action. Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore said that cancellation of the concert was nothing short of a catastrophe, and that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Monitor
Nov. 6, 1917.

MUCK BALTIMORE CONCERT OMITTED

Boston Symphony Orchestra Cancels Maryland Engagement—Otherwise Continues Its Tour

The concert which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, was scheduled to give in Baltimore on Wednesday night has been canceled, according to word given out this morning at Symphony Hall. The orchestra is to appear today in Washington and is to go from there to New York, where it will appear on Thursday. Symphony Hall officials verify press reports from Philadelphia that the orchestra and Dr. Muck won the applause of the public of that city at the concert they gave on Monday night.

BALTIMORE, Md.—The police commissioners of Baltimore on Monday sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theater, forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action was taken at the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been made for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State are to denounce the reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and that possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the grand jury to former Governor Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, gave the first of the season's series of concerts at the Academy of Music on Monday night, playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the end of the program. Both Dr. Muck and the orchestra were cordially received.

Herald
Nov. 8, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY ONCE MORE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

In the controversy over the Symphony orchestra the main point is being missed. The fact that Dr. Muck has consented to play "The Star Spangled Banner" is of little consequence; neither is the wish of the audience to have him continue as director of much weight. A very small part of the public can attend these concerts but the great outside public has feelings as well as the favored few.

The point is that our men have died and are dying in increasing numbers by the hands of Dr. Muck's countrymen and we are engaged in a life and death struggle with them. It is admitted that Dr. Muck is heart and soul with Germany; that is he wishes our destruction. The Germans refused to let the art of the great cathedral of Rheims weigh against the life of a single German soldier; shall we, for the sake of art, permit an institution in our midst to give not only aid and comfort but honor and applause to one who would delight in the overthrow of all we hold dear?

It is not necessary that he should actually plot against us. He is a German who occupied a high position in Germany. He is now in America with a Swiss passport. These facts are sure to bring him under suspicion. The public which is suffering by the war naturally resents what is taking place in Symphony Hall and the feelings of the public at this time are entitled to respect. MARSHALL B. FANNING.

Herald Nov. 8, 1917

CALLS DR. MUCK PROPAGANDIST

Providence Journal Charges Him with Spreading Vicious German Doctrines.

"ACTIVE HEAD IN BOSTON"

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 7—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

"In May, 1915, when Dr. Muck was in California, he was approached by one Frederick Greisheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly the Fatherland, on its feet.

Obtained $300.

"Greisheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of the Fatherland for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and secured $300 from him in order to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Greisheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested.

"The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in San Quentin penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by the Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes. Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help the Fatherland came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement over Viereck's own signature, that, if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany, the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by replies to questions sent out by the Fatherland, had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the righteousness of Germany's cause.

"Active Head in Boston."

"Ever since the United States entered the war, Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Speyer and other men of the same type.

"By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it apparent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character."

n EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y. 191

INTERNE DR. MUCK IF HE WON'T PLAY ANTHEM—T.R.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt had this to say today on the atcion of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to play the national anthem:

"I think that if he will not play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' he ought to be interned. I am shocked at the musicians who apologize for him. This is a time when on man has a business to be in any work which is not subordinated to patriotism. If the Boston Symphoy Orchestra will not play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' it ought to be shut up."

n EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUSIC ON THE FIRING LINE.

Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Boston Symphony concerts becomes a Brooklyn issue because those concerts open here next Friday night and the trustees of the Institute will meet on Thursday to decide, among others things, whether the national anthem shall be played.

To explain Dr. Muck, he is, as Walter Damrosch puts it, "a loyal citizen of Prussia," and as such it must give him pain to hear the national anthem of one of Prussia's many enemies, let alone participating in it. An American conductor in Germany if he were ordered to lead "Deutschland ueber Alles" would, if he were a good American, throw down his baton and leave the country. But the question is broader than Dr. Muck's personal feelings or the question of good taste, upon which Mr. Higginson, the proprietor of the orchestra, supports Dr. Muck's refusal. It is a question of the feeling of the audiences who listen and who have a right to insist upon standing reverently during the playing of their national anthem at any public assemblage where there are musicians to play it. That is a proper expression of patriotic feeling from which no audience should be debarred because the leader of the orchestra happens to be a Prussian whose feelings would be hurt. For Prussians who are so sensitive as that the place is at home, where their ears will be in no danger of being tortured by American music.

Fortunately there is an easy way out of the difficulty, by which the feelings of the audiences and those of Dr. Muck may be respected. That is for the anthem to be played under the leadership of an assistant director, or of some musician whose nerves would not be unduly rasped by it. As grace is said before meat at public dinners, so this anthem could be played before the concert begins. Then, when the audience has shown its devotion to its country and its flag, Dr. Muck can come forward and lead a program as German as the audience would endure. His audience will probably be polite. There has not yet been shown any hostility toward German music in this country, although there is today a report that German operas will be barred from the Metropolitan this winter—on the ground of the language rather than of music, no doubt—and in San Francisco the Park Department has refused to allow the playing of Danish music on the Danish national holiday, because Denmark has fed Germany! That is an extreme expression of a natural feeling and it should show Dr. Muck and Mr. Higginson what they are "up against." They should consider that attitude and yield gracefully. "The Star Spangled Banner" American audiences will have, Muck or no Muck. We can do without him, or without his orchestra if need be, rather than to allow our national anthem to be slighted.

m EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

e.....

DR. MUCK WON'T PLAY ANTHEM HERE? BORO MAY INSIST ON IT

Boston Symphony Conductor's Refusal to Play Patriotic Air Stirs Institute.

TRUSTEES NON-COMMITTAL

(Special to The Eagle.)

Boston, Mass., November 2—The Boston Symphony Orchestera is not to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Brooklyn, according to present plans. Dr. Karl Muck, the director, does not believe it has a place in an artistic program and has said that a request to play it would be embarrassing—almost an insult. He specifically stated that it would not be played in New York and it is inferred that this will hold true as to Brooklyn and other places the orchestra will visit next week. The orchestra will be in Brooklyn on November 9.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said in regard to the indignation in Providence over the refusal to play the anthem there, that no regular subscriber had demanded it. He had the same point to make regarding the New York concerts. So if regular Brooklyn patrons of the symphony make a demand for the anthem there may be a change.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, still adheres to his position that he will disband the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its program, meaning that it will end its career rather than play the anthem. He agrees with Muck that the anthem has no place in an artistic program.

Yet Geraldine Farrar, who is under the management of Mr. Ellis, sang the anthem in Haverhill last night, by request of the Mayor. It was her all-German program at the symphony's pension fund concert, last Sunday, that started local agitation against the orchestra. A flag has appeared above Symphony Hall, in response to criticism.

It is now suggested that the symphony play the anthem under the direction of an assistant conductor, and not Dr. Karl Muck of the Berlin Royal Opera. Perhaps that will be the ultimate solution of the question. The Providence Journal demands that Muck be interned as a "dangerous alien enemy."

Mayor Curley, returning to Boston today, was expected to indicate whether he would revoke the license of Symphony Hall, if the anthem continued to be omitted at local concerts.

On the road next week, the orchestra is likely to experience all sorts of difficulties, unless its attitude changes.

The following is the itinerary: November 5, Philadelphia; November 6, Washington; November 7, Baltimore; November 8, New York; November 9, Brooklyn; November 10, New York. The feature of the Brooklyn program will be Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique."

Institute Trustees Silent.

Officials and trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to play here next Friday, are anxious to avoid committing themselves on the "Star-Spangled Banner" question today. To postpone action as long as they can, and if possible stave it off altogether, appeared to be the desire of all those reached today by The Eagle.

Director Charles D. Atkins of the Institute said that thus far no specific request to have the national anthem included in the Friday program had reached the Institute.

"There has been thus far no indication of any withdrawal of support from the series of concerts; in fact, the subscription list this year is larger than it was last," he said. Mr. Atkins felt that it was unfortunate that the issue had been raised, and declared that it was not on the list of regular business scheduled to come before the trustees meeting the night before the concert.

"There is no truer patriot than Major Henry L. Higginson. His unqualified support of Dr. Muck should calm those who profess to see in Dr. Muck's disinclination to include patriotic airs in his programs, a slur at this country," he continued, and added:

"In view of the present conditions, it would seem that no great jar to the art sense would follow an occasional playing of "America" at the concerts, in deference to the American sentiment of patriotism. Yet patriotic music is not symphony music and it is not particularly appropriate on a symphony program."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, returned to Cold Spring on the Hudson today after declining to discuss the matter last night in Brooklyn.

H. J. Morse, one of the vice presidents of the board of trustees refused to make any advance statement of his attitude or of his probable action at the trustees meeting if the question is put to a [illegible] board, said that he had no complaint against Dr. Muck's attitude.

"I hope there will be no trouble," he said. "It is wholly unnecessary. In Providence there were no objectors in the audience, and those who did object were not subscribers."

Former Mayor of Brooklyn David A. Boody said that he did not expect much difficulty.

"I haven't thought of it, haven't heard of it, and can't tell what will be done about it," he said.

The Rev. Dr. Charles C. Albertson, another trustee of the institute, said:

"I can't tell. I have had no conversation with anyone about it. And I shouldn't like to express my opinion now."

There are fifty trustees of the Institute altogether, most of whom will gather in the Academy of Music the night before the concert to act on the routine business of the organization and to take up any new business that may come up. That at least one of the fifty will bring up the advisability of requesting the Boston orchestra to play the National anthem is considered likely, though there are men who will prefer that the situation be skipped over without action either way.

rom EAGLE
ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

ate.....

REFUSES TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Founder Says It Violates Artistic Taste.

Boston, Mass., November 1—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Major Henry L. Higginson is founder and patron, was the center of a storm because of the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, to play the National anthem.

Several women requested Dr. Muck to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence on Tuesday night. After his refusal to do so, the Rhode Island Council of Defense passed resolutions condemning the conductor. They also requested the police commissioner to refuse permission to Dr. Muck to conduct any future concerts here.

Dr. Muck says that it would be a "violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs," and he asks "Why will people be so silly?"

Major Higginson declared that the orchestra would be disbanded and Symphony Hall sold, if public clamor for the orchestra to play the National anthem continued. He said that the anthem was out of place in purely harmonic programs, with no place in a program of artistic symphony music.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem," said the Major.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

NOV 2 1917

GERMAN OPERAS WILL BE BARRED AT METROPOLITAN

None to Be Given This Year Lest It Comfort Enemy, It Is Unofficially Announced.

While the list of operas announced for the coming season at the Metropolitan includes the works of German composers, it was said unofficially to-day German opera will not be sung there this winter.

The directors have decided, it is understood, that German opera here might have a bad political effect and be used in Germany as evidence there is divided sentiment in the United States on the wa. The only official announcement made at the Metropolitan, however, was this to-day:

"When the repertoire of the opening week of the opera season is announced the public may rest assured it will contain nothing to cause the least offense to the most patriotic American."

The directors were induced by patriotic motives to avoid anything that might be taken at home or abroad as an indication of sympathy for the enemy cause. It was explained today, unofficially, that the list of operas, announced before the season, is always tentative, and for that reason German works were in the repertoire. Almost invariably departures are made from the programme.

The decision putting German opera under the ban is said to have no connection with the controversy over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to allow "The Star-Spangled Banner" to be played at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In fact, it is said to have been made some time ago.

In the current issue of the Chronicle, the dollar-an-issue publication, Mrs. William Jay, the only woman director of the Philharmonic Society, has a signed article opposing the presentation of German operas.

"Given, as they must be, in the German language," she says, "and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and bloodshed, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of the greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering."

The stand taken by Dr. Muck is expected to be threshed out in New York next Thursday at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, which is arranging to present the Boston organization at the Acaedmy of Music Nov. 9. It is understood today certain trustees will demand that the national anthem be played at the end of the concert.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, said to-day in regard to the stand of Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston conductor, that, while he thought it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct our national anthem now, at the same time he considered Dr. Muck's reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"The issue in the case of the Boston orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it," said Mr. Damrosch.

N.Y. EVENING WORLD
NOV. 2, 1917

60

...N'T PUT NATIONAL AIR ON PROGRAMME, SAYS MUCK

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said to-day that the orchestra would not include The Star Spangled Banner in its New York concert repertoire next week.

"Our programme for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes," he said. "The American national anthem is not on the programme and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be as it has always been to give the music loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best manner possible. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The orchestra goes on tour next week, and Dr. Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit. In a previous statement he said it would be almost an "insult, embarrassing and impertinent" to insist that the anthem be played. To-day to one inquirer he said: "It's not my affair."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge to-day from the position announced yesterday—that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. A mammoth flag, however, has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

AMERICA IS TO GET

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

NOV 1917

No German Opera At Metropolitan; Dr. Muck Resigns

By Sylvester Rawling.

THE die is cast. There will be no German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House this winter. Announcement of the fact was authorized by the directors yesterday. Their decision was not unexpected. Subscribers had anticipated that with the first publication of a list of Americans killed in the trenches in France, operas sung in the German language would come to an end. It is wise that the decision is made before the opening of the season. Possible unpleasantness thereby is avoided. The public will not concern itself with the provisions of existing contracts between German singers and the management. That matter will be settled privately. The season will start a week from Monday with the slate clean.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has resigned. Protests against his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the concerts of the society is the cause. He yielded to the pressure of public opinion and played the national anthem at the afternoon concert in Boston yesterday. Then he tendered his resignation. Major Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, who has spent more than a million dollars in bringing it to its present high state of efficiency, withholds action. There is no finer orchestra in America, probably none in the world. Dr. Muck ranks with the greatest of living conductors. He is a Prussian, devoted to his country. His contention has been that the American national anthem had no place in programmes devoted to the exposition of musical art in its highest form. The orchestra's first pair of concerts for the season here are scheduled for next Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. Before then, probably, a conclusion will be reached.

EVENING WORLD

s: New York City.

NOV 3 1917.

HIGGINSON UPHOLDS MUCK ON 'STAR SPANGLED BANNER'

Founder of Orchestra Believes National Anthem Does Not Belong in Concert Music.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 3.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day declared that he alone is responsible for the conduct of the orchestra. Dr. Muck, the leader, he declared, cannot be blamed for failure to include the National Anthem in its concerts.

"Dr. Muck has conducted himself as a gentleman throughout," Major Higginson declared. "When I asked him to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' he did so. He never refused. My private opinion is that 'The Star Spangled Banner' has not a place in concert music."

Major Higginson declined to say what action he will take on the resignation of Dr. Muck.

rom TELEGRAM

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 2 - 1

GERMAN OPERAS BARRED AT THE METROPOLITAN

Enemy Artists Also Cut from Caste at Famous Playhouse.

MME. GADSKI AND OTTO GORITZ REMOVED.

While no announcement of the fact has been made, it has become known that the directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company have decided to drop all German operas from this season's repertoire. This decision was reached quietly, it is reported, some time ago, before the present controversy stirred up by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to allow "The Star Spangled Banner" to be played at the conclusion of the orchestra's concerts, became known. Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the directors, has refused to make any statement regarding the dropping of German opera from the repertoire.

Several months ago it was announced that the usual German operas would be sung at the opera house this season, although the Chicago Opera Company had announced its decision to give no operas emanating from the nation with which we are at war. It was stated at the opera house, however, that such early announcement of repertoire is merely tentative—that it can be, and usually is, departed from.

The Metropolitan directors have also dispensed with the services of two of their most popular singers whose pro-Germanism has been openly and frequently avowed. Mme. Gadski is one of them and Otto Goritz the other. The former's contract expired last spring and it was not renewed by the directors of the organization. Mr. Goritz's contract has some time to run, but he will not be heard at the Opera House this winter. Both of these singers were instructed with important rôles in the Wagner operas and other German compositions in the Metropolitan repertoire.

The decision to drop the German operas this winter was said to be political in its nature, the directors fearing that, if it were included, it might give the impression abroad that there is divided sentiment on the war in this country and thus encourage our enemies to hold out after they otherwise would abandon the conflict.

n EVENING WORLD

ress: New York City.

NOV 2 19

MUCK PLAYS 'STAR-SPANGLED BANNER' AND THEN RESIGNS

Director of Boston Orchestra Reported to Have Refused to Render Anthem.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately.

The resignation came as a surprise, because Major Henry L. Higginson, who has spent almost $1,000,000 in developing the orchestra, had spoken strongly in defense of Dr. Muck who, it was reported, had refused to play the national anthem, and had indicated that he would back the German conductor with all his resources.

It became apparent, however, that in the proposed tour to be made by the orchestra many halls might be closed to it for patriotic reasons.

In the middle of the concert, following one of the numbers, Major Higginson appeared on the stage and announced that "The Star-Spangled Banner" would be played as the closing number on the programme. Then he announced that Dr. Muck had handed in his resignation. There was no demonstration.

Higginson caused astonishment, however, when he declared Muck never had refused to play the National Anthem. He said he would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster.

The orchestra is booked to play at the Academy of Music Nov. 9, and there have been threats to cancel the concert unless "The Star Spangled Banner" were on the programme. Dr. Muck calls the anthem "inartistic."

LET MUCK PLAY ANTHEM OR GO TO JAIL, SAYS T. R.

"If Boston Orchestra Won't Render 'Star Spangled Banner,' It Ought To Shut Up."

Theodore Roosevelt declared to-day that Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," ought not to be at large in this country. The statement was made when the Colonel was visiting Public School No. 45 in the Bronx. The school orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and some one suggested that the children might teach Dr. Muck, who is a German, how to play it.

"I am shocked, simply shocked," Col. Roosevelt said, "that any one can apologize for him on the ground that the music is not an artistic, but a patriotic work. No man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play 'The Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City.

NOV 2- 1917

Supporters of Dr. Karl Muck, who refuses to play "The Star Spangled Banner," advance the flimsy excuse that John Philip Sousa would feel similarly embarrassed if he happened to be in Berlin at the present moment and some one asked him to play "Die Wacht am Rhein." Lieutenant John Philip Sousa is here doing duty at a great personal financial sacrifice and not in Berlin drawing down big money, as Dr. Muck is doing here.

om EVENING WORLD

ldress: New York City.

BALTIMORE MOB THREATENS MUCK IF HE LEADS BAND

Ex-Gov. Warfield Declares He Will Head the Hostile Demonstration.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—If Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra attempt to give the scheduled concert here next Wednesday night, there will be riot instead of a symphony, unless the situation changes in the mean time.

Ex-Gov. Warfield, who notified the Police Board that there would be serious trouble if an attempt was made to give the concert, said to-day he would be willing to lead a mob in breaking it up.

He has arranged for a patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon.

Major Higginson Absolves Muck From All Blame.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, leader, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star Spangled Banner" from their programmes, was issued to-day by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, who assumed responsibility for the omission of the national air from the Providence concert. Major Higginson asserted that Dr. Muck had never refused to play the national anthem.

EVENING WORLD

: New York City.

NOV 3 1917

CARUSO GLAD TO SING "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

Artistic Enough for Him, He Declares; Kisses Hand to American Soil on Return.

Happy at again setting foot on Manhattan Island, Enrico Caruso took off his hat to the biggest American flag in sight, knelt and kissed his hand to the soil. He has returned from forty grand opera appearances in Brazil. He is in good health, but says he is a bit "fatter."

"Why, I will sing 'The Star Spangled Banner'; it's good enough music for me," he said, when told of the Dr. Karl Muck incident.

"Ah, art!" he replied, when told why Dr. Muck is alleged to have refused. "It ought to be good enough for those who make a living in this country."

The situation in Italy was of great interest to Caruso. He asked for the latest news and seemed deeply grieved to hear of the continuous retreat of the armies.

"Well, if they need me, I'll go!" he said, and those hearing him knew he spoke from the depth of his heart. He is forty-four years old though, and as yet men of his age have not been called to the colors.

Upon reaching New York Caruso was greeted and embraced by Gatti-Casazza, Antonio Scotti, Andreas de Segurola, Salvatore Fuciti, Otto Weil and Miss Jacoletti, sister of his brother's wife.

Caruso stated to interviewers that in South America he also sang at twelve concerts, given for American, Italian, British, French and Belgian relief organizations.

"I am glad to say that more than $100,000 was realized," he said. He then added that his other fond remembrance of this tour in South America is the gold medal presented him by the American colony in Buenos Ayres.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

NOV 3 - 1917

ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ANTHEM IN CARNEGIE HALL

Boston Musicians Now Include "The Star Spangled Banner" in Their Repertoire.

DR. MUCK'S ATTITUDE IS CALLED "COWARDLY."

Full preparations had been made in New York to deal with Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in view of the refusal of the German conductor to play "The Star Spangled Banner" before the report of his resignation was received from Boston. This, together with the assurance that the orchestra will in future include the national anthem in its repertoire, is believed to have solved the problem.

George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses, had announced that he would have revoked the concert license of Carnegie Hall if the national anthem was not played here by the orchestra. Lamar Hardy, Corporation Counsel, intimated that the license might be revoked before the concert unless satisfactory assurances were given.

Calls Attitude "Cowardly."

Members of the Brooklyn Institute, especially those who are regular subscribers for the series of concerts arranged under Institute auspices, are much interested in the controversy. Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, said:—

"In view of present conditions it would seem that no great jar to the art sense would follow an occasional playing of 'America' at the concerts in deference to the American sentiment of patriotism. Yet patriotic music is not symphony music, and it is not particularly appropriate on a symphony programme."

Walter Damrosch has assailed Dr. Muck's attitude as "cowardly," in holding that the Symphony Orchestra, not being "a ballroom orchestra or a military band, should not be expected to play the national anthem," and making that his defence. Mr. Damrosch believes that if Dr. Muck had been frank and said that as a loyal subject of Germany he could not play the anthem at this time, fair minded men would have accepted his attitude.

Blames Dr. Muck.

Mr. Damrosch urges that the national anthem is the symbol of the American people's patriotism and loyalty, especially at a time when the nation is at war, and blames Dr. Muck for ignoring that fact.

Mr. Damrosch regrets that the feeling caused by incidents like these should engender in turn enmity against the German composers of the past, citing the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter as an example.

Grossly Insulted.

(From the Kansas City Star.)

"I was grossly insulted the other day," confessed Tobe Sagg of Goshkosay," confessed Tobe Sagg of Goshkosay," confessed Tobe Sagg of Goshkosay

The Dr. Muck Controversy Renewed wi

Controversy Over German Leader Boston Symphony Orchestra Steadily Grows

Dr. Muck Declared to Be Active in Germany's Behalf—Agitation Brings to the Front California Court Case.

This Stirred up Baltimore

THE country-wide discussion of the Boston Symphony orchestra and its leader seems to have reached the whirlwind stage in Baltimore. The American of that city publishes the above cartoon under the caption, "Time to Do a Little Muck Raking."

Although Dr. Muck, the gifted leader of the Symphony orchestra, has added "The Star Spangled Banner" to the repertoire of his famous organization, the controversy over him which began in this city at the conclusion of the orchestra's benefit concert, one afternoon recently, is showing no abatement.

Baltimore, the home of the man who composed the national anthem, became aroused by the fact that the orchestra did not play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence after patriotic organizations had requested that it be played. A mass meeting was called and threats were made that a concert by the orchestra would be prevented by force if an attempt were made to give one.

Thereupon the municipal authorities issued orders that the concert be not given. Washington welcomed the doctor and the orchestra and applauded both when the national anthem was played.

Meanwhile, however, those who insist that Dr. Muck is a pro-German in his sympathies and activities have not been idle. The Providence Journal has insisted that his pro-Germanism is something more than sympathetically inactive, and the earnest efforts of Maj. Henry L. Higginson to convince patriotic citizens everywhere that there is no taint of un-Americanism in the orchestra or its leader have apparently failed.

Today the Providence Journal attacks Dr. Muck as a pro-German propagandist, producing evidence in support of its charge, and in a letter to the Boston Herald and Journal, published today, Marshall B. Fanning considers the subject from a new standpoint—that of one who cannot ignore the fact that our boys are being slain by German soldiers and that Dr. Muck is heart and soul in sympathy with Germany.

That the issue has reached a stage where it may be of vast importance to the future of the Symphony orchestra and to those who have for years appreciated it as the finest organization of its kind on the continent is now admitted by lovers of music who have watched the progress of the controversy with keen regret.

Dr. Muck has already tendered his resignation to Maj. Higginson, but the latter, who has made the Symphony orchestra possible, has thus far failed to accept it and does not wish to accept it. What the future will bring about can only be conjectured.

In a letter published by the Boston Herald and Journal of this morning, Marshall B. Fanning brings out the point that the general American public, as well as those who attend Symphony concerts, are interested in the Dr. Muck discussion. Following is the letter in full:

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

In the controversy over the Symphony Orchestra the main point is being missed. The fact that Dr. Muck has consented to play "The Star Spangled Banner" is of little consequence; neither is the wish of the audience to have him continue as director of much weight. A very small part of the public can attend these concerts, but the great outside public has feelings as well as the favored few.

The point is that our men have died and are dying in increasing numbers by the hands of Dr. Muck's countrymen and we are engaged in a life and death struggle with them. It is admitted that Dr. Muck is heart and soul with Germany; that is, he wishes our destruction. The Germans refused to let the art of the great cathedral at Rheims weigh against the life of a single German soldier; shall we, for the sake of art, permit an institution in our midst to give not only aid and comfort, but honor and applause to one who would delight in the overthrow of all we hold dear?

(Continued on Page Five, Column 4.)

Traveler Nov 8

(Continued from Page One.)

It is not necessary that he should actually plot against us. He is a German who occupied a high position in Germany. He is now in America with a Swiss passport. These facts are sure to bring him under suspicion. The public which is suffering by the war naturally resents what is taking place in Symphony Hall and the feelings of the public at this time are entitled to respect.

MARSHALL B. FANNING.

Boston, Nov. 6.

The charge that Dr. Muck is a German propagandist appears in the first two columns of the first page of the Providence Journal of today. This is a fac-simile of the Journal's statement:

Muck's Own Testimony Convicts Him as German Propagandist

Musician, Now Posing as Martyred Artist, Branded by His Statement in San Francisco Court.

Concert Conductor, in Prosecuting Bogus Collector for "The Fatherland," Who Is Sent to Prison, Testifies He Gave Defendant $300 Intended to Aid Publication and Had Made Many Other Gifts for Like Purposes.

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

In May, 1915, when Dr. Muck was in California, he was approached by one Frederick Greisheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly, the Fatherland, on its feet.

Greisheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of the Fatherland for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and secured $300 from him in order to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Greisheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested.

The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in San Quentin penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by the Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes. Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help the Fatherland came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement over Viereck's own signature, that, if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany, the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by repiies to questions sent out by the Fatherland, had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the righteousness of Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war, Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Speyer and other men of the same type.

By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it apparent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

At the head of the editorial column of the Providence Journal, the following appears:

Every German or Austrian in the United States, unless known by years of association to be absolutely loyal, should be treated as a potential spy. Keep your eyes and ears open. Whenever any suspicious act or disloyal word comes to your notice communicate at once with the Department of Justice, room 301, Federal building, Providence.

We are at war with the most merciless and inhuman nation in the world. Hundreds of thousands of its people in this country want to see America humiliated and beaten to her knees, and they are doing, and will do, everything in their power to bring this about.

Take nothing for granted. Energy and alertness in this direction may save the life of your son, your husband or your brother.

Praises Traveler's Stand.

The Traveler this noon received the following letter which seems pertinent to a renewal of the discussion about Dr. Muck:

To the Editor of the Traveler:

Will you permit me, in this time of controversy over the Symphony Orchestra concerts, to compliment the Traveler and its efficient and refined musical critic.

I refer to the splendid independence of the account of a recent Symphony concert in which an American home artist, who once refused to stand when the national anthem was played and who is an adept in several languages, sang nothing but a German program.

I wish to praise the courage of your newspaper in publishing such a just criticism.

May the man who wrote it have courage to do still better things in these terrible days of international war. The sooner the authorities curb Prussianism in all directions, the better for our country.

P. J. CONROY, M. D.

Everett, Nov. 7.

The Traveler has tried to reach Dr. Muck today with the following telegram:

"Have you any statement to make in reply to charges of German propaganda on your part in Providence Journal of today? Columns Boston Traveler open to you for any reply."

The Other Side.

(Springfield Republican.)

Baltimore has gone into the air unnecessarily over Dr. Muck and "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck is having it played by his orchestra and what is more, he has never refused to have it played. Baltimore gets hysterical, perhaps, because it was the home of Francis Scott Key.

THE BALTIMORE MEETING OF PROTEST AND ITS RESULTS

[Special to the Traveler]

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8—Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony orchestra did not appear here last night. They were scheduled to play at the Lyric Theatre, but on Monday the grand jury realizing the temper of the people of this city, petitioned the board of police commissioners to prevent the concert. The police board acted promptly, and issued an order calling off the concert.

Previous to this action on the part of the police board, however, former Gov. Edwin Warfield had sent out a call for a monster mass meeting to protest against the concert. The meeting was held in the Lyric, Tuesday afternoon. Three thousand fellow-citizens of Francis Scott Key, with a mighty yell which they tried to make loud enough to be heard in Berlin, gave warning to Dr. Muck.

The fact that the grand jury and the police board already had acted to prevent the concert had no effect on the meeting of protest. Citizens of this town, in which the national anthem had its birth, had decided to put themselves on record against Dr. Muck, and they did.

Probably no greater honor was ever done the memory of Key than at that meeting, and there have been few more inspiring tributes to the flag. It is certain that since American entered the war alien enemies, plotting discouragement and destruction in this country, have been given no more pointed warning of the temper of the American people and what it threatens for the seditious.

In a letter which Cardinal Gibbons wrote to Gov. Warfield, saying he was "with the meeting in spirit," the prelate, referring to the stars and stripes ,said that "as with the ark of the old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

After representatives of various patriotic organizations had been called to the platform for impromptu addresses and had cryptically voiced their sentiments, a resolution was offered condemning Dr. Muck, reaffirming the patriotism of American citizens in Baltimore and urging that Dr. Muck be not allowed to lead an orchestra here under and circumstances.

There wasn't a dissenting voice when the question was put. A soldier band from Camp Meade and a squad of men from that nearby cantonment with fixed bayonets added to the enthusiasm.

POST
Washington, D. C.
OCT 22 19

Masterpieces of German Composers To Be Played by Visiting Orchestras

Although the United States is at war with Germany, the classical musical productions of Beethoven, Bach and others will find places on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a series of five concerts in Washington this season, under the direction of Carl Muck.

Mrs. Thomas Evans Greene, Washinton manager for the orchestra, said yesterday that it would be ridiculous to think of excluding the German masters' compositions from the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "To me it would seem unutterably wrong and ethically false to carry our righteous indignation against the German government to the point of excluding the great masters to whom as a people we owe so much."

Mrs. Greene added that she understood that when Walter Damrosch brings his symphony orchestra here this winter he will have a program composed entirely of German compositions.

Not only in Washington will the noted symphony orchestra continue to play music written by German masters, but in New York as well. At the opening concert of the symphony orchestra in New York last Thursday, Walter Damrosch in a brief address concerning the playing of German music, said:

"It is our duty to strike as hard and quickly as we can until the victory we all hope for is achieved. On this point there can be no temporizing. But to exclude the great masters to whom we owe so much, from the program is false."

From REPUBLICAN
Address: Springfie
Date Springfield Mass. NOV 1 - 19

SMITH COLLEGE CONCERT

Boston Symphony Gives First of the Series—A. W. Locke of Smith Music Faculty Appears as Soloist

The Boston symphony orchestra was heard last week Wednesday at Northampton in a splendid concert, which opened the Smith college series. This excellent series has proved so attractive that the John M. Greene hall long ago proved too small, and this year another fine series of Wednesday afternoon concerts has been arranged, for which tickets may be had, the price of season tickets being remarkably low. The afternoon series will open with a joint recital by the pianist Mlle Novaes and the violinist Eddy Brown, the 31st, and will include recitals by Louise Homer, Marcella Craft and Josef Hofmann, besides a trio concert and concert by the trio de Lutece, flute, 'cello and harp.

Wednesday night Dr Muck gave a fine program, which offered several features of unusual interest, notably the beautiful "Variations Symphonique" for piano and orchestra, by Cesar Franck, in which according to commendable precedent a member of the musical faculty of the college appeared as soloist. This was Arthur W. Locke, with whose distinguished ability as a pianist the Northampton public had already been made familiar. His playing of the variations was masterly, with a beautiful tone and a breadth and dignity of style worthy of this fine work by a composer of singular originality and power. No part of the concert dwells more pleasantly in the memory.

In place of the Beethoven C minor symphony which had originally been announced, the orchestra opened the concert with Tschaikowsky's F minor symphony, No 4—no equivalent, of course, in musical worth, yet heard with all the more pleasure because less frequently heard. The warmest admirer of Tschaikowsky can hardly put it on a level with the two on which his fame as a symphonist mainly rests, the fifth and the sixth, yet it represents well some sides of his genius, as well as certain defects such as a lack of that inward rather than formal unity which gives weight and sustained interest; even the most beautiful passages have a somewhat haphazard character. It is interesting throughout, but the totality is not so impressive as it should be from such wealth and freshness of musical expression.

Very different in kind and style is the Berlioz "King Lear" overture which followed, and was heard for the first time at these concerts. How much Lear or how much Shakespeare there may be in it is perhaps a question on which opinion may differ, but at all events the belated discovery of Shakespeare inspired Berlioz to a notable work, in the tragic accents of which we may probably find more of his own emotional crisis than of the drama. It is in no way a sensational work, nor does it illustrate his orchestral virtuosity in its full development, but it has both the restraint and the bigness of style for which this composer was remarkable. Not a first-rate melodist, and with very little contrapuntal science, he none the less had both genuine musical inspiration and an intellectual grasp of architectonic which served him where counterpoint might have led so highly cerebral a composer astray. His overture has thin spots, but it is distinguished in style and shows everywhere the hand of a great master. It was admirably played, and on the whole was the most interesting part of the orchestral program, which closed with a fine performance of Wagner's prelude to 'Parsifal.'

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.

MAY DISBAND ORCHESTRA

Major Higginson, Founder of Boston Symphony, Incensed at Demand for "Star Spangled Banner"

Boston, Nov. 1.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces that the orchestra will be disbanded and Symphony Hall sold if clamor to play "The Star Spangled Banner" continues.

The question was brought to a head by the demands that the anthem be played by the orchestra at a concert in Providence. This followed protests over Geraldine Farrar's all-German program when she was the soloist at the orchestra's pension fund concert in Boston, Sunday.

Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice at Providence, has recommended that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the anthem is played.

Major Higginson said the anthem was out of place in purely symphonic programs. He said the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, a German, when the war started asked the musicians to forget their racial differences. More than a dozen nationalities are represented in the orchestra, Major Higginson said.

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

Freie Presse
ooklyn, N Y
ss:
NOV 1 1917

Dr. Muck kritisirt

Entrüstung in Providence über Weigerung, Nationalhymne zu spielen.

Polizei gegen Symphonie-Kapelle mobil gemacht.

Boston, 1. Nov. Dr. Karl Muck, der Leiter des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, bleibt bei seiner Weigerung, bei den Konzerten der durch die größeren Städte des Landes reisenden Kapelle „The Star Spangled Banner" spielen zu lassen, und der Multimillionär und Kunstmäcen Hy. L. Higginson, der Gründer und große Gönner des Orchesters, billigt, wie er selbst erklärt, seinen Standpunkt.

Der Rhode Island Council of Defence, der aufgebracht darüber ist, daß Dr. Muck beim Eröffnungskonzert des Orchesters in Providence nicht die Nationalhymne spielen ließ, nahm gestern Resolutionen an, in welcher Dr. Muck's Verhalten auf's Schärfste gegeißelt wird und zugleich ersuchte der Verband die Polizei, keine Licenz für weitere Konzerte des Orchesters zu ertheilen, solange Dr. Muck der Leiter bleibt. Thomas Howick, Spezialagent des Bundes-Justizamtes zu Providence, empfahl in einer Eingabe nach Washington, ein Verbot der Symphonie-Konzerte zu erlassen, solange nicht dabei die Nationalhymne gespielt werde. In Providence ist man auch sehr indignirt darüber, daß Geraldine Farrar in dem am vorigen Sonntag gegebenen Konzert neun deutsche Lieder sang und gar keine englischen, französischen oder italienischen Kompositionen. Dr. Muck betont bei seiner Weigerung, daß die Symphonie-Orchester keine Militärkapellen seien und im Rahmen des Symphonieprogramms die Nationalhymne nicht hineinpasse.

m TIMES
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
e

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the series of five concerts given annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn will take place in the Academy of Music Friday evening, at 8:15. It is a matter of satisfaction to everybody concerned that the Brooklyn subscription to the Boston Symphony Concerts is even larger than it was last year, and very few seats are left for single sale. The orchestra returns after its seven months' absence, with exactly the same personnel which appeared here at its concert in March. Dr. Muck, naturally, is the conductor, and no changes whatever have been made in the ranks of the orchestra itself. This is the first time in the history of the orchestra that the same personnel has been carried over from one season to another.

Dr. Muck has arranged for this concert a program essentially popular. The Symphony will be the "Pathetic" of Tschaikowsky—Dr. Muck has never played this work here—in fact, it seldom appears on the regular Symphony program of the Boston Symphon, Orchestra, but every two years is played in Boston at one of the Pension Fund Concerts of the orchestra. It is today, as it has been for twenty years, the most popular symphonic work of modern times.

The works which appear in the second part of the program are the stirring Symphonic Poem, "Finlandia" of Sibelius; the Fifth Symphonic Poem of Liszt, entitled "Prometheus;" and the greatest of all overtures, Beethoven's "Leonora," No. 3. The "Prometheus" of Liszt is the least known of the symphonic poems with which he may be said to have revolutionized modern orchestral music. It has all the qualities peculiar to Liszt and its revival by Dr. Muck has been warmly appreciated by the admirers of the great Hungarian composer.

ENING HERALD
NEW YORKER
New York City.
NOV 1 - 1917

Dr. Muck angegriffen.

Providence, R. J., 1. November. Die hiesige Polizeikommission wurde gestern vom „Rhode Island Council for Defense" aufgefordert, keine Erlaubnis mehr zur Abhaltung von Konzerten des „Boston Symphony Orchesters" während des Krieges zu gewähren, wenn Dr. Muck dirigiere, weil er in „absichtlich beleidigender Weise" bei einem Konzert letzte Nacht, trotz einer Aufforderung, es unterlassen habe, das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen zu lassen.

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.
NOV 1 - 1917

Verteidigt Dr. Muck.

Manager erklärt, „Star Spangled Banner" wurde nicht absichtlich ausgelassen.

(Associated Preß.)

Providence, R. J., 31. Oktober. Das Rhode Island Council of Defense nahm heute Beschlüsse an, welche das Boston Symphonie Orchester und Kapellmeister Dr. Karl Muck wegen „seiner überlegten beleidigenden Haltung" verurteilte, weil er gestern bei einem Konzerte sich weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen zu lassen, wie einige Damen verlangt hatten. Die Polizeikommission wurde ersucht, keine Erlaubnis für weitere Konzerte des Orchesters zu erteilen, wenn sie von Dr. Muck geleitet werden.

Wie verlautet, wird ein eingehender Bericht nach Washington gesandt werden, mit dem Ersuchen, das Orchester nirgends spielen zu lassen, wenn das „Star Spangled Banner" nicht auf das Programm gesetzt wird.

Der Konzert-Manager C. A. Ellis erklärte, das Ersuchen der Damen, welches telegraphisch erfolgte, sei abgelehnt worden, weil sie keine Subskribenten waren. Er sagte, Dr. Muck habe von dem Telegramme keine Kenntnis gehabt.

deutsche Journal
New York City.
NOV 1 - 1917

Boston Symphonie Orchester mag aufgelöst werden.

Musiker kamen der Aufforderung, die Nationalhymne zu spielen, nicht nach.

True translation filed with the Postmaster of New York on November 1, 1917, as required by the act of October 6, 1917.

Boston, 31. Okt. — Major Higgison droht, das Boston Symphonie Orchester aufzulösen, wenn die Empörung wegen der Weigerung, die Hymne „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, anhält. Er erklärte heute, daß er angeordnet hätte, den Verkauf der Einlaßkarten für das Konzert in Providence zu suspendieren, weil er Unruhen befürchtet. Er erklärte, daß die Fortlassung im Programm auf Rücksicht auf die Kunst und die Schwierigkeit des Zusammenstellens der Nummern weit im voraus zurückzuführen sei und daß die deutschen Mitglieder des Orchesters durch die Bundes-Behörden gebilligt worden seien.

Resolutionen wurden vom Nationalen Verteidigungs-Rat von Rhode Island angenommen, in welchen das Symphonie-Orchester verurteilt wurde, wegen seiner Weigerung, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, nachdem in dem Konzerte gestern Abend darum ersucht worden sei. Schritte werden getan, so heißt es, dem Orchester unmöglich zu machen, in anderen Städten zu spielen, es sei denn, die National-Hymne werde in das Programm mitaufgenommen.

POST
Washington, D. C.
NOV 1 1917

IGNORES REQUEST TO PLAY ANTHEM

Boston Orchestra and Dr. Muck Denounced in Providence.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island council of defense. The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Nowick, agent of the Department of Justice, would make a detailed report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its program.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

64

From [illegible] PA.

Address:

NOV 1 - 1917

Date

DR. MUCK IS HURT BY REQUEST TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Orchestra Leader Thinks Insistent Public Demand is "Very Embarrassing."

FEDERAL AGENT PROBING

BOSTON, Nov. 1.

To ask Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" is very embarrassing to his artistic sensibilitoes. The request, he says, is almost insulting. To push it would be destructive to musical art.

This, in brief, is the gist of the director's reply to the query, "Are you going to play the national anthem in New York at your Carnegie Hall concert next Thursday evening?"

Statements from Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, indicated that he was behind Mr. Muck in his refusal to play the patriotic air. He threatened to disband the orchestra if the public was insistent in its demands for the undesired addition to its program, and added that the Symphony Hall, which is losing $15,000 a year, might be sold or closed up if he were pushed by these demands.

DR. MUCK CONDEMNED.

Meanwhile Dr. Muck and the orchestra are being attacked from other quarters. Resolutions condemning him and his organizetion were adopted by the Rhode Island Council of Defence, in which his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" there last night is characterized as a "deliberately insulting attitude." The police commission was called upon by the council to refuse further licenses for concerts there until Dr. Muck changed his attitude or the orchestra changed its leader.

Thomas Howick, special agent for the Department of Justice at Providence, recommended to Washington that the concerts of the orchestra be prohibited unless the anthem is played. This action followed the publication of the fact that Dr. Muck had refused the requests of numerous patrons of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Last Sunday Geraldine Farrar added to the feelings of the people of Providence against pro-German artists by singing nine German songs at the Pension Fund benefit, singing none in English, French or Italian.

MAKES STATEMENT.

In his statement Dr. Muck says:—

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore, it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band, or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"REQUEST EMBARRASSING."

"To ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it. I am following Manager Higginson's wishes."

Local musicians failed to accept Dr. Muck's explanation of his failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" on the grounds that his orchestra numbered too many different nationallites among its membership. They called attention to the fact that the Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera Company's Orchestra all had played the national anthem without fear of international complications.

EVENING NEW YORKER HERALD

: New York City.

NOV 2- 1917

Deutsche Oper in Frage.

Direktoren-Minorität gegen Gebrauch der deutschen Sprache.

Dr. Mucks Standpunkt.

Erklärt seine Position als deutscher Reichsangehöriger.

Die Frage, ob Opern deutscher Meister im Metropolitan Opernhaus in dieser Saison auch in deutscher Sprache aufgeführt werden sollen, wie es von der Majorität der Direktoren des Kunsttempels beschlossen war, stellt sich, wie verlautet, als Hindernis für die Aufstellung des Repertoirs heraus. Eine Minorität der Direktoren ist gegen die deutsche Sprache. Die Saison wird bekanntlich am Montag, den 12. November, mit den bedeutendsten italienischen Kräften in „Aida" eröffnet. Am Dienstag sollte Olive Fremstad in „Tristan und Isolde" singen, doch hier machte sich die Opposition gegen die deutsche Sprache geltend. In England werden seit Ausbruch des Krieges auch deutsche Opern aufgeführt, doch nur in englischer Sprache. Die Direktoren der Metropolitan Oper beabsichtigten jedoch einen solchen Schritt nicht. Direktor Gatti-Casazaa erklärt, daß der patriotische Amerikaner keinen Grund der Kränkung finden würde, wenn das Programm der Eröffnungswoche bekannt gegeben werde.

Frau William Jay, die einzige Dame im Direktorium der New York Philharmonischen Gesellschaft, argumentiert in einem in „The Chronicle" veröffentlichten Artikel über „deutsche Musik und deutsche Oper". Sie wünscht die deutsche Sprache von der Opernbühne verbannt zu sehen, da diese an den Geist des Barbarismus erinnern würde und feindselige Kundgebungen hervorrufen könnte. Dagegen sollte deutsche Musik den Liebhabern großer deutscher Meister auf der Konzertbühne erhalten bleiben.

Dr. Muck nur Künstler.

Aus Boston kommt die Meldung, daß Dr. Karl Muck, Leiter des Boston Symphonieorchesters, das „Star Spangled Banner" nicht in sein nächstwöchentliches New Yorker Programm aufnehmen werde. Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester erklärt Dr. Muck, sei lediglich eine künstlerische Organisation. Das Spielen nationaler oder politischer Kompositionen sei nicht Sache des Orchesters.

„Wenn wir versäumen, dem Publikum die Art von Musik zu liefern, welche es gewohnt ist, so sind wir seines gegenwärtigen Wohlwollens und seiner Anerkennung nicht wert. Mein Ziel als Dirigent wird, wie es immer gewesen ist, bleiben, dem musikliebenden Publikum die vorzüglichsten künstlerischen Kompositionen in der möglichst besten Form zu Gehör zu bringen. Ich glaube nicht, daß das Bostoner Symphonieorchester außerdem eine Existenzberechtigung hat. Ich bin kein naturalisierter Amerikaner. Naturgemäß wird niemand von mir erwarten, daß ich dasselbe tue, als wenn ich ein amerikanischer Bürger wäre."

Damrosch spricht.

Unter den von Dr. Muck eingenommenen Standpunkt äußerte sich Walter Damrosch, Leiter des New York Symphonie-Orchesters, daß es eine Ungerechtigkeit Dr. Muck gegenüber sein würde, von ihm als loyalen preußischen Untertanen zu verlangen, daß er die amerikanische Nationalhymne dirigieren solle. Der Knoten könne am einfachsten dadurch gelöst werden, daß ein Hilfs-Dirigent während des Abspielens des „Star Spangled Banner" den Taktstock übernehme. Es würde nichts gewonnen werden, wenn Dr. Muck gezwungen würde, es zu tun.

St. Louiser Beschluß.

Die Direktoren des St. Louis Symphonie-Orchester haben laut neuester Nachricht beschlossen, daß in Zukunft jedes ihrer Symphonie-Konzerte mit dem Spiel des „Star Spangled Banner" beginnen soll. Max Zach, der Leiter des Orchesters, hatte sich gegen das Abspielen der Nationalhymne bei Symphonie-Konzerten erklärt, war jedoch bereit, sie bei Volks-Konzerten zu leiten. Sein Grund war, daß die Nationalhymne künstlerisch nicht in Harmonie mit dem Konzert-Programm stehe.

EW YORKER HERALD

ss: New York City.

NOV 2 - 191

Dr. Muck angegriffen.

Providence, R. I., 1. November. Die hiesige Polizeikommission wurde gestern vom „Rhode Island Council for Defense" aufgefordert, keine Erlaubnis mehr zur Abhaltung von Konzerten des „Boston Symphony Orchesters" während des Krieges zu gewähren, wenn Dr. Muck dirigiere, weil er in „absichtlich beleidigender Weise" bei einem Konzert letzte Nacht, trotz einer Aufforderung, es unterlassen habe, das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen zu lassen.

1 Volkszeitung

ress: New York City.

NOV 2 - 1917

Hält am Entschluß fest.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester mag von seinem Leiter aufgelöst werden.

Boston, 31. Okt. Major Higginson droht, das Boston Symphonie-Orchester aufzulösen, wenn die Anwürfe gegen seine Weigerung, die Nationalhymne zu spielen, anhalten. Er gab heute bekannt, daß er den Ticketverkauf in Providence einstellen ließ, weil er unliebsame Vorkommnisse befürchtete. Er droht, die Symphonie-Halle zu verkaufen und erklärt seine Fortlassung der Nationalhymne vom Programm vom künstlerischen Standpunkt aus. Außerdem seien die Programm-Nummern schon längst im Voraus aufgestellt worden. Die deutschen Mitglieder des Orchesters, fügte er hinzu, seien von den Bundesbehörden gutgeheißen worden.

Wegen der Weigerung, in Providence die Hymne zu spielen, nahm der Rhode Island-Verteidigungsrat schon lange Resolutionen an, in denen er den Musiker scharf verurteilt.

1 EVENING STAATSZEITUNG

ess: New York City.

NOV 2 - 191

Damrosch's Eintreten für Dr. Muck.

Hält dessen Weigerung, die Nationalhymne zu spielen, für gerechtfertigt.

Walter Damrosch, Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, hat gestern eine längere Erklärung erlassen, in welcher er seinen Bostoner Kollegen Dr. Karl Muck verteidigt, der bekanntlich viel Aufsehen erregte, weil er sich kürzlich bei einem Konzert in Rhode Island weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen.

Damrosch sagt, Dr. Muck sei loyaler preußischer Staatsbürger, bewahre stets eine durchaus ehrenhafte Haltung und sei in Friedenszeiten nur einmal im Jahre auf Gastrollen nach Amerika gekommen. Deshalb sei nicht zu erwarten, daß Dr. Muck notwendigerweise amerikanischer Bürger geworden sein sollte.

„Ich muß zugeben, daß ich Dr. Muck stets mit Vergnügen eine Symphonie von Beethoven oder Brahms dirigieren hören würde, zur Zeit aber nicht erfreut sein könnte, wenn er das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte, und zwar unter Rücksichtsnahme auf seine Staatsangehörigkeit und seine Meinung hinsichtlich des gegenwärtigen Krieges," h deutsche Journ

ress: New York City.

NOV 2 - 1917

Dr. Muck weigert sich, U. S. Hymne zu leiten.

Lehnt es aus künstlerischen Gründen ab.

Walter Damrosch hält es für ungerecht, den Dirigenten des Bostoner Orchesters dazu zwingen zu wollen.

True translation filed with the Postmaster of New York on November 2, 1917, as required by the act of October 6, 1917.

Große Aufregung hat die Weigerung Dr. Karl Mucks, des Dirigenten des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, in seinen Konzerten das „Star Spangled Banner" zu dirigieren, in Providence und Boston hervorgerufen. In Baltimore und New York, wo das Bostoner Orchester demnächst konzertieren soll, ist eine lebhafte Agitation im Gange, durch die man Dr. Muck zwingen will, die Nationalhymne zu spielen.

Das Orchester wird ersucht werden, die Nationalhymne beim ersten Konzert der Brooklyner Saison am Freitag, den 9. Nov., in der Academy of Music zu spielen. Das Programm enthält soweit die Nummer nicht. Sollte Dirigent Muck sich weigern, dem Verlangen nach der Hymne nachzukommen, mag das Konzert, das stets eines der größten musikalischen Ereignisse war, nicht stattfinden.

Mayor Henry Higginson, der Gründer und Mäcen der Organisation, versichert, daß man eher das Orchester zwingen kann, sich aufzulösen, als etwas zu spielen, was seine künstlerischen Empfindungen irritiert.

Als Dr. Muck gefragt wurde, ob er im Symphonie-Konzert in Carnegie Hall am nächsten Donnerstag Abend die Nationalhymne spielen lassen werde, erklärte er mit Nachdruck, daß in dieser Hinsicht sein Orchester nie der Forderung des Publikums nachgeben würde.

„Das Publikum hat kein Recht, an eine rein künstlerische Organisation eine solche Zumutung zu richten. Wir sind einfach eine künstlerische Vereinigung und als solche haben wir nichts mit bloß nationalen und politischen Kompositionen zu tun.

„Kunst ist international. In unserem Orchester sind alle kriegführenden Nationen vertreten. Ich habe mich bemüht, Frieden unter ihnen zu halten. Es ist bis jetzt gelungen. Ich will nichts einführen, was den Korpsgeist zerstören könnte, den in seiner gegenwärtigen Vollkommenheit aufzurichten, so viele Jahre in Anspruch genommen hat. Von uns zu verlangen, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, ist zudringlich. Es ist fast eine Beleidigung. Ein solches Verlangen würde grade das vernichten, wofür das Orchester eintritt: „musikalische Kunst".

Walter Damrosch bricht Lanze für Kollegen.

Walter Damrosch, der Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, nahm heute zu den Musikern Stellung, die Dr. Muck kritisieren und sagte, er halte es für „unfair", diesen zwingen zu wollen, die Nationalhymne zu dirigieren, während die Vereinigten Staaten mit Deutschland im Kriege sind, dessen Bürger Dr. Muck ist. Er ist nicht aus eigenem Antrieb in diesem Lande, sondern auf die Aufforderung von Mayor Higginson, der Amerikaner von unzweifelhafter Loyalität ist und schwerlich Dr. Muck gebeten hätte, das Orchester zu leiten, wenn er nicht der persönlichen Diskretion und Ehrenhaftigkeit Dr. Mucks in dieser heiklen Lage sicher gewesen wäre.

65

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

NOV 2 - 1917

Damrosch tritt für Dr. Muck ein.

Würde nicht gern sehen, daß Zwang ausgeübt wird.

Als preußischer Staatsbürger müßte Dr. Muck heucheln, wenn er „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte.

Walter Damrosch, Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, hat gestern eine längere Erklärung erlassen, in welcher er seinen Bostoner Kollegen Dr. Karl Muck verteidigt, der bekanntlich viel Aufsehen erregte, weil er sich kürzlich bei einem Konzert in Rhode Island weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen. Damrosch sagt, Dr. Muck sei nicht aus eigenem Wunsche, sondern auf Ersuchen von Major Higginson, dem Gönner des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, nach Amerika gekommen, er sei ein loyaler preußischer Staatsbürger, bewahre stets eine durchaus ehrenhafte Haltung und sei in Friedenszeiten nur einmal im Jahre auf Gastrollen nach Amerika gekommen. Deshalb sei nicht zu erwarten, daß Dr. Muck notwendigerweise amerikanischer Bürger geworden sein sollte.

Herr Damrosch erklärt dann, daß jedes Orchester, so sehr es auch aus verschiedenen Nationalitäten zusammengesetzt sei, nicht vergessen dürfe, was es diesem Lande, in welchem es zur Zeit seinen Unterhalt erwerbe, schuldig sei.

Im Falle Dr. Mucks hält Damrosch es unter den gegenwärtigen Umständen für natürlich, daß er in dieser Zeit nicht die Nationalhymne spielen lassen möchte.

„Ich muß zugeben, daß ich Dr. Muck stets mit Vergnügen eine Symphonie von Beethoven oder Brahms dirigieren hören würde, zur Zeit aber nicht erfreut sein könnte, wenn er das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte, und zwar unter Rücksichtsnahme auf seine Staatsangehörigkeit und seine Meinung hinsichtlich des gegenwärtigen Krieges," sagt Damrosch. „Dies würde ein Akt der Heuchelei sein," fügt er hinzu. Des weiteren erklärt Damrosch, daß der Fall sich leicht aus der Welt schaffen lassen würde, wenn ein Hilfs-Dirigent zur Stelle wäre, sobald das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen sollte.

m EVENING GLOBE
lress: New York City

e ..... 2 -

BAN OPERAS IN GERMAN

Metropolitan Directors Will Present Wagner Music, but It Will Be Sung in English.

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan Opera House in that language during the coming season, it was learned to-day. German operas will be given, but they will be sung in the English language, as they are in London, and the numbers in the repertory probably will be materially reduced.

An announcement to this effect, it is understood, will be issued early next week by Chairman Otto H. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza. Beyond the bare statement that the list "will contain nothing to cause the least offense of the most patriotic American," no one connected with the Metropolitan had anything to say to-day over the controversy.

Music Lovers Dissent.

However, patriotic the decision of the board of directors of the Metropolitan to ban the German tongue may appear to the general public, a different view of it is taken by musicians and music-lovers, according to the editors of two of the largest musical publications in this country, the Musical Courier and Musical America. The people who fill the balcony and galleries of the Metropolitan—who go to the opera because they love music and not as the people in the boxes do, to show off their clothes and jewels—have not been heard from, they say.

Herbert F. Peyser, of Musical America, said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them."

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a divided sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

Patrons Favor Wagner Opera.

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition,'" declared L. L. Leibling, editor in chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Says Art Is Neutral.

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Mr. Kahn last summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

"Remember, that outside of Caruso, and probably Farrar, the Wagner operas always have proved the most remunerative at the Metropolitan," he said. "The real test of whether German operas are vital to the repertory of the Metropolitan is the box office."

A suitable English translation of the German operas could be found without difficulty, both Mr. Leibling and Mr. Peyser believed. The translations of Ernest Newman, Jameson, and Corder were suggested as the most available. Corder's translations are used at the London opera.

It was pointed out that Wagner himself favored the translations of his operas, and that twenty years after he had written the original score of "Tannhauser" he rewrote half of the first act in Paris for its production there.

Case of Dr. Muck.

Regarding the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," Mr. Peyser said that if an American orchestra leader in Germany refused to play the Teutonic national hymn he would be kicked out without any waste of words.

"I think Dr. Muck has been treated very considerately," said Mr. Peyser. "But whether or not he plays 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' it has nothing to do with the artistic standing of the orchestra. It is merely a question of form. I don't know that any real American would want to listen to the playing of the national anthem by a man who was playing it because he was forced to, as would be the case with Dr. Muck."

ess: New York City

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Colonel Would Make Symphony Leader Play Anthem.

EITHER THAT OR KEEP QUIET

Metropolitan Bars German Operas —Whole U. S. Roused for Hymn.

Dr. Karl Muck's Boston Symphony Orchestra should either play the "Star Spangled Banner" or Dr. Muck should be made to shut up, Theodore Roosevelt said to-day.

The Colonel's remarks on the subject came in the course of a visit to Public School 45, in the Bronx, where he heard this Gary school's orchestra play "America." It was suggested that the youngster at the piano, the three boys and the little girl in pink ribbons who played fiddles, might be able to teach Dr. Muck how to play the "Star Spangled Banner."

In reply to this the Colonel made a statement to the effect that no Prussian who refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at this time, with the nations in a life and death grip, ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America.

"Muck ought not be allowed at large in this country," Col. Roosevelt said. "I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

Dispatches from Boston say that unless Dr. Muck consents to have the orchestra play the national anthem when he is on tour he is likely to find halls all over the United States closed to him. Dr. Muck is quoted as saying he cannot change his position in refusing to include the "inartistic" anthem in his programmes.

Metropolitan Takes Action.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire at the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Mme. Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclusion of the anthem or the cancelling of the concert.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has expended almost $1,000,000 to make the Boston Symphony what it is, will back Dr. Muck to the limit of his resources, and it is believed court action will follow any attempt to cancel engagements already made. In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has

om TIMES
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

No German Opera Here.

Metropolitan Directors Drop Gadski and Goritz—Damrosch Defends Muck.

German opera will be banned by the Metropolitan Company at the Academy of Music during the war, it was learned unofficially today. The directors are agreed that the presentation of German opera in Brooklyn, Manhattan or other communities by the Metropolitan organization might be construed as an indication of divided sentiment on the war.

The services of Joanna Gadski and Otto Goritz, who are Germans, have been dispensed with and it is possible that the same procedure will be adopted with others.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the organization, continues and the while question is to be threshed out at the meeting of the board of trustees of the Institute of Arts and Sciences next Thursday, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9.

Walter Darosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at the Academy on Saturday afternoon, lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discreation in this very trying situation."

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

ANTHEM CASE STILL ON.

Symphony Concert Subscribers Haven't Requested Cancellation.

Dr. Charles Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute state to-day that there had been no official request from subscribers to have the national anthem played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert here on Nov. 9.

The published statements led to rumors of the abandonment of the concert here because it is alleged Dr. Muck refuses to include the piece in his programme on the grounds that it "is not music."

Dr. Atkins indicated that although no

n EVENING MAIL
ress: New York City

NOV 2 1917

MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM, QUITS

Leader of Boston Symphony Resigns After Playing of National Air.

Boston, Nov. 2. — Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately.

According to the best information his resignation has not yet been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

The resignation of Dr. Muck brought to a dramatic climax a growing country-wide wave of resentment against exclusion of the national anthem from the orchestra's concerts.

When the big audience assembled for the concert this afternoon there was electricity in the air. The first note of impending events came with the announcement on a small sticker at the bottom of the programmes that the national anthem would be played at the end of the concert.

In the middle of the concert, following one of the numbers, Major Higginson appeared on the stage and addressed the audience. An expectant hush fell over the assembly.

The founder of the orchestra said the "Star-Spangled Banner" would be played as the closing number on the programme. Then he announced that Dr. Muck had handed in his resignation.

The statement had a pronounced effect on the listeners but there was no demonstration.

Major Higginson caused astonishment and conjecture when he declared emphatically that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem. He said he would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York city, next Thursday evening.

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Continued from First Page.

the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Such a mixture of nationalities exists in every symphony orchestra in this country, but they should all feel that this is the country in which they gain their subsistence and under whose protection they live and to which they therefore owe their allegiance. I do not believe, for a moment, that the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are one bit less loyal than the members of the New York Symphony or the Chicago Symphony.

"The real reason is that Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not, at the present time, enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding our war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could be easily met by having an assistant conductor lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 'The Star Spangled Banner' whenever some special occasion demands it."

For real art we suppose he prefers Herr Wagner, whose creations are full of sheet iron motifs, boiler factory tone waves and stone crusher color. Like some others who have no use for "The Star Spangled Banner." Herr Muck cannot visit the Brooklyn water front. Herr Muck, it is asserted, has no objection whatever to raking in dollars under the flag, they harmonize so beautifully with his artistic temperament. Herr Muck, whose name suggests mud, is a conductor who should receive a transfer to Germany.

65

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

Damrosch tritt für Dr. Muck ein.

Würde nicht gern sehen, daß Zwang ausgeübt wird.

Als preußischer Staatsbürger müßte Dr. Muck heucheln, wenn er „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte.

Walter Damrosch, Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, hat gestern eine längere Erklärung erlassen, in welcher er seinen Bostoner Kollegen Dr. Karl Muck verteidigt, der bekanntlich viel Aufsehen erregte, weil er sich kürzlich bei einem Konzert in Rhode Island weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen. Damrosch sagt, Dr. Muck sei nicht aus eigenem Wunsche, sondern auf Ersuchen von Major Higginson, dem Gönner des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, nach Amerika gekommen, er sei ein loyaler preußischer Staatsbürger, bewahre stets eine durchaus ehrenhafte Haltung und sei in Friedenszeiten nur einmal im Jahre auf Gastrollen nach Amerika gekommen. Deshalb sei nicht zu erwarten, daß Dr. Muck notwendigerweise amerikanischer Bürger geworden sein sollte.

Herr Damrosch erklärt dann, daß jedes Orchester, so sehr es auch aus verschiedenen Nationalitäten zusammengesetzt sei, nicht vergessen dürfe, was es diesem Lande, in welchem es zur Zeit seinen Unterhalt erwerbe, schuldig sei.

Im Falle Dr. Mucks hält Damrosch es unter den gegenwärtigen Umständen für natürlich, daß er in dieser Zeit nicht die Nationalhymne spielen lassen möchte.

„Ich muß zugeben, daß ich Dr. Muck stets mit Vergnügen eine Symphonie von Beethoven oder Brahms dirigieren hören würde, zur Zeit aber nicht erfreut sein könnte, wenn er das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte, und zwar unter Rücksichtsnahme auf seine Staatsangehörigkeit und seine Meinung hinsichtlich des gegenwärtigen Krieges," sagt Damrosch. „Dies würde ein Akt der Heuchelei sein," fügt er hinzu. Des weiteren erklärt Damrosch, daß der Fall sich leicht aus der Welt schaffen lassen würde, wenn ein Hilfs-Dirigent zur Stelle wäre, sobald das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen sollte.

n EVENING MAIL
ress: New York City

NOV 2 1917

MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM, QUITS

Leader of Boston Symphony Resigns After Playing of National Air.

Boston, Nov. 2. — Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately.

According to the best information his resignation has not yet been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

The resignation of Dr. Muck brought to a dramatic climax a growing country-wide wave of resentment against exclusion of the national anthem from the orchestra's concerts.

When the big audience assembled for the concert this afternoon there was electricity in the air. The first note of impending events came with the announcement on a small sticker at the bottom of the programmes that the national anthem would be played at the end of the concert.

In the middle of the concert, following one of the numbers, Major Higginson appeared on the stage and addressed the audience. An expectant hush fell over the assembly.

The founder of the orchestra said the "Star-Spangled Banner" would be played as the closing number on the programme. Then he announced that Dr. Muck had handed in his resignation.

The statement had a pronounced effect on the listeners but there was no demonstration.

Major Higginson caused astonishment and conjecture when he declared emphatically that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem. He said he would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York city, next Thursday evening.

e EVENING GLOBE
lress: New York City

BAN OPERAS IN GERMAN

Metropolitan Directors Will Present Wagner Music, but It Will Be Sung in English.

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan Opera House in that language during the coming season, it was learned to-day. German operas will be given, but they will be sung in the English language, as they are in London, and the numbers in the repertory probably will be materially reduced.

An announcement to this effect, it is understood, will be issued early next week by Chairman Otto H. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza. Beyond the bare statement that the list "will contain nothing to cause the least offense of the most patriotic American," no one connected with the Metropolitan had anything to say to-day over the controversy.

Music Lovers Dissent.

However, patriotic the decision of the board of directors of the Metropolitan to ban the German tongue may appear to the general public, a different view of it is taken by musicians and music-lovers, according to the editors of two of the largest musical publications in this country, the Musical Courier and Musical America. The people who fill the balcony and galleries of the Metropolitan—who go to the opera because they love music and not as the people in the boxes do, to show off their clothes and jewels—have not been heard from, they say.

Herbert F. Peyser, of Musical America, said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them."

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a divided sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

Patrons Favor Wagner Opera.

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor in chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Says Art Is Neutral.

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Mr. Kahn last summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

"Remember, that outside of Caruso, and probably Farrar, the Wagner operas always have proved the most remunerative at the Metropolitan," he said. "The real test of whether German operas are vital to the repertory of the Metropolitan is the box office."

A suitable English translation of the German operas could be found without difficulty, both Mr. Leibling and Mr. Peyser believed. The translations of Ernest Newman, Jameson, and Corder were suggested as the most available. Corder's translations are used at the London opera.

It was pointed out that Wagner himself favored the translations of his operas, and that twenty years after he had written the original score of "Tannhauser" he rewrote half of the first act in Paris for its production there.

Case of Dr. Muck.

Regarding the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," Mr. Peyser said that if an American orchestra leader in Germany refused to play the Teutonic national hymn he would be kicked out without any waste of words.

"I think Dr. Muck has been treated very considerately," said Mr. Peyser. "But whether or not he plays 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' it has nothing to do with the artistic standing of the orchestra. It is merely a question of form. I don't know that any real American would want to listen to the playing of the national anthem by a man who was playing it because he was forced to, as would be the case with Dr. Muck."

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Colonel Would Make Symphony Leader Play Anthem.

EITHER THAT OR KEEP QUIET

Metropolitan Bars German Operas —Whole U. S. Roused for Hymn.

Dr. Karl Muck's Boston Symphony Orchestra should either play the "Star Spangled Banner" or Dr. Muck should be made to shut up, Theodore Roosevelt said to-day.

The Colonel's remarks on the subject came in the course of a visit to Public School 45, in the Bronx, where he heard this Gary school's orchestra play "America." It was suggested that the youngster at the piano, the three boys and the little girl in pink ribbons who played fiddles, might be able to teach Dr. Muck how to play the "Star Spangled Banner."

In reply to this the Colonel made a statement to the effect that no Prussian who refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at this time, with the nations in a life and death grip, ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America.

"Muck ought not be allowed at large in this country," Col. Roosevelt said. "I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

Dispatches from Boston say that unless Dr. Muck consents to have the orchestra play the national anthem when he is on tour he is likely to find halls all over the United States closed to him. Dr. Muck is quoted as saying he cannot change his position in refusing to include the "inartistic" anthem in his programmes.

Metropolitan Takes Action.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire at the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Mme. Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclu-

om TIMES
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

No German Opera Here.

Metropolitan Directors Drop Gadski and Goritz—Damrosch Defends Muck.

German opera will be banned by the Metropolitan Company at the Academy of Music during the war, it was learned unofficially today. The directors are agreed that the presentation of German opera in Brooklyn, Manhattan or other communities by the Metropolitan organization might be construed as an indication of divided sentiment on the war.

The services of Joanna Gadski and Otto Goritz, who are Germans, have been dispensed with and it is possible that the same procedure will be adopted with others.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the organization, continues and the while question is to be threshed out at the meeting of the board of trustees of the Institute of Arts and Sciences next Thursday, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9.

Walter Darosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at the Academy on Saturday afternoon, lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discreation in this very trying situation."

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

1917

ANTHEM CASE STILL ON.

Symphony Concert Subscribers Haven't Requested Cancellation.

Dr. Charles Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute state to-day that there had been no official request from subscribers to have the national anthem played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert here on Nov. 9.

The published statements led to rumors of the abandonment of the concert here because it is alleged Dr. Muck refuses to include the piece in his programme on the grounds that it "is not music."

Dr. Atkins indicated that although no

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Continued from First Page.

sion of the anthem or the cancelling of the concert.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has expended almost $1,000,000 to make the Boston Symphony what it is, will back Dr. Muck to the limit of his resources, and it is believed court action will follow any attempt to cancel engagements already made. In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Such mixture of nationalities exists in every symphony orchestra in this country, but they should all feel that this is the country in which they gain their subsistence and under whose protection they live and to which they therefore owe their allegiance. I do not believe, for a moment, that the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are one bit less loyal than the members of the New York Symphony or the Chicago Symphony.

"The real reason is that Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not, at the present time, enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding our war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could be easily met by having an assistant conductor lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 'The Star Spangled Banner' whenever some special occasion demands it."

ing to Muck is not real art. For real art we suppose he prefers Herr Wagner, whose creations are full of sheet iron motifs, boiler factory tone waves and stone crusher color. Like some others who have no use for "The Star Spangled Banner." Herr Muck cannot visit the Brooklyn water front. Herr Muck, it is asserted, has no objection whatever to raking in dollars under the flag, they harmonize so beautifully with his artistic temperament. Herr Muck, whose name suggests mud, is a conductor who should receive a transfer to Germany.

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

Damrosch tritt für Dr. Muck ein.

Würde nicht gern sehen, daß Zwang ausgeübt wird.

Als preußischer Staatsbürger müßte Dr. Muck heucheln, wenn er „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte.

Walter Damrosch, Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, hat gestern eine längere Erklärung erlassen, in welcher er seinen Bostoner Kollegen Dr. Karl Muck verteidigt, der bekanntlich viel Aufsehen erregte, weil er sich kürzlich bei einem Konzert in Rhode Island weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen. Damrosch sagt, Dr. Muck sei nicht aus eigenem Wunsche, sondern auf Ersuchen von Major Higginson, dem Gönner des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, nach Amerika gekommen, er sei ein loyaler preußischer Staatsbürger, bewahre stets eine durchaus ehrenhafte Haltung und sei in Friedenszeiten nur einmal im Jahre auf Gastrollen nach Amerika gekommen. Deshalb sei nicht zu erwarten, daß Dr. Muck notwendigerweise amerikanischer Bürger geworden sein sollte.

Herr Damrosch erklärt dann, daß jedes Orchester, so sehr es auch aus verschiedenen Nationalitäten zusammengesetzt sei, nicht vergessen dürfe, was es diesem Lande, in welchem es zur Zeit seinen Unterhalt erwerbe, schuldig sei.

Im Falle Dr. Mucks hält Damrosch es unter den gegenwärtigen Umständen für natürlich, daß er in dieser Zeit nicht die Nationalhymne spielen lassen möchte.

„Ich muß zugeben, daß ich Dr. Muck stets mit Vergnügen eine Symphonie von Beethoven oder Brahms dirigieren hören würde, zur Zeit aber nicht erfreut sein könnte, wenn er das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte, und zwar unter Rücksichtsnahme auf seine Staatsangehörigkeit und seine Meinung hinsichtlich des gegenwärtigen Krieges," sagt Damrosch. „Dies würde ein Akt der Heuchelei sein," fügt er hinzu. Des weiteren erklärt Damrosch, daß der Fall sich leicht aus der Welt schaffen lassen würde, wenn ein Hilfs-Dirigent zur Stelle wäre, sobald das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen sollte.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

BAN OPERAS IN GERMAN

Metropolitan Directors Will Present Wagner Music, but It Will Be Sung in English.

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan Opera House in that language during the coming season, it was learned to-day. German operas will be given, but they will be sung in the English language, as they are in London, and the numbers in the repertory probably will be materially reduced.

An announcement to this effect, it is understood, will be issued early next week by Chairman Otto H. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza. Beyond the bare statement that the list "will contain nothing to cause the least offense of the most patriotic American," no one connected with the Metropolitan had anything to say to-day over the controversy.

Music Lovers Dissent.

However, patriotic the decision of the board of directors of the Metropolitan to ban the German tongue may appear to the general public, a different view of it is taken by musicians and music-lovers, according to the editors of two of the largest musical publications in this country, the Musical Courier and Musical America. The people who fill the balcony and galleries of the Metropolitan—who go to the opera because they love music and not as the people in the boxes do, to show off their clothes and jewels—have not been heard from, they say.

Herbert F. Peyser, of Musical America, said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them."

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a divided sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

Patrons Favor Wagner Opera.

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor in chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Says Art Is Neutral.

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Mr. Kahn last summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

"Remember, that outside of Caruso, and probably Farrar, the Wagner operas always have proved the most remunerative at the Metropolitan," he said. "The real test of whether German operas are vital to the repertory of the Metropolitan is the box office."

A suitable English translation of the German operas could be found without difficulty, both Mr. Leibling and Mr. Peyser believed. The translations of Ernest Newman, Jameson, and Corder were suggested as the most available. Corder's translations are used at the London opera.

It was pointed out that Wagner himself favored the translations of his operas, and that twenty years after he had written the original score of "Tannhauser" he rewrote half of the first act in Paris for its production there.

Case of Dr. Muck.

Regarding the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," Mr. Peyser said that if an American orchestra leader in Germany refused to play the Teutonic national hymn he would be kicked out without any waste of words.

"I think Dr. Muck has been treated very considerately," said Mr. Peyser. "But whether or not he plays 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' it has nothing to do with the artistic standing of the orchestra. It is merely a question of form. I don't know that any real American would want to listen to the playing of the national anthem by a man who was playing it because he was forced to, as would be the case with Dr. Muck."

EVENING SUN
New York City

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Colonel Would Make Symphony Leader Play Anthem.

EITHER THAT OR KEEP QUIET

Metropolitan Bars German Operas —Whole U. S. Roused for Hymn.

Dr. Karl Muck's Boston Symphony Orchestra should either play the "Star Spangled Banner" or Dr. Muck should be made to shut up, Theodore Roosevelt said to-day.

The Colonel's remarks on the subject came in the course of a visit to Public School 45, in the Bronx, where he heard this Gary school's orchestra play "America." It was suggested that the youngster at the piano, the three boys and the little girl in pink ribbons who played fiddles, might be able to teach Dr. Muck how to play the "Star Spangled Banner."

In reply to this the Colonel made a statement to the effect that no Prussian who refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at this time, with the nations in a life and death grip, ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America.

"Muck ought not be allowed at large at this time," Col. Roosevelt said. "I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

Dispatches from Boston say that unless Dr. Muck consents to have the orchestra play the national anthem when he is on tour he is likely to find halls all over the United States closed to him. Dr. Muck is quoted as saying he cannot change his position in refusing to include the "inartistic" anthem in his programmes.

Metropolitan Takes Action.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire at the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Mme. Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclusion of the anthem or the cancelling of the concert.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has expended almost $1,000,000 to make the Boston Symphony what it is, will back Dr. Muck to the limit of his resources, and it is believed court action will follow any attempt to cancel engagements already made. In defending his position Major Higginson said:

"The orchestra embraces about twelve nationalities and since the beginning of the war the members have been pleasant to each other, as always, and the public has been content and has regarded the concerts as a matter of art and not of nationality. The same is true of the players. Dr. Muck evidently takes that view. All these men have minded their own business and have done nothing to injure our country or its affairs. I speak of what I know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.

No German Opera Here.

Metropolitan Directors Drop Gadski and Goritz—Damrosch Defends Muck.

German opera will be banned by the Metropolitan Company at the Academy of Music during the war, it was learned unofficially today. The directors are agreed that the presentation of German opera in Brooklyn, Manhattan or other communities by the Metropolitan organization might be construed as an indication of divided sentiment on the war.

The services of Joanna Gadski and Otto Goritz, who are Germans, have been dispensed with and it is possible that the same procedure will be adopted with others.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the organization, continues and the while question is to be threshed out at the meeting of the board of trustees of the Institute of Arts and Sciences next Thursday, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9.

Walter Darosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at the Academy on Saturday afternoon, lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation."

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

ANTHEM CASE STILL ON.

Symphony Concert Subscribers Haven't Requested Cancellation.

Dr. Charles Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute state to-day that there had been no official request from subscribers to have the national anthem played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert here on Nov. 9.

The published statements led to rumors of the abandonment of the concert here because it is alleged Dr. Muck refuses to include the piece in his programme on the grounds that it "is not music."

Dr. Atkins indicated that although no

EVENING MAIL
New York City
NOV 2 191

MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM, QUITS

Leader of Boston Symphony Resigns After Playing of National Air.

Boston, Nov. 2. — Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately.

According to the best information his resignation has not yet been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

The resignation of Dr. Muck brought to a dramatic climax a growing country-wide wave of resentment against exclusion of the national anthem from the orchestra's concerts.

When the big audience assembled for the concert this afternoon there was electricity in the air. The first note of impending events came with the announcement on a small sticker at the bottom of the programmes that the national anthem would be played at the end of the concert.

In the middle of the concert, following one of the numbers, Major Higginson appeared on the stage and addressed the audience. An expectant hush fell over the assembly.

The founder of the orchestra said the "Star-Spangled Banner" would be played as the closing number on the programme. Then he announced that Dr. Muck had handed in his resignation.

The statement had a pronounced effect on the listeners but there was no demonstration.

Major Higginson caused astonishment and conjecture when he declared emphatically that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem. He said he would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York city, next Thursday evening.

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Continued from First Page.

the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Such mixture of nationalities exists in every symphony orchestra in this country, but they should all feel that this is the country in which they gain their subsistence and under whose protection they live and to which they therefore owe their allegiance. I do not believe, for a moment, that the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are one bit less loyal than the members of the New York Symphony or the Chicago Symphony.

"The real reason is that Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not, at the present time, enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding our war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could be easily met by having an assistant conductor lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 'The Star Spangled Banner' whenever some special occasion demands it."

[illegible] Muck is not real art. For real art we suppose he prefers Herr Wagner, whose creations are full of sheet iron motifs, boiler factory tone waves and stone crusher color. Like some others who have no use for "The Star Spangled Banner." Herr Muck cannot visit the Brooklyn water front. Herr Muck, it is asserted, has no objection whatever to raking in dollars under the flag, they harmonize so beautifully with his artistic temperament. Herr Muck, whose name suggests mud, is a conductor who should receive a transfer to Germany.

65

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

NOV 1917

Damrosch tritt für Dr. Muck ein.

Würde nicht gern sehen, daß Zwang ausgeübt wird.

Als preußischer Staatsbürger müßte Dr. Muck heucheln, wenn er „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte.

Walter Damrosch, Dirigent des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, hat gestern eine längere Erklärung erlassen, in welcher er seinen Bostoner Kollegen Dr. Karl Muck verteidigt, der bekanntlich viel Aufsehen erregte, weil er sich kürzlich bei einem Konzert in Rhode Island weigerte, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen. Damrosch sagt, Dr. Muck sei nicht aus eigenem Wunsche, sondern auf Ersuchen von Major Higginson, dem Gönner des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, nach Amerika gekommen, er sei ein loyaler preußischer Staatsbürger, bewahre stets eine durchaus ehrenhafte Haltung und sei in Friedenszeiten nur einmal im Jahre auf Gastrollen nach Amerika gekommen. Deshalb sei nicht zu erwarten, daß Dr. Muck notwendigerweise amerikanischer Bürger geworden sein sollte.

Herr Damrosch erklärt dann, daß jedes Orchester, so sehr es auch aus verschiedenen Nationalitäten zusammengesetzt sei, nicht vergessen dürfe, was es diesem Lande, in welchem es zur Zeit seinen Unterhalt erwerbe, schuldig sei. Im Falle Dr. Mucks hält Damrosch es unter den gegenwärtigen Umständen für natürlich, daß er in dieser Zeit nicht die Nationalhymne spielen lassen möchte.

„Ich muß zugeben, daß ich Dr. Muck stets mit Vergnügen eine Symphonie von Beethoven oder Brahms dirigieren hören würde, zur Zeit aber nicht erfreut sein könnte, wenn er das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigierte, und zwar unter Rücksichtsnahme auf seine Staatsangehörigkeit und seine Meinung hinsichtlich des gegenwärtigen Krieges," sagt Damrosch. „Dies würde ein Akt der Heuchelei sein," fügt er hinzu. Des weiteren erklärt Damrosch, daß der Fall sich leicht aus der Welt schaffen lassen würde, wenn ein Hilfs-Dirigent zur Stelle wäre, sobald das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen sollte.

n EVENING MAIL
ress: New York City

NOV 2 1917

MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM, QUITS

Leader of Boston Symphony Resigns After Playing of National Air.

Boston, Nov. 2. — Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately.

According to the best information his resignation has not yet been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

The resignation of Dr. Muck brought to a dramatic climax a growing country-wide wave of resentment against exclusion of the national anthem from the orchestra's concerts.

When the big audience assembled for the concert this afternoon there was electricity in the air. The first note of impending events came with the announcement on a small sticker at the bottom of the programmes that the national anthem would be played at the end of the concert.

In the middle of the concert, following one of the numbers, Major Higginson appeared on the stage and addressed the audience. An expectant hush fell over the assembly.

The founder of the orchestra said the "Star-Spangled Banner" would be played as the closing number on the programme. Then he announced that Dr. Muck had handed in his resignation.

The statement had a pronounced effect on the listeners but there was no demonstration.

Major Higginson caused astonishment and conjecture when he declared emphatically that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem. He said he would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York city, next Thursday evening.

m EVENING GLOBE
ress: New York City

BAN OPERAS IN GERMAN

Metropolitan Directors Will Present Wagner Music, but It Will Be Sung in English.

German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan Opera House in that language during the coming season, it was learned to-day. German operas will be given, but they will be sung in the English language, as they are in London, and the numbers in the repertory probably will be materially reduced.

An announcement to this effect, it is understood, will be issued early next week by Chairman Otto H. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza. Beyond the bare statement that the list "will contain nothing to cause the least offense of the most patriotic American," no one connected with the Metropolitan had anything to say to-day over the controversy.

Music Lovers Dissent.

However, patriotic the decision of the board of directors of the Metropolitan to ban the German tongue may appear to the general public, a different view of it is taken by musicians and music-lovers, according to the editors of two of the largest musical publications in this country, the Musical Courier and Musical America. The people who fill the balcony and galleries of the Metropolitan—who go to the opera because they love music and not as the people in the boxes do, to show off their clothes and jewels—have not been heard from, they say.

Herbert F. Peyser, of Musical America, said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them."

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a divided sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

Patrons Favor Wagner Opera.

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor in chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Says Art Is Neutral.

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Mr. Kahn last summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

"Remember, that outside of Caruso, and probably Farrar, the Wagner operas always have proved the most remunerative at the Metropolitan," he said. "The real test of whether German operas are vital to the repertory of the Metropolitan is the box office."

A suitable English translation of the German operas could be found without difficulty, both Mr. Leibling and Mr. Peyser believed. The translations of Ernest Newman, Jameson, and Corder were suggested as the most available. Corder's translations are used at the London opera.

It was pointed out that Wagner himself favored the translations of his operas, and that twenty years after he had written the original score of "Tannhauser" he rewrote half of the first act in Paris for its production there.

Case of Dr. Muck.

Regarding the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," Mr. Peyser said that if an American orchestra leader in Germany refused to play the Teutonic national hymn he would be kicked out without any waste of words.

"I think Dr. Muck has been treated very considerately," said Mr. Peyser. "But whether or not he plays 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' it has nothing to do with the artistic standing of the orchestra. It is merely a question of form. I don't know that any real American would want to listen to the playing of the national anthem by a man who was playing it because he was forced to, as would be the case with Dr. Muck."

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City

LOCK MUCK UP, T. R.'S ADVICE

Colonel Would Make Symphony Leader Play Anthem.

EITHER THAT OR KEEP QUIET

Metropolitan Bars German Operas —Whole U. S. Roused for Hymn.

Dr. Karl Muck's Boston Symphony Orchestra should either play the "Star Spangled Banner" or Dr. Muck should be made to shut up, Theodore Roosevelt said to-day.

The Colonel's remarks on the subject came in the course of a visit to Public School 45, in the Bronx, where he heard this Gary school's orchestra play "America." It was suggested that the youngster at the piano, the three boys and the little girl in pink ribbons who played fiddles, might be able to teach Dr. Muck how to play the "Star Spangled Banner."

In reply to this the Colonel made a statement to the effect that no Prussian who refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at this time, with the nations in a life and death grip, ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America.

"Muck ought not be allowed at large in this country," Col. Roosevelt said. "I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

Despatches from Boston say that unless Dr. Muck consents to have the orchestra play the national anthem when he is on tour he is likely to find halls all over the United States closed to him. Dr. Muck is quoted as saying he cannot change his position in refusing to include the "inartistic" anthem in his programmes.

Metropolitan Takes Action.

The feeling aroused by the entrance of the United States into the great war is reflected by the announcement that for the first time German operas would be excluded from the repertoire at the Metropolitan this winter. The announcement, while unofficial, is given weight by the fact that neither Mme. Gadski nor Otto Goritz has been engaged for the coming season.

The first test of the issue between Dr. Muck and public opinion will come on next Thursday when the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences meets. The board will have before it a declaration from Dr. Muck that he will not permit the orchestra to play the national anthem at a concert which will be given at the Academy of Music on Nov. 9. Several of the trustees will press a resolution insisting upon the inclu-

INDEPENDENT REPUBLIC PLANNED BY FINLAND

Steps Taken in Senate for Election of a President.

HELSINGFORS, Nov. 2.—Direct steps for Finland's independence were started by the drafting of a bill in the Finnish Senate to-day proposing that this body elect a president of a Finnish republic.

The Russian Government recently cut off all governmental revenues heretofore sent to Finland.

RUSSIANS PREVENT ATTACK.

Break Up Concentration of Austrian Troops Near Dube.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 2.—Austrian troops formed for attack near Dube village southwest of Birdy, yesterday morning were repulsed by Russian fire, the [illegible] know. Why should Dr. Muck give to the public his views about this war? If you were earning your bread in Germany at this time should you welcome the chance to publish your opinions and feelings?"

Action Causes No Surprise.

The dropping of German operas from the Metropolitan repertoire was not unexpected. Although several of the best German works were included in the season's programme, as announced, it was believed generally that in view of the war they would not be rendered. The Metropolitan has no hard and fast rule and it changes its programme whenever expediency dictates.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, has

om TIMES
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

No German Opera Here.

Metropolitan Directors Drop Gadski and Goritz—Damrosch Defends Muck.

German opera will be banned by the Metropolitan Company at the Academy of Music during the war, it was learned unofficially today. The directors are agreed that the presentation of German opera in Brooklyn, Manhattan or other communities by the Metropolitan organization might be construed as an indication of divided sentiment on the war.

The services of Joanna Gadski and Otto Goritz, who are Germans, have been dispensed with and it is possible that the same procedure will be adopted with others.

Meanwhile the controversy over the propriety of Dr. Muck's refusal to have the national anthem played at the close of the Boston Symphony concerts and the support of his attitude by Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the organization, continues and the while question is to be threshed out at the meeting of the board of trustees of the Institute of Arts and Sciences next Thursday, which is arranging to present the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music on November 9.

Walter Darosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at the Academy on Saturday afternoon, lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discreation in this very trying situation."

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

[illegible] 1917

ANTHEM CASE STILL ON.

Symphony Concert Subscribers Haven't Requested Cancellation.

Dr. Charles Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute state to-day that there had been no official request from subscribers to have the national anthem played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert here on Nov. 9.

The published statements led to rumors of the abandonment of the concert here because it is alleged Dr. Muck refuses to include the piece in his programme on the grounds that it "is not music."

Dr. Atkins indicated that although no formal protest was at present lodged with him, he was not positive that one would not be forthcoming and it is not improbable that a continued refusal on the part of Dr. Muck, may lead to the cancellation of the concert.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn N. Y.

MUCK.

Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a person of artistic temperament and it makes his cultured soul throw a fit to think that anyone should dare suggest that his orchestra should play "The Star Spangled Banner." So Muck, who is going to have his bunch do some fiddling in New York next week, has cut out the national hymn. "The Star Spangled Banner," according to Muck, is not real art. For real art we suppose he prefers Herr Wagner, whose creations are full of sheet iron motifs, boiler factory tone waves and stone crusher color. Like some others who have no use for "The Star Spangled Banner." Herr Muck cannot visit the Brooklyn water front. Herr Muck, it is asserted, has no objection whatever to raking in dollars under the flag, they harmonize so beautifully with his artistic temperament. Herr Muck, whose name suggests mud, is a conductor who should receive a transfer to Germany.

NEW YORKER

n TELEGRAM

iress: New York City.

NOV 2 - 1917

YOUR HAT, DR. MUCK.

We think it would be well for Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while the going is as good as it is to go back to Berlin, where he enjoys the honorary title of "Koeniglich preussischer Generalmusikdirektor,' which means "the King's Prussian Musical Director."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was announced to give a concert here November 8, and in response to a request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played Dr. Muck is quoted as saying:—

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult."

Fine spun arguments that persons are silly, that his organization is not a military band, that to play the national anthem would be an insult to art avail nothing. Dsrespect and disloyalty cannot be glossed over in this manner.

Far more strange than the insolence of Dr. Muck is the attitude of Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, supporter of the orchestra, who "does not propose to have the public interfere with the programmes" and says of his conductor, "Would you expect his sympathies to be other than German?"

There seems to be nothing to do but call off the concert next Thursday and hand Dr. Muck his hat.

Major Higginson, a New York born man, by the way, and a gallant officer of cavalry in the civil war, can be left to his reflections and his friends.

deutsche Journal

New York City.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Muck reicht seine Entlassung ein.

Dirigiert „Star Spangled Banner" und resigniert.

Stellt in Abrede, sich vorher geweigert zu haben, es zu leiten; Zukunft des Orchesters ungewiß.

True translation filed with the Postmaster of New York on November 3, 1917, as required by the act of October 6, 1917.

Boston, 2. Nov. — Dr. Karl Muck ist, nachdem er das Bostoner Orchester dirigierte, während es in einem hiesigen Konzert in Symphony Hall das „Star Spangled Banner" spielte, unmittelbar von seiner Stellung zurückgetreten.

Der Rücktritt kam unerwartet, da Major Henry L. Higginson, der fast eine Million Dollars ausgegeben hat, um das Orchester zu entwickeln, kräftig zur Verteidigung von Dr. Muck gesprochen hatte, der, wie berichtet war, sich weigerte, die National-Hymne zu spielen, und angedeutet hatte, er werde dem deutschen Dirigenten mit allen seinen Mitteln beistehen.

Es stellte sich aber heraus, daß bei der geplanten Tournee des Orchesters viele Konzert-Säle aus patriotischen Gründen dem Orchester verschlossen sein würden.

Rücktritt ein Unglück für Orchester.

Nach einer Nummer mitten im Konzert trat nun Major Higginson auf das Podium und verkündete, daß das „Star Spangled Banner" als die Schlußnummer gespielt werden würde. Dann gab er bekannt, daß Dr. Muck seine Entlassung eingereicht habe. Es erfolgte keine Demonstration. Higginson verursachte aber Erstaunen, als er erklärte, daß Muck sich nie geweigert habe, die National-Hymne zu spielen. Er sagte, er betrachte Mucks Resignation als ein „Disaster".

Das Orchester hat am 9. November in der Academy of Music zu spielen. Es wurde gedroht, das Konzert abzusagen, wenn das „Star Spangled Banner" nicht auf dem Programm sein würde. Dr. Muck nennt die Hymne „unkünstlerisch".

New York City.

HERALD

NOV 3 1917

Keine deutsche Oper.

Während der gegenwärtigen Saison wird solche nicht gegeben.

Dr. Muck spielt Sternenbannerlied und legt seine Resignation vor.

Die Direktion des Opernhauses hat gestern nachmittag angekündigt, daß in der jetzt ehestens beginnenden Saison keine Opern in der deutschen Sprache gegeben werden sollen. Unter den bekannteren Künstlern, welche nicht auftreten werden, sind Frau Gadski, Frau Ober, Frau Selma Kurz, Otto Goritz, Johannes Sembach und Carl Braun. Die Damen Hempel und Matzenauer dürften aber in französischer und italienischer Oper auftreten. Von dem Beschluß des Direktoriums werden namentlich Werke von Wagner betroffen. Soweit Richard Strauß in Frage kommt, war überhaupt nicht die Absicht, ihn ins Repertoire aufzunehmen.

Bleibt Dr. Muck?

Boston, 2. November. Zum Schlusse des Konzerts der Symphonie-Gesellschaft wurde das „Star Spangled Banner" gespielt, was einen gewaltigen Beifallssturm auslöste. Vorher hatte Major Henry L. Higginson, der hauptsächlichste Gönner des Orchesters, Folgendes erklärt:

„Ich habe Dr. Muck und das Orchester ersucht, das Sternenbanner-Lied zu spielen und sie haben zugestimmt. Sie haben sich nie geweigert, dieses Lied zu spielen. Im letzten Frühjahr erklärte sich Dr. Muck erst auf ernstliches Ersuchen meinerseits bereit, die Leitung des Orchesters zu behalten. Ich hielt dies für wesentlich zur Fortführung des Orchesters. Er hat jetzt seine Resignation in meine Hände gelegt, da er nicht wünscht, daß irgend welches persönliche Gefühl gegen ihn die Wohlfahrt des Orchesters beeinträchtigen sollte. Ihn zu verlieren, würde ein Unglück sein. Bei mir liegt daher die Entscheidung und ich werde sie nicht ohne reifliches Nachdenken treffen."

Als Dr. Muck bei Beginn des Konzerts erschien, wurde er vom Publikum lebhaft begrüßt.

Beamte der Symphonie-Gesellschaft erklären, bei allen künftigen Konzerten werde das Sternenbannerlied auf dem Programm stehen.

(Nach Herrn Higginsons Aeußerungen ist es noch fraglich, ob Dr. Muck nicht bestimmt werden wird, seine Resignation zurückzuziehen. Die Red.)

TIMES

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. MUCK WON'T PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM HERE

Boston Reports "Star Spangled Banner" Will Not Be on Brooklyn Program.

CONDUCTOR PUTS CASE UP TO MAJOR HIGGINSON

Institute Officials Have Nothing Further to Say of Coming Concert.

Boston, Nov. 2.—From information today it is understood the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play the "Star Spangled Banner" in its concert in Brooklyn next Friday.

According to a statement credited to Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, he said the question of playing the National anthem was "not his affair," that the matter "rested with Major Henry L. Higginson," founder of the orchestra.

Those in close touch with Dr. Muck persist that he will remain firm in his stand to exclude the National anthem from his concerts.

Following the assertion of Dr. Conrad, minister of Park Street Church here, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston which did not display the flag, a new Stars and Stripes was draped over the entrance of the home of the orchestra.

New developments are expected here soon in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refuses to play the "Star Spaugled Banner." Music lovers are following the case with interest.

Former Mayor of the City of Brooklyn David A. Boody, when seen at his office in Manhattan today, said:

"I think the National anthem should be played everywhere and anywhere and at all times, and I shall vote accordingly."

W. J. Coombs, another of the trustees, when asked how he would vote, said he did not know that the matter was to be taken up, but that if it was he would surely vote to keep the orchestra out of the Academy if they persisted in their attitude.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, had nothing to add to his statement of yesterday, which was to the effect that no official protest had reached him.

Reports from Boston say Mayor Curley has directed that the license of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra, be revoked if Dr. Muck persists in his refusal. He agrees with Major Higginson that there will be no concerts if the anthem will not be played, "because they will not be allowed."

"Our program for the New York concert is all made up," Dr. Muck said, "and I do not believe will be changed. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national consideration.

"And you know, I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Geraldine Farrar sang the "Star Spangled Banner" at Haverhill, Mass., in a concert last night, at the request of Mayor L. K. Morse that the anthem be included in the program.

"I will sing the 'Star Spangled Banner' in English," Miss Farrar told the Mayor, and she did.

STAATSZEITUNG

s: New York City.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Muck legt Dirigentenstab nieder.

Musiker leitet Nationalhymne und tritt zurück.

„Eine Kalamität für das Boston Symphonie-Orchester", erklärt Major Higginson in Ansprache.

(Associated Pres.)

Boston, 2. November. Die Nationalhymne wurde in dem heute nachmittag vom Boston Symphonie-Orchester gegebenen Konzert unter der Leitung seines Kapellmeisters Dr. Karl Muck gespielt. Ankündigend, daß das „Star Spangled Banner" in Zukunft jedem Konzert-Programm beigefügt werden würde, machte Major Henry L. Higginson, der Maecen des Orchesters, indeß zur gleichen Zeit bekannt, daß der Kapellmeister Dr. Karl Muck seine Resignation eingereicht habe, beifügend, dieses Rücktrittsgesuch werde ernstlicher Erwägung unterzogen werden, da der Verlust des Musikers als Leiter des Orchesters einer Kalamität gleichkommen würde.

Dieser Schritt Dr. Mucks folgt dem Providence-Vorfall auf dem Fuß. Dem Kapellmeister wurde bei seinem heutigen Erscheinen eine Ovation zuteil.

Major Higginson hielt folgende Ansprache an das Publikum: „Ich habe Dr. Muck und das Orchester ersucht, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen und sie haben eingewilligt. Sie haben tatsächlich niemals refusiert. Auf meine ernstlichen Vorstellungen hin erklärte sich

Dr. Muck legt Dirigentenstab nieder.

(Fortsetzung von der 1. Seite.)

Dr. Muck im letzten Frühjahr bereit, die Leitung des Orchesters beizubehalten. Ich hielt ihn für die Durchführung der Konzerte einfach für unentbehrlich. Er hat nunmehr seine Resignation in meine Hände gelegt, weil er nicht wünscht, daß irgend welches persönliche Gefühl gegen ihn dem Gedeihen des Orchesters im Wege stehen sollte. Ihn zu verlieren wäre eine Kalamität. Aus diesem Grunde wird die Angelegenheit meine ernstliche Erwägung finden."

* * *

Walter Damroschs Erklärung.

Walter Damrosch, der Leiter des New Yorker Symphonie-Orchesters, nahm gestern Anstand an der in den Morgenblättern erschienenen Erklärung von Dr. Muck, daß Symphonie-Orchester nicht als Militär- oder Tanzmusikapellen aufgefaßt und von ihnen nicht verlangt werden sollte, patriotische Weisen zu spielen. Er sagte: „Glaubt Herr Muck wirklich, daß die Nationalhymne nur von Militär- oder Tanzmusikkapellen gespielt werden sollte? Er scheint die Tatsache außer Acht zu lassen, daß die Nationalhymne ein Symbol des Patriotismus und der Loyalität ist.

„Was besonders zu bedauern ist, ist die Tatsache, daß durch solche zynische Mißachtung der Heiligkeit unserer Nationalhymne das Gefühl des Zornes in unserem Volke sich nunmehr gegen die Musik der großen deutschen Meister der Vergangenheit richtet, wofür der Ausschluß der deutschen Opern aus dem Repertoire des Metropolitan Opernhauses ein Beispiel ist."

RECORD

s: Philadelphia, Pa.

SING LOYAL OR BE SILENT

Frieda Hemple Up Against Ultimatum by Providence Police.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 30.—The Police Commission today withheld the granting of a license for a concert here Sunday by Frieda Hempel, pending a promise by the singer that she will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." While in this city last spring Mme. Hempel refused to include the national anthem in her program, claiming that she did not know it.

"If she does not know it she must learn it by Sunday if she hopes to appear then," the chairman of the commission stated when application was made for a license.

Farrar Sings Only German.

Boston, Oct. 30.—Many protests have been made over Geraldine Farrar's apparent exhibition of sympathy with Germany at a concert in aid of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund, Sunday afternoon. She sang nine songs, all in German, at the only concert to be given before the home folks in the first year of our war with Germany. The orchestra is practically all German, and the director, Karl Muck, has been under fire from the musical press. Mme. Farrar was applauded by the audience in the hope of hearing her sing in English, or one of the arias from the French and Italian operas in which she is adept, but she kept to the German program.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

NOV 3 1917

With the Musicians

Why Should Not Dr. Muck Play "The Star Spangled Banner?"—A New Pianist, a Tenor and a Soprano

By SIGMUND SPAETH.

WHEN the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town next Thursday evening, the audience will probably be less interested in the symphony, the overtures and the tone poem on the programme than in the question whether Dr. Carl Muck will conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" at some time during the course of the concert.

To say the least, the German leader's avowed refusal to play the national anthem for his American audiences shows a lack of tact. Howeverer averse one may be to mixing war with art, it is impossible to overlook the significance of certain conventions and traditions, and Dr. Muck, as a successful leader of men, should realize this.

The artistic harmony of "The Star Spangled Banner" with a symphony programme has nothing whatever to do with the question. Strictly speaking it is no more a part of the concert proper than a managerial announcement would be. At a time when the national spirit must be emphasized in every possible way, it is customary for any body of musicians appearing in public to give the audience a chance to hear the national anthem. A symphony orchestra, above all others, should certainly be able to do this with dignity.

Even Doctors of Music Are Credited with Tact.

JOSEPH STRANSKY and Walter Damrosch, the one an Austrian, the other the son of a German, never even raised the question of playing the "Star Spangled Banner" at their opening concerts. It was done as a matter of course.

If either of these conductors felt any artistic qualms, he was too tactful to show it. No musician can seriously enter into an argument concerning the merits of our most important national air. It is sufficient that it is a fundamental part of American life.

Dr. Muck's Prussianism does not interfere with his use of the American language in conversation with his Boston patrons and supporters. Nor does it affect his willingness to dress in the conventional style of this country. Certainy if he attends an American theatre in the future he will pay the customary war tax.

Why, then, should he refuse to observe the most important convention that he now faces? Does Dr. Muck overlook the fact that his attitude makes things all the more difficult for thousands of other Germans in this country, most of whom are sincerely trying to prove their loyalty to America?

Unquestionably the dismissal of Dr. Muck and the threatened disbanding of the Boston orchestra would be a tragedy in the history of American art. But has any conductor the right to assume that he stands so far above his colleagues as to be able to ignore every tradition of etiquette?

Dr. Muck should not ask himself "Why?" but rather, "Why not?" After the ugly rumors which have persisted concerning his private relations with the German government, mere common sense should suggest to the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the advisability of a conciliatory attitude.

[The foregoing was written before the announcement of Dr. Muck's resignation had been made. But its sentiments may well stand in the event of his reconsidering his drastic action.]

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date NOV 3 1917

DR. MUCK'S RESIGNATION.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brings the controversy over his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" to an abrupt end by resigning his post after conducting a performance of the national anthem. If the manner of his leaving was theatrical, the action was heroic and in the best sense professional.

But it was obvious that the question was not one of musical art so much as of patriotism. The Boston conductor's apologists have laid stress on his alien birth, one prominent New York orchestra leader pointing out that as Dr. Muck "is a loyal citizen of Prussia it would be hypocritical for him to conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner' while we are at war with Germany." Dr. Muck himself in a public statement said: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally, one could not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The "hypocrisy" involved being thus the violation of the symphony leader's loyalty to Prussia and not of his loyalty to musical art, the indicated way out of the difficulty was for him to resign. If it was unpatriotic for him to play the American national anthem, it was unpatriotic for him to accept American money in payment for his services. No doubt the controversy has had on its face some of the aspects of a tempest in a teapot. But it is from such small beginnings that serious issues arise, and it is well to have it decided before the question became more acute that patriotism is a consideration to which minor matters of musical prejudice must curtsy in a loyal nation in time of war.

Volkszeitung

ss: New York City.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Muck resigniert.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester spielte Hymne in Boston.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 3. 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6. 1917.

Boston, 2. Nov. Der Dirigent des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, Dr. Muck, trat heute von seinem Posten zurück, unmittelbar, nachdem das Orchester unter seiner Leitung in einem Konzert in der Symphonie-Halle das „Star Spangled Banner" gespielt hatte. Er war der Ansicht, daß es nicht auf ein künstlerisches Programm gehört und sagte, daß ein Gesuch, es zu spielen, ihn in eine unangenehme Situation bringen würde, ja es müßte fast als Beleidigung aufgefaßt werden. Dr. Muck stellte ausdrücklich fest, daß das Lied nicht in New York gespielt werden würde. Das Orchester wird nächste Woche nach New York kommen. Es soll am 9. November in Brooklyn spielen.

Der Leiter des Orchesters, C. A. Ellis, erklärte bezüglich der Entrüstung von gewisser Seite in Providence, daß kein regulärer Abonnent darum ersucht habe, das Lied zu spielen. Major Henry L. Higginson erklärte, daß er das Orchester eher auflösen würde, als daß er sich etwas in das Programm hineinreden ließe. Geraldine Farrar, die ebenfalls unter Ellis' Leitung tourt, sang das Lied gestern abend in Haverhill auf Ersuchen des Mayors.

m EVENING SUN

ress: New York City

e

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ANTHEM

Muck's Resignation as Leader Not Yet Accepted.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony orchestra will play "The Star Spangled Banner" in all its concerts in the future, it was announced by the management here.

From the best information to-day it is understood that Major Henry L. Higginson has not yet accepted the resignation of Director Karl Muck.

The statement that the national anthem will be included in future concerts of the orchestra would seem to indicate there is no intention to disband the famous organization.

From EVENING POST

Address: New York City

Nov 3-17

Date

The proffered resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, because of the "Star-Spangled Banner" controversy, is a cause for deep regret among music-lovers, for Dr. Muck is a rare artist. It was unfortunate, however, that the Boston Orchestra should have made a stand upon the playing of what has become a routine accompaniment of theatrical and musical performances. Our own orchestras, the Philharmonic and the Symphony, found that they could play the national anthem without damaging their musical standing, to say nothing of the patriotic side or of obliging their patrons. On the other hand, for an excited public opinion to try to dictate what opera should be produced and what orchestral numbers played would be a grievous blow to musical art in America. It is stated that there will be no German operas at the Metropolitan this winter. This we think regrettable, if only because it shows less breadth of tolerance than is to be found in London, where they are giving German opera right along, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare. Particularly is this true of Wagner's works. As we have already pointed out, Wagner was one of the most anti-Prussian Germans who ever lived. He hated Prussia and her officialdom, which he frequently denounced, and if he were living could surely be counted upon to be in opposition to-day.

n TIMES

ress: New York City

NOV 3 - 1917

An Artist's Grave Indiscretion.

However painful it may have been for Dr. KARL MUCK to lead his admirable orchestra through the mazes of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and however sincerely as a musician he may disapprove of its progressions and as a German of its associated meaning, it would have been judicious for him, before refusing to play it, to consider the inevitable results of the refusal. Had he done so, a man of his intelligence could not have failed to see that thus and now to offend and irritate the great mass of the American people would not only bring deep disfavor on himself, but would do a disservice of no small importance to every man, woman, and child of German birth or descent now living in the United States.

The first of these penalties, if it had stood alone, it would have been his right to undergo if he chose, but about the infliction of the second it behooved him to consult those upon whom it was bound to fall. It is evident from the present conduct of the great majority of them that, had he done so, they would have protested earnestly against the utterly needless increase of their present embarrassments and difficulties that would follow the starting of a controversy like the one now in progress. They would have reminded him, too, that in consistency he, who was not German enough to refuse from Americans the fairly generous materialization of appreciation in the shape of money and applause, might also refrain from emphasizing his disapprobation of everything now meant to Americans by the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

As it is, he has put all German-Americans more on the defensive than they necessarily are because this country is now at war with the one of their origin, and, as an eminent and representative German musician, he has created a distaste for German music in circles far wider than those to which that feeling otherwise would have been restricted. In other words, his indiscretion has made it harder for us to agree, as most of us would prefer to do, with his own assertion that art knows no frontiers. We still believe that, but when artists insist on being intensely and offensively national, they should not be surprised if art and its exponents are confounded in public criticism.

m WORLD

dress: New York City

te NOV 3 1917

IN THE MATTER OF DR. MUCK.

To the Editor of The World:

Noting the action of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the statement of its leader in the columns of the World and Times of this date, I believe it is time for all thinking, square Americans to let themselves be publicly heard and thoroughly understood. There can be but one of two definitions as to the relationship between the people of a nation and the national anthem of that nation; either it is "sacred" or "profane." If it is the first, if its notes raised in song or instrumental music can and do inspire in the hearts and innermost feelings of every true man, woman and child a feeling of love, loyalty and reverence for the country and what that country stands for, then, in God's name why is it not "art" and therefore sacred? If it is sacred to a people, why is it not "art"? Are we to understand that "art" is a thing apart, only for the few? If so, let us consider carefully whether we want it to become a part of our national American life.

The song or story that will stir a people to the very foundation of their being, calm the tumult of a mob, cause an individual to perform heroic deeds and give up life itself in order that the ideals so expressed may be perpetuated, is, in my judgment, "art" of the highest and most sacred order. The history of nations does not show that such "art" has ever corrupted a people or inspired them to commit murder, rape and other unprintable crimes, such as has been done by the associates and exponents of the so-called "art" and "Kultur" we hear so much about.

If Dr. Muck is so sympathetic to the existing German ideals that are now being expressed by present performances, we can well do without such exponents of "art" and this country would be well rid of him and all such. If Major Higginson's money cannot be used for any better expression of "art" than the ideals expressed by such a leader and such a combination of "artists" and artistic temperaments, then he had better hoard it for his own pursuit of such ideals, and not use it to corrupt further the morals and ideals of those of us who believe that the national anthem is a thing apart, "sacred," and art of the very highest stirring and ennobling every man, woman and child who listens to it, and who can, without a mental reservation or traitorous thought, raise their voices in giving expression to it. We give our all we give our flesh and blood, we can and will give ourselves, if necessary to prove that the ideal "art" thus expressed is of a finer, God-given quality than that which actuates those finely temperamental artists who compose the Boston Symphony Orchestra and who would be "insulted" if asked to play the national anthem of this country, because it is not "art."

JOHN MACINTYRE.

New York, Nov. 1

EVENING MAIL
New York City

RECORD
s: Philadelphia, Pa.

SING LOYAL OR BE SILENT

Frieda Hemple Up Against Ultimatum by Providence Police.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 30.—The Police Commission today withheld the granting of a license for a concert here Sunday by Frieda Hempel, pending a promise by the singer that she will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." While in this city last spring Mme. Hempel refused to include the national anthem in her program, claiming that she did not know it.

"If she does not know it she must learn it by Sunday if she hopes to appear then," the chairman of the commission stated when application was made for a license.

Farrar Sings Only German.

Boston, Oct. 30.—Many protests have been made over Geraldine Farrar's apparent exhibition of sympathy with Germany at a concert in aid of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund, Sunday afternoon. She sang nine songs, all in German, at the only concert to be given before the home folks in the first year of our war with Germany. The orchestra is practically all German, and the director, Karl Muck, has been under fire from the musical press. Mme. Farrar was applauded by the audience in the hope of hearing her sing in English, or one of the arias from the French and Italian operas in which she is adept, but she kept to the German program.

With the Musicians

Why Should Not Dr. Muck Play "The Star Spangled Banner?"—A New Pianist, a Tenor and a Soprano

By SIGMUND SPAETH.

WHEN the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town next Thursday evening, the audience will probably be less interested in the symphony, the overtures and the tone poem on the programme than in the question whether Dr. Carl Muck will conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" at some time during the course of the concert.

To say the least, the German leader's avowed refusal to play the national anthem for his American audiences shows a lack of tact. Howeverer averse one may be to mixing war with art, it is impossible to overlook the significance of certain conventions and traditions, and Dr. Muck, as a successful leader of men, should realize this.

The artistic harmony of "The Star Spangled Banner" with a symphony programme has nothing whatever to do with the question. Strictly speaking it is no more a part of the concert proper than a managerial announcement would be. At a time when the national spirit must be emphasized in every possible way, it is customary for any body of musicians appearing in public to give the audience a chance to hear the national anthem. A symphony orchestra, above all others, should certainly be able to do this with dignity.

Even Doctors of Music Are Credited with Tact.

JOSEPH STRANSKY and Walter Damrosch, the one an' Austrian, the other the son of a German, never even raised the question of playing the "Star Spangled Banner" at their opening concerts. It was done as a matter of course.

If either of these conductors felt any artistic qualms, he was too tactful to show it. No musician can seriously enter into an argument concerning the merits of our most important national air. It is sufficient that it is a fundamental part of American life.

Dr. Muck's Prussianism does not interfere with his use of the American language in conversation with his Boston patrons and supporters. Nor does it affect his willingness to dress in the conventional style of this country. Certainy if he attends an American theatre in the future he will pay the customary war tax.

Why, then, should he refuse to observe the most important convention that he now faces? Does Dr. Muck overlook the fact that his attitude makes things all the more difficult for thousands of other Germans in this country, most of whom are sincerely trying to prove their loyalty to America?

Unquestionably the dismissal of Dr. Muck and the threatened disbanding of the Boston orchestra would be a tragedy in the history of American art. But has any conductor the right to assume that he stands so far above his colleagues as to be able to ignore every tradition of etiquette?

Dr. Muck should not ask himself "Why?" but rather, "Why not?" After the ugly rumors which have persisted concerning his private relations with the German government, mere common sense should suggest to the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the advisability of a conciliatory attitude.

[The foregoing was written before the announcement of Dr. Muck's resignation had been made. But its sentiments may well stand in the event of his reconsidering his drastic action.]

From WORLD
Address: New York City

Date NOV 3 1917

DR. MUCK'S RESIGNATION.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brings the controversy over his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" to an abrupt end by resigning his post after conducting a performance of the national anthem. If the manner of his leaving was theatrical, the action was heroic and in the best sense professional.

But it was obvious that the question was not one of musical art so much as of patriotism. The Boston conductor's apologists have laid stress on his alien birth, one prominent New York orchestra leader pointing out that as Dr. Muck "is a loyal citizen of Prussia it would be hypocritical for him to conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner' while we are at war with Germany." Dr. Muck himself in a public statement said: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally, one could not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The "hypocrisy" involved being thus the violation of the symphony leader's loyalty to Prussia and not of his loyalty to musical art, the indicated way out of the difficulty was for him to resign. If it was unpatriotic for him to play the American national anthem, it was unpatriotic for him to accept American money in payment for his services. No doubt the controversy has had on its face some of the aspects of a tempest in a teapot. But it is from such small beginnings that serious issues arise, and it is well to have it decided before the question became more acute that patriotism is a consideration to which minor matters of musical prejudice must curtsy in a loyal nation in time of war.

Volkszeitung
ss: New York City.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Muck resigniert.

Boston Symphonie-Orchester spielte Hymne in Boston.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 3. 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6. 1917.

Boston, 2. Nov. Der Dirigent des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, Dr. Muck, trat heute von seinem Posten zurück, unmittelbar, nachdem das Orchester unter seiner Leitung in einem Konzert in der Symphonie-Halle das „Star Spangled Banner" gespielt hatte. Er war der Ansicht, daß es nicht auf ein künstlerisches Programm gehört und sagte, daß ein Gesuch, es zu spielen, ihn in eine unangenehme Situation bringen würde, ja es müßte fast als Beleidigung aufgefaßt werden. Dr. Muck stellte ausdrücklich fest, daß das Lied nicht in New York gespielt werden würde. Das Orchester wird nächste Woche nach New York kommen. Es soll am 9. November in Brooklyn spielen.

Der Leiter des Orchesters, C. A. Ellis, erklärte bezüglich der Entrüstung von gewisser Seite in Providence, daß kein regulärer Abonnent darum ersucht habe, das Lied zu spielen. Major Henry L. Higginson erklärte, daß er das Orchester eher auflösen würde, als daß er sich etwas in das Programm hineinreden ließe. Geraldine Farrar, die ebenfalls unter Ellis' Leitung tourt, sang das Lied gestern abend in Haverhill auf Ersuchen des Mayors.

m EVENING SUN
ress: New York City

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ANTHEM

Muck's Resignation as Leader Not Yet Accepted.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony orchestra will play "The Star Spangled Banner" in all its concerts in the future, it was announced by the management here.

From the best information to-day it is understood that Major Henry L. Higginson has not yet accepted the resignation of Director Karl Muck.

The statement that the national anthem will be included in future concerts of the orchestra would seem to indicate there is no intention to disband the famous organization.

From EVENING POST
Address: New York City

Date

The proffered resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, because of the "Star-Spangled Banner" controversy, is a cause for deep regret among music-lovers, for Dr. Muck is a rare artist. It was unfortunate, however, that the Boston Orchestra should have made a stand upon the playing of what has become a routine accompaniment of theatrical and musical performances. Our own orchestras, the Philharmonic and the Symphony, found that they could play the national anthem without damaging their musical standing, to say nothing of the patriotic side or of obliging their patrons. On the other hand, for an excited public opinion to try to dictate what opera should be produced and what orchestral numbers played would be a grievous blow to musical art in America. It is stated that there will be no German operas at the Metropolitan this winter. This we think regrettable, if only because it shows less breadth of tolerance than is to be found in London, where they are giving German opera right along, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare. Particularly is this true of Wagner's works. As we have already pointed out, Wagner was one of the most anti-Prussian Germans who ever lived. He hated Prussia and her officialdom, which he frequently denounced, and if he were living could surely be counted upon to be in opposition to-day.

n TIMES
ress: New York City

NOV 3 -

An Artist's Grave Indiscretion.

However painful it may have been for Dr. KARL MUCK to lead his admirable orchestra through the mazes of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and however sincerely as a musician he may disapprove of its progressions and as a German of its associated meaning, it would have been judicious for him, before refusing to play it, to consider the inevitable results of the refusal. Had he done so, a man of his intelligence could not have failed to see that thus and now to offend and irritate the great mass of the American people would not only bring deep disfavor on himself, but would do a disservice of no small importance to every man, woman, and child of German birth or descent now living in the United States.

The first of these penalties, if it had stood alone, it would have been his right to undergo if he chose, but about the infliction of the second it behooved him to consult those upon whom it was bound to fall. It is evident from the present conduct of the great majority of them that, had he done so, they would have protested earnestly against the utterly needless increase of their present embarrassments and difficulties that would follow the starting of a controversy like the one now in progress. They would have reminded him, too, that in consistency he, who was not German enough to refuse from Americans the fairly generous materialization of appreciation in the shape of money and applause, might also refrain from emphasizing his disapprobation of everything now meant to Americans by the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

As it is, he has put all German-Americans more on the defensive than they necessarily are because this country is now at war with the one of their origin, and, as an eminent and representative German musician, he has created a distaste for German music in circles far wider than those to which that feeling otherwise would have been restricted. In other words, his indiscretion has made it harder for us to agree, as most of us would prefer to do, with his own assertion that art knows no frontiers. We still believe that, but when artists insist on being intensely and offensively national, they should not be surprised if art and its exponents are confounded in public criticism.

m WORLD
dress: New York City

te NOV 3 1917

IN THE MATTER OF DR. MUCK.

To the Editor of The World:

Noting the action of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the statement of its leader in the columns of the World and Times of this date, I believe it is time for all thinking, square Americans to let themselves be publicly heard and thoroughly understood. There can be but one of two definitions as to the relationship between the people of a nation and the national anthem of that nation; either it is "sacred" or "profane." If it is the first, if its notes raised in song or instrumental music can and do inspire in the hearts and innermost feelings of every true man, woman and child a feeling of love, loyalty and reverence for the country and what that country stands for, then in God's name why is it not "art" and therefore sacred? If it is sacred to a people, why is it not "art"? Are we to understand that "art" is a thing apart, only for the few? If so, let us consider carefully whether we want it to become a part of our national American life.

The song or story that will stir a people to the very foundation of their being, calm the tumult of a mob, cause an individual to perform heroic deeds and give up life itself in order that the ideals so expressed may be perpetuated, is, in my judgment, "art" of the highest and most sacred order. The history of nations does not show that such "art" has ever corrupted a people or inspired them to commit murder, rape and other unprintable crimes, such as has been done by the associates and exponents of the so-called "art" and "Kultur" we hear so much about.

If Dr. Muck is so sympathetic to the existing German ideals that are now being expressed by present performances, we can well do without such exponents of "art" and this country would be well rid of him and all such. If Major Higginson's money cannot be used for any better expression of "art" than the ideals expressed by such a leader and such a combination of "artists" and artistic temperaments, then he had better hoard it for his own pursuit of such ideals, and not use it to corrupt further the morals and ideals of those of us who believe that the national anthem is a thing apart, "sacred," and art of the very highest stirring and ennobling every man, woman and child who listens to it, and who can, without a mental reservation or malterous thought, raise their voices in giving expression to it. We give our all we give our flesh and blood, we can and will give ourselves, if necessary to prove that the ideal "art" thus expressed is of a finer, God-given quality than that which actuates those finely temperamental artists who compose the Boston Symphony Orchestra and who would be "insulted" if asked to play the national anthem of this country, because it is not "art."

JOHN MACINTYRE.

New York, Nov. 1.

ELEGRAM

New York City.

68

Mayor Orders an Inquiry on Concert License

Asks Commissioner Bell to Study Method for Compelling Boston Symphony Orchestra to Render Patriotic Hymn Here.

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult."—DR. KARL MUCK.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, agrees to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the concert to be given at Carnegie Hall Thursday night there will be no concert, if there is any legal way to prevent it.

Mayor Mitchel to-day called the attention of George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses, to the announced appearance of Dr. Muck in the city next week. He asked that the law be studied with respect to the authority of the city to stop the concert if the musical director refuses to play the national anthem.

"If there is any way to stop the concert if "The Star Spangled Banner" is not played we'll do so," said Commissioner Bell.

Mr. Bell added that after an investigation of records of licenses, he had discovered that Carnegie Hall is legally entitled to give concerts for one year, and that on this score the concert could not be cancelled.

Mr. Bell has referred the matter to Lamar Hardy, Corporation Counsel, who will investigate to-day what may be done legally to stop the engagement of Dr. Muck here if "The Star Spangled Banner" is not played.

Boston Mayor Orders Dr. Muck to Play National Anthem.

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Mayor Curley has taken an active part in the storm which has been aroused by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the series of concerts which the orchestra is to give in New York next week. Dr. Muck's refusal to conduct the national anthem is upheld by Major Henry L. Higginson, banker and patron of the orchestra, which is one of the leading musical organizations of the United States.

The bitterness of the controversy threatens to end the career of the organization. Maor Higginson has issued a warning that if persons who are not subscribers insist on dictating the programmes the orchestra probably will disband.

Mayor Curley has directed that the license of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra, be revoked if Dr. Muck persists in his refusal. He agrees with Major Higginson that there will be no concerts if the anthem will not be played, "because they will not be allowed."

Major Higginson has refused to order the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" because he declares the anthem "has no place in art." Dr. Muck has not played it, his friends say, because he is a German and a German sympathizer.

"Artistic Organization."

"Our programme for the New York concert is all made up," Dr. Muck said, "and I do not believe will be changed. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization, and we stand in the public mind for very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national consideration. Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed, we would be unworthy of its gratitude and esteem. My aim as conductor will be to continue, as in the past, to give the music-loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best possible manner.

"And, you know, I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Mayor Curley said:—"We do expect him to do exactly what an American citizen does so long as he stays here and earns his living. Major Higginson said that if the license of the hall is revoked there will be no more concerts, meaning that he would withdraw his support from the orchestra.

"He's right, there won't be if the organization declines to be patriotic. We are not going to stand for any organization that won't play our national anthem. I am going to write Major Higginson and suggest that he make it unnecessary for me to act, but if he fails to heed the suggestion I will act, and act promptly.

"The orchestra will either play 'The Star Spangled Banner at all its concerts in this city or there will be no concerts. This is final, no matter what any one else may rule to the contrary.

"Major Higginson should realize that we are at war and that it is the duty of every man who lives among us to be patriotic. Some one connected with the orchestra has said that it is not the custom to play the national anthem at the orchestra concerts. It isn't custom to send our boys to the trenches, but they are over there, and we are going to back them up to the limit."

Knows He Is Pro-German.

Major Higginson, his friends says, fears that if he orders the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" Dr. Muck will resign.

"I know Dr. Muck is pro-German, and I do not expect him to be anything else if he is honest," said Major Higginson.

Mr. Higginson also admits that he knows that Dr. Muck is a friend of Count von Bernstorff.

"The future of the orchestra," he declared, "depends on the attitude of the public toward it from now on. If the public insists that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played, the orchestra probably will disband. I am not going to let the people who are not subscribers interfere with the programme. If they do, I will withdraw my support, which I have given the orchestra for thirty-six years and that will be the end of it.

"The programme for the concerts was made up last summer. I had nothing to do with them and the public should not interfere. Why should 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played at these concerts?

(Continued on Page Seven.)

(Continued from First Page.)

"Supposing that 'The Star Spangled Banner' were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any musicians? If you were living in Berlin or Vienna, would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans, and if you did, do you suppose that anybody would believe you?"

Other officials of the orchestra declare they do not know what attitude Maor Higginson will take when he fully realizes what a tempest has been raised by the refusal to play the national anthem.

"Between you and me, I believe he will relent," said one of them. "It's his orchestra and it is up to him, not Dr. Muck, to decide questions of this kind."

Fly No American Flag.

Following upon the wave of indignation that has swept the country since Providence residents denounced the orchestra, Mayor Curley has discovered that the American flag has not been flown from Symphony Hall, despite the fact that the national colors wave from every surrounding building in the Back Bay.

The officials in charge of Symphony Hall were immediately communicated with and promised that an American flag would be flying from the hall to-day.

"I haven't given the matter a thought and did not know whether the flag was flown from Symphony Hall or not," explained Major Higginson. "It was an oversight," was the explanation of another official, "but I will see that the Stars and Stripes are flying to-day."

"And he had better see that it is," Mayor Curley told the EVENING TELEGRAM correspondent. "We have had about all of this sort of thing we are going to stand. I have done a lot of investigating since my return from New York and have reached the conclusion that some of our esteemed citizens as well as the Germans in the orchestra need a little attention. I have been told that at the last Symphony concert given here they played about ten German compositions and not a single American air.

"It did not amaze me to find out that the American flag has not been flying over Symphony Hall. But if I know Boston its public sentiment will take care of that sort of thing.

"Pending several things I have in mind I have asked the city's law department for opinions on one or two questions. Meanwhile Major Higginson had better accept friendly advice and have 'The Star Spangled Banner' included in the orchestra's repertoire."

WALTER DAMROSCH EXPRESSES OPINION

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society of New York, said, commenting on Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner":—

"Dr. Muck is a loyal citizen of Prussia where he has lived the greater part of his professional life. He is in this country at present not because of his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson, the patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is without doubt a loyal American, and who would not insist on the retention of Dr. Muck as conductor of his orchestra at this time if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's strictly honorable attitude in a very trying position.

STANDARD UNION

ss: Brooklyn, N. Y. NOV 3 1917

The Strange Case of Dr. Muck.

It is regrettable that Dr. Karl Muck felt impelled to resign as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchesta because patrons insisted upon "The Star Spangled Banner" being played, but it is better that he step out of public view, great as the loss to music would be, than to continue an affront to the country by refusing to play the National hymn.

"How can you expect me," Dr. Muck is quoted as saying, "a loyal German citizen, to play 'The Star Spangled Banner'?" A German musician too loyal to play that hymn ought to be too loyal to accept American gold. This he has been doing ever since we went to war with Germany. His love for the Kaiser should have forbidden him to accept any favor from Americans if he is so loyally German as to feel humiliated at leading an orchestra playing our anthem. Indeed, one might conclude from Dr. Muck's attitude that "The Star Spangled Banner" is an American Hymn of Hate with Germany as the object of the hate.

But the leader of an American orchestra, even though a Potsdam Prussian, which Dr. Muck is not, should not have his conscience disturbed by playing our National air, regardless of the fact we are at war with Germany. In a sense he is here as a guest and is employed to give Americans the music they desire.

We owe something to this musician for what he has done to raise the standard of music in this country and he owes much to us, enough, certainly, to yield the point especially as Americans were perfectly willing he should continue at his post after the declaration of war.

rom HERALD

ddress: New York City

)ate NOV 3

Chickens Just Will Keep to the Habit of Coming Home to Roost:

The name of Dr. Karl Muck, who would not play the "Star Spangled Banner," nowhere appears among the honorary vice presidents of Hohenzollernism along with that of Judge John T. Hylan, but among those always present was Dr. Edmund Robert Otto von Mach, who is recalled in connection with an hysterical interest in "milk for German babies" manifested, curiously enough, just at a time when the German government was manifesting a similar interest in the value of condensed milk in the manufacture of explosives. Dr. Edmund Robert Otto von Mach's was not, however, the only name of prominence in the Hohenzollern propaganda in this country that kept nestling close to that of Judge John T. Hylan in the days of the propaganda's high watermark back in 1915. A run through the lists of honorary vice presidents—of whom Judge John T. Hylan was one—shows such names as Schweitzer, Kipper, Weismann, Stoehr, Muensterberg, Hirth, Von Briesen, Koempel, Meyer, Siegel, Sachs, Becker, Loch, Schurmann, Heitmann, Wilhelm, Haas, Patchke, Diehl, Meistering, Kuehnling, Wirbelauer, De Walch, Michel and others smacking of Hohenzollernism.

Some of the men whose names appear on those lists do not happen to reside in New York and in consequence cannot be expected to take a part in a New York municipal campaign; but of the others can there be any doubt that, for the sake of auld lang syne and in a spirit of hearts that beat as one, many are lined up behind Judge Hylan in his candidacy for Mayor?

Not all of the bad company he kept clings to the Judge. Here comes the Gaelic American with a loud cry of "Votes for Hillquit!" when, if memory serves, the name of Mr. John Devoy was high on the list of the honorary vice presidents of Friends of Peace, even above that of Judge Hylan. The Gaelic American thinks all German-Irishmen should vote for Hillquit, because "voting for him will be voting against the war and all war measures"—which it will be. The moral of that tale is that the German-Irishman wants nothing of half-way measures. He is so steeped in his Hohenzollernism that he joins hands with the Bolsheviki in supporting Mr. Hillquit and forgets how Judge Hylan lent his name to Hohenzollernism in the days of the Friends of Peace—and of the Kaiser.

AMERICAN

New York City.

Dr. Muck Conducts National Anthem.

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert here to-day.

In announcing that the national anthem would be added to the programme, Major Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience to-day Major Higginson said that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the programme.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage. When "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration. Symphony Hall officials said the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

N.Y. Herald Nov. 3, 1917

New York Ready to Force Dr. Muck to Play Anthem

New York city was ready for Dr. Muck and his anti-Star-Spangled-Bannerism yesterday before musicians and officials heard the news that he had resigned the directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and that the national anthem would be played at all concerts on its tour. In the first place George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses, announced he would revoke the concert license of Carnegie Hall if the anthem was not played by the Boston orchestra here. Then Lamar Hardy, Corporation Counsel, intimated that the license might be revoked before the concert unless assurances were satisfactory.

While musicians were discussing the Muck incident in half whispers the atmosphere was cleared by Colonel Roosevelt who was inspecting a public school and heard the children play and sing "America." Then he turned to their teacher and said:—

"The sight of these youngsters playing 'America' reminds me that the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra climbed up on his high horse and refused to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' during his classic programme. My opinion is that he who refuses to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' should close up shop and go back to where he came from."

"It was the only solution," Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society and the Oratorio Society of New York, said last night when told of Dr. Muck's resignation. "Dr. Muck had ridden himself into a box by his foolish remarks."

Members of the Brooklyn Institute, especially those who are regular subscribers for the series of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts arranged under institute auspices, are much interested in the controversy as to whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead his men through the "Star Spangled Banner." One or two requests for the anthem to be played at the first concert on November 9 in the Brooklyn Academy of Music were received yesterday, but no formal protest has been made to the trustees of the institute, who cannot consider the question until their regular meeting, which is not until November 8.

"In view of the present conditions," said Dr. Charles D. Atkins, the director, yesday, "it would seem that no great jar to the art sense would follow an occasional playing of 'America' at the concerts in deference to the American sentiment of patriotism. Yet patriotic music is not symphony music and it is not particularly appropriate on a symphony programme."

BALTIMORE AROUSED AT DIRECTOR'S STAND

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BALTIMORE, Md., Friday.—Before it became known in Baltimore to-day that Dr. Karl Muck had resigned as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this city became very much excited over his attitude on the question of playing the "Star Spangled Banner" at his concerts. Edwin Warfield, formerly Governor, a fiery patriot of the old school, appeared before the Police Board demanding that no permit be issued for the scheduled concert by the orchestra here next Wednesday evening unless the national anthem was played at the outset. He told the Police Commissioners they were inviting rioting and serious disturbance if they did not take action at once. The board declined to interfere.

HERALD

New York City

NOV 3 1917

DR. MUCK, DIRECTOR OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, RESIGNS AND ANTHEM CLOSES CONCERT

Major Higginson Has Not Determined on Acceptance of Resignation.

ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR COMING TOUR

"The Star Spangled Banner" Will Be Included on Programme in All Cities.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Yielding to public opinion, which has been aroused since the Boston Symphony Orchestra failed to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence on Tuesday night, the orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading, closed its programme at a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon with the national anthem.

Before this Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr. Karl Muck, German leader of the organization, had submitted his resignation and that in the future the orchestra will include the national anthem in all its programmes.

Whether Dr. Muck's resignation will be accepted has not been decided by Mr. Higginson, but it is believed that he will make every effort to induce Dr. Muck to remain.

Mr. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, told a HERALD reporter to-night that so far as he knows Dr. Muck will lead the orchestra in its concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn next week and in Symphony Hall, Boston, to-morrow afternoon.

Dr. Muck declined to see reporters to-night, and it is said that he will not make any statement.

Mr. Higginson in his address to the audience, delivered after Dr. Muck had walked to the front of the platform, bowed, and received applause, he said:—"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' and they have complied. They have never refused. Last spring at my urgent request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore the matters rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Major Higginson later told reporters that Dr. Muck has never refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and made no objections when requested to-day to do so.

Had the orchestra failed this afternoon to play the national anthem the license of Symphony Hall would have been revoked by Mayor James M. Curley.

In the audience this afternoon was Miss Geraldine Farrar, who last night by request of citizens of Haverhill sang "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in which she appeared in that city.

The orchestra will be in Philadelphia on Monday, Washington Tuesday, Baltimore Wednesday, New York Thursday night, Brooklyn Friday night and New York on Saturday afternoon, and will return to Boston the next day.

Walter Damrosch Assails Dr. Muck's Stand as Cowardly

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, "How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?" fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

WALTER DAMROSCH
MISHKIN PHOTO

But the explanation that he gives to this morning's papers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?"

Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by "military bands and ballroom orchestras?" He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war, and that, even though he is an "enemy alien," the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

DR. KARL MUCK

Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the répertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter.

Walter Damrosch

No. 146 East Sixty-first Street, November 2, 1917.

WORLD
s: New York City
NOV 3 1917

70

n TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM HERE

Gives Selection in Boston After Resigning as Director.

FLAYED BY W. DAMROSCH

Roosevelt Shocked, Says Leader Should Be Interned.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the close of its concert in the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening. By so doing it will obviate the storm of criticism which threatened to break not only over the head of Dr. Karl Muck, the director, but over the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences if they permitted the program to go through without the national anthem.

Assurance that the national air will be played was given when the orchestra, undeh the baton of Dr. Muck himself, played it at the close of the weekly public rehearsal in Boston yesterday afternoon. Dr. Muck, however, resigned before he bowed to the stress of public criticism. He will continue to direct the orchestra pending a decision on his resignation, which apparently may not be accepted unless the antagonism which he has aroused jeopardizes the usefulness of the organization.

In announcing the orchestra's change of policy, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron, said from the stage: "I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Dr. Muck has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Musical critics are not particularly placated by the ungracious way in which Dr. Muck yielded. Walter Damrosch characterized Dr. Muck's attitude as cowardly and said:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our National anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives in the newspapers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?'

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the National anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ballroom orchestras?'

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the reported exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Col. Roosevelt, who was a visitor at Public School No. 45, in the Bronx, yesterday afternoon, while the pupils sang "The Star Spangled Banner," took occasion to comment on the attitude of musical critics who have sided with Dr. Muck in his controversy over the national anthem.

"I am shocked, simply shocked, to learn that anybody can apologize for Dr. Muck, on the ground that the music is not artistic, but only patriotic," said the Colonel. "No man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play 'The Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up. If Dr. Muck will not play it, he ought not to be at large in this country."

MUCK PLAYS NATION'S AIR FOR SWAN SONG

He Resigns as Conductor, Then Leads Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner."

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conductin, at the afternoon concert here to-day.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the programme, Major Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, which would be seriously considered. He added that Dr. Muck and the orchestra never had refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the programme.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage, and when "The Star Spangled Banner" was given as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration. The Symphony officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing Dr. Muck's resignation, Major Higginson said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Advices received here from Philadelphia to-day are to the effect that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at the Symphony concert there on Monday. An "underground plan" is said to be on foot there to have the audience begin singing the anthem the instant Dr. Muck walks upon the stage.

The Stars and Stripes made its first appearance on the front of Symphony Hall to-day. Following the declaration of the Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management draped a large one over the main entrance. It is believed the order to display the flag came from Major Higginson.

DR. KARL MUCK
© by CARO.

DAMROSCH SCORES ATTITUDE OF MUCK

Noted Conductor Blames Him

Major Higginson Responsible for Orchestra's Conduct

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an interview with the United Press here today, declared that he alone is responsible for the conduct of the orchestra.

Dr. Muck, the leader, he declared, cannot be blamed for failure to include the national anthem in its concerts. "Dr. Muck has conducted himself as a gentleman throughout," Major Higginson declared. "When I asked him to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' he did so. He never refused."

Major Higginson declined to say what action he will take on the resignation of Muck.

"The matter is my affair," he declared.

When asked why the "Star Spangled Banner" had been termed inartistic, Major Higginson said: "I do not care to go into a definition of art. I don't think there is a definition covering this question. My private opinion is that the 'Star Spangled Banner' has not a place in concert music."

Major Higginson asserted that before the concert at Providence early this week a request that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played came to him from a number of women not subscribers to the concert.

"The request came to me personally," Major Higginson continued, "and I went to Providence at once. If there was going to be a fight I wanted to be in it. I stopped the sale of tickets to avoid any trouble."

Germany, to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude.

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ball-room orchestras?' He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty at a time when our Nation is at war, and even though he is an 'enemy alien,' the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization, and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air, engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Col. Roosevelt was thoroughly stirred by Dr. Muck's attitude. "I think he ought to be interned promptly," said Mr. Roosevelt. "I am shocked at those who apologize for him on the ground that it is an artistic and not a patriotic matter. In times like these no man has any business to be engaged in any work that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot play 'The Star Spangled Banner' it should be made to shut up for the duration of the war."

Caustic remarks were made about Dr. Muck at a meeting of the Theatre Assembly, which was attended by 1,000 members in the Hotel Astor yesterday. Mrs. J. Christopher Marks, the Secretary, in the course of a talk said that in her opinion Dr. Muck should be sent back to Germany by the first steamship. The Chairman of Discussion, Mrs. Albert Leon Page, remarked that Mrs. Marks's remedy was far too good for the conductor, and that she would rather see him thrown overboard from the steamer and be forced to swim home.

rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate NOV 3 191

NO GERMAN OPERA AT METROPOLITAN

Directors, of Whom Otto H. Kahn Is Chairman, Announce This Not Unexpected Plan for Season.

There will be no performances of opera in the German language at the Metropolitan this season. This decision was reached and publicly announced late yesterday by the Board of Directors, of which Otto H. Kahn is Chairman, confirming the rumor that German opera would be under the ban.

The decision will eliminate from the repertoire probably all the Wagner works and Beethoven's "Fidelio," although the wording of the announcement—"no performances of opera in the German language"—leaves a loop hole, for some of the Wagner works could be sung in English. This would require an immense amount of work on the part of the principals and chorus and, with ten novelties and revivals on the season's programme, it is most unlikely that it would be attempted.

Leaves Some Artists Idle.

The board's decision will, further, leave no work for such artists as Melanie Kurt, soprano; Margarete Ober, contralto; Johannes Sembach, tenor; Hermann Weil, baritone, and Carl Braun, basso. This contingency the Metropolitan officials have, of course, considered.

The agitation over the attitude of Karl Muck, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with respect to playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" was in no way responsible for the Metropolitan directors arriving at their stand. The matter has been under consideration for some time and the management has been waiting for sentiment on the part of opera patrons to crystallize. Subscribers have been canvassed as to their feelings. Surprisingly few letters have reached the management objecting to German opera and General Manager Gatti-Casazza had his plans ready to put on any of the German repertoire the directors might judge feasible. M. Gatti is one person who is more than delighted to have the matter settled.

There will be plenty of opera, however, with which to fill the twenty-three-weeks season that opens on Nov. 12. The Metropolitan in its prospectus lists more than thirty works from which it may provide a repertoire besides the season's novelties. These operas will be sung in Italian, French and English and in some of them undoubtedly will be heard Miss Frieda Hempel, soprano, and Mme. Matzenauer, mezzo-soprano, who, although their names are German, are serviceable for other than German productions. Indeed, Mme. Matzenauer has applied for American citizenship. One of Miss Hempel's new roles will be "The Daughter of the Regiment."

Some Who Were not Re-engaged.

Mme. Olive Fremsted, American soprano, who was brought back into the company this season to sing Wagner roles, may find it difficult to be provided with parts. Mme. Gadski and Otto Goritz, other long standing members of the organization and interpreters of German roles, were not re-engaged for the season.

The general impression yesterday was that the directors have taken the correct stand and the one that will find general approval. Undoubtedly there are operagoers who would not resent listening to opera sung in the German language, but they are outnumbered by those who would object to it.

WORLD
s: New York City
NOV 3 1917
n TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM HERE

Gives Selection in Boston After Resigning as Director.

FLAYED BY W. DAMROSCH

Roosevelt Shocked, Says Leader Should Be Interned.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the close of its concert in the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening. By so doing it will obviate the storm of criticism which threatened to break not only over the head of Dr. Karl Muck, the director, but over the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences if they permitted the program to go through without the national anthem.

Assurance that the national air will be played was given when the orchestra, undeh the baton of Dr. Muck himself, played it at the close of the weekly public rehearsal in Boston yesterday afternoon. Dr. Muck, however, resigned before he bowed to the stress of public criticism. He will continue to direct the orchestra pending a decision on his resignation, which apparently may not be accepted unless the antagonism which he has aroused jeopardizes the usefulness of the organization.

In announcing the orchestra's change of policy, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron, said from the stage: "I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Dr. Muck has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Musical critics are not particularly placated by the ungracious way in which Dr. Muck yielded. Walter Damrosch characterized Dr. Muck's attitude as cowardly and said:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy suits to Restaurant.

A direct Western Union wire for the ... of election returns is only one of ... features that the Plaza, Flat... avenue and Fulton street, ha... called for the entertainment of t... on Tuesday evening next. ... day night will be gala night. ... addition to the receipt of elec... returns, Manager H. F. Ritchey ... ngaged a number of surprises in ... t, who will appear.

BRINGS SUIT FOR $50,000.

Ernest B. Horwitz began a suit for ... recovery of $50,000 in the New York County Supreme Court against the Thompson-Starrett Company, claiming that on September 15 last the contracting concern "enticed him to Camp Upton, partly by force, by fraud and deceit," and kept him imprisoned until September 20.

For the alleged detention at the military camp, the plaintiff sets up the damages named. The complaint was served on E. W. T. Gray, vice president of the Thompson-Starrett Company. The plaintiff was represented by William S. Bonbet.

CAR RAMS COAL CART.

A New York and Queens County Railway Company trolley car bound south along the College Point Causeway, in charge of Motorman Vanuchi, of ... Cornish street, Elmhurst, ran into the rear of a coal truck owned by A. ... Rion, of 96 Main street, Flushing, ... Tuesday night. George Smith, of 71 Lawrence street, Flushing, who was driving the horse attached to the coal truck, was thrown to the roadway and sustained cuts and internal injuries. The horse was killed. After being treated by Ambulance Surgeon Lowsley Smith was taken to the Flushing Hospital.

MUCK PLAYS NATION'S AIR FOR SWAN SONG

He Resigns as Conductor, Then Leads Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner."

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conductin, at the afternoon concert here to-day.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the programme, Major Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, which would be seriously considered. He added that Dr. Muck and the orchestra never had refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the programme.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage, and when "The Star Spangled Banner" was given as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration. The Symphony officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing Dr. Muck's resignation, Major Higginson said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Advices received here from Philadelphia to-day are to the effect that "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at the Symphony concert there on Monday. An "underground plan" is said to be on foot there to have the audience begin singing the anthem the instant Dr. Muck walks upon the stage.

The Stars and Stripes made its first appearance on the front of Symphony Hall to-day. Following the declaration of the Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management draped a large one over the main entrance. It is believed the order to display the flag came from Major Higginson.

DR. KARL MUCK
© by CARO.

DAMROSCH SCORES ATTITUDE OF MUCK

Noted Conductor Blames Him for Hiding His Bias Under Cloak of Art.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, resented the reasons Dr. Muck has given for refusing to play the anthem. In a statement last evening Mr. Damrosch says:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude.

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ball-room orchestras?' He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty at a time when our Nation is at war, and even though he is an 'enemy alien,' the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization, and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air, engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Col. Roosevelt was thoroughly stirred by Dr. Muck's attitude. "I think he ought to be interned promptly," said Mr. Roosevelt. "I am shocked at those who apologize for him on the ground that it is an artistic and not a patriotic matter. In times like these no man has any business to be engaged in any work that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot play 'The Star Spangled Banner' it should be made to shut up for the duration of the war."

Caustic remarks were made about Dr. Muck at a meeting of the Theatre Assembly, which was attended by 1,000 members in the Hotel Astor yesterday. Mrs. J. Christopher Marks, the Secretary, in the course of a talk said that in her opinion Dr. Muck should be sent back to Germany by the first steamship. The Chairman of Discussion, Mrs. Albert Leon Page, remarked that Mrs. Marks's remedy was far too good for the conductor, and that she would rather see him thrown overboard from the steamer and be forced to swim home.

70
rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate NOV 3 191

NO GERMAN OPERA AT METROPOLITAN

Directors, of Whom Otto H. Kahn Is Chairman, Announce This Not Unexpected Plan for Season.

There will be no performances of opera in the German language at the Metropolitan this season. This decision was reached and publicly announced late yesterday by the Board of Directors, of which Otto H. Kahn is Chairman, confirming the rumor that German opera would be under the ban.

The decision will eliminate from the repertoire probably all the Wagner works and Beethoven's "Fidelio," although the wording of the announcement—"no performances of opera in the German language"—leaves a loop hole, for some of the Wagner works could be sung in English. This would require an immense amount of work on the part of the principals and chorus and, with ten novelties and revivals on the season's programme, it is most unlikely that it would be attempted.

Leaves Some Artists Idle.

The board's decision will, further, leave no work for such artists as Melanie Kurt, soprano; Margarete Ober, contralto; Johannes Sembach, tenor; Hermann Weil, baritone, and Carl Braun, basso. This contingency the Metropolitan officials have, of course, considered.

The agitation over the attitude of Karl Muck, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with respect to playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" was in no way responsible for the Metropolitan directors arriving at their stand. The matter has been under consideration for some time and the management has been waiting for sentiment on the part of opera patrons to crystallize. Subscribers have been canvassed as to their feelings. Surprisingly few letters have reached the management objecting to German opera and General Manager Gatti-Casazza had his plans ready to put on any of the German repertoire the directors might judge feasible. M. Gatti is one person who is more than delighted to have the matter settled.

There will be plenty of opera, however, with which to fill the twenty-three-weeks season that opens on Nov. 12. The Metropolitan in its prospectus lists more than thirty works from which it may provide a repertoire besides the season's novelties. These operas will be sung in Italian, French and English and in some of them undoubtedly will be heard Miss Frieda Hempel, soprano, and Mme. Matzenauer, mezzo-soprano, who, although their names are German, are serviceable for other than German productions. Indeed, Mme. Matzenauer has applied for American citizenship. One of Miss Hempel's new roles will be "The Daughter of the Regiment."

Some Who Were not Re-engaged.

Mme. Olive Fremsted, American soprano, who was brought back into the company this season to sing Wagner roles, may find it difficult to be provided with parts. Mme. Gadski and Otto Goritz, other long standing members of the organization and interpreters of German roles, were not re-engaged for the season.

The general impression yesterday was that the directors have taken the correct stand and the one that will find general approval. Undoubtedly there are operagoers who would not resent listening to opera sung in the German language, but they are outnumbered by those who would object to it.

TIMES
New York City

191

THE NEW

DR. MUCK RESIGNS, THEN PLAYS ANTHEM

Higginson Announces at Boston Concert Symphony Director's Offer to Quit.

ACCEPTANCE NOT CERTAIN

But the Symphony Orchestra Will Play "The Star-Spangled Bonner" at All Its Concerts.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" today, with Dr. Karl Muck, Director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher General Musik Direktor, leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

It was the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, a society event as usual, but without the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading, "'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last Spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

Muck Offers Resignation.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Dr. Muck then appeared on the stage to lead. He shook hands with the Major, and, the audience applauding, stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson changed his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programs.

Tomorrow evening the orchestra will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening; Washington, Tuesday afternoon; Baltimore, Wednesday evening; New York, Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon; Brooklyn, Friday evening.

The management of the orchestra announced after the concert today that the national anthem would be played at every future concert of the symphony, and that Dr. Muck would lead the orchestra until the matter of his resignation had been decided. Apparently Major Higginson has decided to retain the services of his German conductor unless there is public demand for his removal.

Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated Dr. Muck from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien, but The Providence Journal, which started the agitation for the playing of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

Career of the Director.

Karl Muck has been called a "Prussian," from the fact that he has spent many years of his professional life in Berlin; he was born, however, in Darmstadt, Bavaria, Oct. 22, 1859, the son of a Ministerial Councilor of that South German kingdom. Muck was a student at the Universities of Heidelberg and Leipsic, attending also the Leipsic Conservatory, and he took his degree of Ph. D. and made his début as pianist at the Gewandhaus concerts there in the same year, 1880. Soon afterward he went as theatre conductor to Salzburg, Brunn, and Graz; he was "first conductor" in 1886 at Prague, and in 1892, after appearing in Berlin as leader of the Wagner music dramas with Angelo Neumann's traveling opera company, he was engaged as conductor at the German Imperial Opera, a post in which he was associated later with Richard Strauss.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, or rather Major Higginson, its founder, invited Dr. Muck to America some twelve years ago. High Government authority was said to have been invoked to obtain his release for a term of years by the German Emperor. Dr. Muck came to a post which had been held by Georg Henschel, Arthur Nikisch, Wilhelm Gericke, Emil Paul, and again by Mr. Gericke. Returning by his own desire to Berlin at the end of his contract, Muck was briefly followed by Max Fiedler. Long before the war he began another term of service in Boston, and he has been in absolute control of Mr. Higginson's organization, both as to selecting its men and arranging its programs, during both his engagements here.

Played "All German" Programs.

The first disposition to "crticise" Dr. Muck was shown when he opened his season in Boston and on tour with "all German" programs early in the war. Such antagonism as then developed was met with good grace by the orchestra management, but without any sign of diplomatic yielding on the part of Dr. Muck.

Mr. Higginson stood by his conductor, as Boston itself did, not only while the United States remained among the neutral nations, but also after this country entered the war. It was on the first visit afield, at a concert in Providence last week, that the demand for the orchestra to "show its colors" took shape in a call for the National Anthem. Similar action was threatened on next week's tour of New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore.

That the storm of protest, which became nation-wide in two days, could have been moderated had the orchestra anticipated the change in popular feeling and avoided a refusal of the demand was a general opinion among musicians here in New York, where "The Star-Spangled Banner" had opened both the leading local orchestra series. Fritz Kreisler was under the Boston Symphony management or that of its chief, C. A. Ellis, it was pointed out, yet the Austrian violinist had been more popular than ever, although in Europe he took actual part in the war.

Dr. Muck has had the word of the Secret Service that it found no fault with his personal conduct here. After diplomatic relations ended with Germany he resigned from the St. Botolph, a leading Boston social club, and, he lived near Bar Harbor last Summer in a house whose owner had maintained a wireless outfit. That fact, though told frankly at the time, led to unpleasant talk, for which again Dr. Muck was declared in no way responsible by the navy officers on that part of the coast.

Whether Major Higginson's bowing to public sentiment in Boston would make it possible for him to refuse Muck's resignation and for the orchestra to go on with its old leader was a matter of much speculation in New York last night.

Criticised by Damrosch.

Walter Damrosch last night issued the following statement regarding the reported refusal by Dr. Muck to play "The Star-Spangled Banner.":

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said: 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair-minded Americans would have accepted this attitude. I, myself, would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives to this morning's papers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Way will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself, and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore, it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?"

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ballroom orchestras'? He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty at a time when our nation is at war, and even though he is an 'enemy alien,' the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the reported exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this Winter.

"WALTER DAMROSCH."

SEND DR. MUCK BACK, ROOSEVELT ADVISES

Would Have Those Who Refuse to Play Our Anthem Pack Up and Go Away.

Under the auspices of the Committee on Public Education of 50 East Forty-second Street, which has many social workers and several Board of Education members among its Directors, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt paid a visit to "Gary-ized" Public School 45, at 189th and Hoffman Streets, yesterday morning. He arrived at the school about 10 A. M. and, after being introduced to Angelo Patri, the Principal, was led into the pottery department, where a score of boys were engaged in plastic molding, and where he was photographed with two of the boys who were at work on a model in clay. Entering the music room he found a group of pupils singing "America," under the direction of Miss Helen Patrick.

"The sight of these youngsters singing so patriotically reminds me by contrast of Karl Muck, the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has refused to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner' during his classic program," Colonel Roosevelt exclaimed. "Any man who refuses to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner' in this time of national crisis, should be forced to pack up and return to the country he came from."

The Colonel next visited the printing shop, where a poem composed in honor of the distinguished visitor, by fourteen-year-old Edgar Deane, had just been run off the press. Edgar also operates the press, and Colonel Roosevelt insisted on receiving four copies of the poem so he could send one to each of his four sons in France. After visiting the departments of domestic science, sewing, drawing and the conventional study classes, Colonel Roosevelt said:

"Before leaving, I want to emphasize the need of introducing hours for play in our city schools. These play hours are not necessary in the country. But without them in the city schools, the pupils are obliged to play in the dangerous streets. This is one reason for giving the Gary system a thorough trial here. Public school pupils should also be taught to work with their hands as well as their brains. My own sons were instructed in mechanics as well as in book learning, and their mechanical education is now standing them in good stead in the war zone abroad."

Before leaving the school, Colonel Roosevelt was introduced to Mrs. Harry Arthur of 690 Union Avenue, the Bronx, who is the mother of eleven children. Her eldest son is a soldier in the Seventh Regiment.

"I am glad to greet Mrs. Arthur as the glorious apostle of that army of American women who are opposed to race suicide, and also as the mother of a soldier," Colonel Roosevelt said as he bowed.

TRIBUNE
ss: New York City

Dr. Muck Plays National Air, Then Resigns

Boston Symphony Director Enters Silent Protest After Submitting

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, Nov. 2—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, waved his baton this afternoon while the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

A flag floated from the pole above Symphony Hall, the audience stood during the playing of the national anthem and the structure rocked with the storm of applause that was prompted, partly by sentiments of patriotism, partly at the change of attitude on the part of the director, who also is leader of the Royal Opera, of Berlin, and Koeniglicher Preussischer General Musik Direktor.

Then Dr. Muck resigned. The resignation was announced from the stage by Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the Symphony. He said that he had asked the orchestra to play the national anthem, adding that the orchestra never had refused to play it. He did not say, however, that the resignation of the leader had been accepted.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands," said Major Higginson, "that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

The playing of the national anthem this afternoon came as a climax to the controversy that began more than a week ago, when, at a concert given by the orchestra in Providence Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the request of several members of the audience. Later, he issued a statement in which he said that it was "very embarrassing" for a man of his artistic temperament to be asked to play such a selection, adding that to insist "was almost an insult." Major Higginson backed up this assertion by announcing that he would close up Symphony Hall and disband the orchestra if the public persisted in the demand that the national anthem be played as a part of its programme.

This afternoon's programme technically was the public rehearsal of the orchestra, which usually is a society event. To-day, however, the hall was crowded not only with its usual patronage but many others who sought seats in order to see the outcome of the "Star-Spangled Banner" controversy. It had been reported that the license of the orchestra would be revoked unless the anthem was played, and it was believed that the afternoon performance would test the strength of the director.

It is thought that the orchestra now will play the anthem at every concert given in the future. There has been no announcement to that effect, however. To-morrow evening the orchestra plays its regular weekly concert. On Monday evening it will play in Philadelphia, Tuesday in Washington, Wednesday in Baltimore, Thursday in New York, with an additional concert there Saturday afternoon, and Friday evening in Brooklyn.

When asked about the future policy of the orchestra in the matter of playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," Charles A. Ellis, its manager, said that only to-day had been arranged for, but that the orchestra would abide by the wishes of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had asked that the anthem be played, and that was why it had been omitted.

Since the outbreak of the war with Germany neither Dr. Muck nor his wife have taken any part in the city's social activities. On all questions pertaining to the war he has kept a persistent silence. No expression of opinion could be had from him at any time by the press, whose curiosty was whetted through persistent reports as to the presence of German spies in the orchestra. The Muck home in Maine was searched last summer by Federal agents.

Colonel Would Intern Dr. Muck as an Alien

Colonel Roosevelt, who was a visitor at Public School 45, in The Bronx, yesterday afternoon, while the pupils sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," took occasion to comment on the attitude of musical critics who have sided with Dr. Muck in his controversy over the national anthem.

"I am shocked, simply shocked, to learn that anybody can apologize for Dr. Muck, on the ground that the music is not artistic, but only patriotic," said the Colonel. "No man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up. If Dr. Muck will not play it, he ought not to be at large in this country."

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, issued a statement during the afternoon in which he denounced Dr. Muck's previously made explanations of his attitude as cowardly and evasive. He said that if the Boston orchestra leader had explained that as a citizen of Germany he could not conscientiously play the American national anthem while his country was at war with this one, every fair minded person would have accepted that explanation.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past," he said.

N.Y. HERALD Nov 3, 1917.

ewspaper Cutting

SUN

ess: New York City.

72

NOV 3 - 19

METROPOLITAN DIRECTORS BAR GERMAN OPERA

Announcement Is Made That Thirteen Works Are Put Under the Ban.

WOMEN OF SOCIETY THREATENED PROTEST

Mr. Kahn, Chairman, Declined to Discuss Reported Dissensions at Board Meetings.

Following the nation wide protest caused by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the national anthem and the outcry here against music of German origin, the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company yesterday announced that no performances in the German language will be given during the present season.

The directors of the Metropolitan, known as an especially closely knit and smoothly running group, had for the first time in several years been torn with serious dissension on this subject, a small minority favoring a continuance of some German operas.

Giulio Gatti-Cassaza, general director of the Metropolitan, has in his care matters pertaining to the repertory and personnel of the art and music of the opera.

Mr. Gatti-Cassaza, who is Italian, having built up his organization to include German opera—thirteen such presentations were on his list for this year out of a total of more than fifty operas—was at first loth to disrupt it, regarding Wagnerian opera as a necessary complement to a well rounded season, and he also had on his hands several German singers. He had not much to say on this particular matter of policy, because the Board of Directors had not indicated that a change of policy was to be made, although it was being considered.

Ban Announced on Friday.

Meanwhile the directors at several meetings battled it out among themselves. All considerations were swept aside following the stand taken by Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a German, in protesting against playing "The Star Spangled Banner," and by evidence of an attitude on the part of many music lovers which seemed certain to lead to harsh criticism or even violence if operas in German were presented upon the Metropolitan stage. Since the invasion of Italy by Austro-Germans the fury of the more excitable elements of Italians has been brought to the notice of the opera management.

The ban on German opera was announced last night following two meetings of directors to ratify the determination already formed by the majority of the Board. It was learned that the directors, all men prominent in society, with Otto H. Kahn as chairman, have been under a constant fire of appeal from the women of society to throw out the German operas. It began to look as though the parterre row of boxes, the famous "diamond horseshoe," would be vacant—a silent protest—on the one night a week it had been intended to have a German opera.

Formal Statement Issued.

One of the directors, the head of a prominent family who has been devoting all his time to patriotic activities and war charities, was especially vigorous from the first in his opposition to German opera this season, and his influence was brought strongly to bear.

The directors of the Metropolitan are:—Otto H. Kahn, chairman; Edmund L. Baylies, Rawlins Lowndes Cottonet, Paul D. Cravath, T. De Witt Cuyler, Robert Goelet, Frank Gray Griswold, Clarence H. Mackay, Edward T. Stotesbury, William K. Vanderbilt, Henry Payne Whitney and Henry Rogers Winthrop.

The complete statement issued officially by the Metropolitan Opera Company is as follows:—

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announces that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

Refuse to Discuss Action.

The directors were uncommunicative as to the details of the break with German opera. Mr. Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the Board, over the telephone from his home in Morristown, N. J., informed a HERALD reporter that for the present no information as to the effect the action would have on the repertory or personnel of the company would be given out. Questioned as to the facts of the case he replied:—

"I have nothing to add to the statement which was sent out by the press department of the Metropolitan Opera Company."

There is nothing in the statement to indicate that German opera will not be presented in English, but it was stated at the opera house that, while nothing definite had been decided upon, there is no reason to believe that German opera will

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 10, COLUMN 4.)

Metropolitan Directors Place Ban on All German Operas for This Season

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE NINE.)

be sung in any language until after the war.

By a queer coincidence there are exactly thirteen operas which come under the ban. Thirteen unlucky operas barred at a Friday meeting of the Board of Directors seems entirely appropriate to the superstitious members of the company, and among opera singers there are few without superstitions.

Aside from the nine Wagnerian operas there are Beethoven's "Fidelio," Gluck's "Orfeo ed Euridice," Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots" and Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro." Of these "Le Nozze di Figaro" and "Orfeo" are sung in Italian and "Les Huguenots" in French, so that there is a possibility of their not being affected.

This leaves a repertory of thirty operas, with ten novelties and revivals to be added.

Several singers were engaged this season especially for German opera, though none of them is German. Mme. Olive Fremstad, for two seasons out of the company, was re-engaged to fill the place made vacant by Mme. Johanna Gadski. Another American, Miss Florence Easton, also was taken for Wagnerian rôles, and Mme. Julia Classen, a Scandinavian contralto, was taken partly for German and partly for Italian and French operas. Several Germans were dropped from the personnel, including Otto Goritz.

The singers who will be most affected by the new ruling are Mmes. Melanie Kurt, Margarete Ober, Margarete Matzenauer and Frieda Hempel; Jacques Urlus, Johannes Sembach, Albert Reiss, Robert Leonhardt, Carl Schlegel, Clarence Whitehill, Herman Weil, Carl Braun and Basil Ruysdael. Messrs. Whitehill and Ruysdael are Americans and Mr. Urlus is a native of Holland. It is not likely that Artur Bodanzky, conductor of German opera, will appear this season, though he might be utilized for the American "Canterbury Pilgrims" or some of the Russian operas formerly directed by Georgi Polacco.

No doubt Mmes. Matzenauer and Hempel will be retained for Italian and French opera, and Clarence Whitehill is as valuable in French as in German works. But details of this character will be arranged later. No official information could be obtained.

At the opera house it was learned early in the week that many letters had been received from subscribers on the question of German opera. The number of petitions to keep Teutonic works in the repertory was far greater than those opposed. Radical changes in the schedule for the season will be necessary, but there is to be no change in the number of performances. With Russian, Italian, French and American operas in the repertory, Mr. Gatti-Cassaza should be able to give opera patrons plenty of variety.

TOO BUSY TO JOIN PATRIOTIC SINGERS

Greenwich Clergyman and School Principal Fail to Stand During Exercises.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

GREENWICH, Conn., Friday.—Ira J. Steiner, principal of the New Lebanon School here, and the Rev. August Blunck, pastor of the German Lutheran Church, East Portchester, Conn., are under fire of patriotic organizations because they remained seated while the pupils stood and sang "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening exercises of the school yesterday.

Asked to explain why he had not stood up with the others, the principal said he was thinking of an important engagement. The clergyman said he was busy conversing with the principal.

Conspicuously displayed on a wall in a handsome home here is a portrait of Von Hindenburg.

MUCK RESIGNS, THEN LEADS U. S. NATIONAL AIR

"Star Spangled Banner" Will Be Part of Programmes in Future.

Washington... Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem and that was why it was omitted.

Three Under Suspicion.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

The management of the orchestra announced that Dr. Muck would lead until the matter of his resignation had been decided.

A despatch from Washington to-day said that the Federal officials were hopeful that the matter would be adjusted amicably, and in view of to-day's performance Dr. Muck will remain at his post.

Walter Damrosch in discussing the announced attitude of Dr. Karl Muck concerning the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra said:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives in the newspapers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?'

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ballroom orchestras'? He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war and that even though he is an 'enemy alien,' the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the reported exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Continued on Seventh Page.

Still They Enlist in "Sun" Fund

DR. MUCK RESIGNS; PLAYS U. S. ANTHEM

Continued from First Page.

GERMAN OPERA BARRED.

Metropolitan Will Take No Chances of Demonstration Here.

"The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announces that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season." This statement was made yesterday in confirmation of the news printed in THE SUN that the directors had decided to put the ban on Teutonic opera this season.

The question whether many of the prominent singers trained in German opera would have their association severed with the Metropolitan has not been settled. However, it was pointed out by an official that these artists had a war clause in their contract by which the management stipulated that their services could be dispensed with if it were ever found necessary because of contingencies due to the war.

Frieda Hampel and Margarete Matzenauer, though coming from the Central Empires, could easily, it was said, fit into a repertoire which had no operas by any of the leading German composers of opera. Mme. Hempel has appeared successfully in "Tosca" and other Italian works, and Mme. Matzenauer, a Hungarian by birth but an Italian subject through marriage, has also sung in Italian and French.

While some of the other German singers have performed in the Latin tongues, it is not expected that they will be necessary to the casts in the French and Italian operas that are contemplated. The prominent members of the company included in this class are Johannes Sembach, Karl Braun, Melanie Kurt and Marguerita Ober.

Comment was made that the decision of the board of directors excluded only operas "in the German language." It was pointed out that this did not prevent the production of an opera like "Tristan and Isolde" in English. There was a likelihood that such a production would be in the opera "Saint Elizabeth," by Franz Liszt, which was the only novelty in German considered this season. Accordingly plans were being made to have it studied in English.

The difficulty of producing works in English, it was pointed out, resulted from lack of proper artists to present them. In response to a wide demand arrangements had been made for a certain number of appearances by Olive Fremstad as Isolde. In view of the flexibility of the arrangement there was a belief in some musical circles yesterday that Mme. Fremstad might see her way to giving the role in English.

Although Wagner and Beethoven have been eliminated there are still a large number of variegated works in the repertoire. For the regular programmes during the season of twenty-three weeks the Metropolitan has at least thirty operas which the company can give at any time. Besides that there are ten novelties in preparation in English, French and Italian.

The decision of the directors was reached only after careful deliberation. It was felt that there might be no intense feeling here against works by Teutonic composers who died years ago, but the directors wished to guard against any eventuality. They felt that an inflammatory circumstance in the war might lead unexpectedly to a demonstration or disturbance during the performance of an opera like 'Die Walkuere," and they wished to avoid all risk.

Incidentally their resolution, it is surmised, has relieved the director, Giulio Gatti-Casazza who is an Italian, of considerable embarrassment.

INTERN MUCK, SAYS T. R.

Shocked That Any One Should Apologize for Conductor.

The refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" has aroused the ire of Col. Roosevelt, and in The Bronx he said that Dr. Muck should be interned at once, and that his orchestra should either play the national anthem or be made to shut up.

"Muck ought not to be allowed at large in this country," he said. "He ought to be interned at once, as should any one who refuses to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one should apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinated to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play the national anthem it ought to be shut up."

THREATS IN BALTIMORE.

Ex-Gov. Warfield Says City Will Not Tolerate Muck.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—Former Gov. Warfield, who is arranging a patriotic meeting for next Tuesday, when informed that Dr. Muck and his Symphony Orchestra had played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day and would play it at the concert by the Symphony here next Wednesday night, said:

"This does not atone for the insult Dr. Muck offered the people of Baltimore where 'The Star Spangled Banner' was born. His slur on the anthem are not wiped away because he gave way. We will stand by the flag and by the anthem in Baltimore."

In a petition to the Board of Police Commissioners the former Governor says:

"Dr. Muck's actions and utterances are an insult to every Marylander and to the American people, and if this man and his associates who entertain contempt for our national flag and our loved anthem are allowed to carry out their programme in this city I believe they will meet with resentment in no uncertain way by our patriotic people. I request that you use whatever power you have to prohibit this concert."

PITTSBURG WARNS MUCK

Play Anthem or Keep Out of City, Is Edict.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, scheduled to appear in Pittsburg January 30, is to be invited to stay away. Adjt.-Gen. H. H. Bengough, retired, says Pittsburg is too big a place for "Blatherskites."

Director Charles S. Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety said this afternoon that Muck will be required to furnish a programme of the pieces he proposes to play when application is made for a license for the concert here. "If he refuses to comply with the patriotic regulations of the country and play 'The Star Spangled Banner' I will refuse him a permit to appear here," the director said.

N.Y. HERALD NOV 3, 1917.

ewspaper Cutting

SUN

ess: New York City.

NOV 3 - 19

72

METROPOLITAN DIRECTORS BAR GERMAN OPERA

Announcement Is Made That Thirteen Works Are Put Under the Ban.

WOMEN OF SOCIETY THREATENED PROTEST

Mr. Kahn, Chairman, Declined to Discuss Reported Dissensions at Board Meetings.

Following the nation wide protest caused by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the national anthem and the outcry here against music of German origin, the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company yesterday announced that no performances in the German language will be given during the present season.

The directors of the Metropolitan, known as an especially closely knit and smoothly running group, had for the first time in several years been torn with serious dissension on this subject, a small minority favoring a continuance of some German operas.

Giulio Gatti-Cassaza, general director of the Metropolitan, has in his care matters pertaining to the repertory and personnel of the art and music of the opera.

Mr. Gatti-Cassaza, who is Italian, having built up his organization to include German opera—thirteen such presentations were on his list for this year out of a total of more than fifty operas—was at first loth to disrupt it, regarding Wagnerian opera as a necessary complement to a well rounded season, and he also had on his hands several German singers. He had not much to say on this particular [illegible], because the Board of Directors had not indicated that a change of policy was to be made, although it was being considered.

Ban Announced on Friday.

Meanwhile the directors at several meetings battled it out among themselves. All considerations were swept aside following the stand taken by Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a German, in protesting against playing "The Star Spangled Banner," and by evidence of an attitude on the part of many music lovers which seemed certain to lead to harsh criticism or even violence if operas in German were presented upon the Metropolitan stage. Since the invasion of Italy by Austro-Germans the fury of the more excitable elements of Italians has been brought to the notice of the opera management.

The ban on German opera was announced last night following two meetings of directors to ratify the determination already formed by the majority of the Board. It was learned that the directors, all men prominent in society, with Otto H. Kahn as chairman, have been under a constant fire of appeal from the women of society to throw out the German operas. It began to look as though the "parterre row of boxes, the famous "diamond horseshoe," would be vacant—a silent protest—on the one night a week it had been intended to have a German opera.

Formal Statement Issued.

One of the directors, the head of a prominent family who has been devoting all his time to patriotic activities and war charities, was especially vigorous from the first in his opposition to German opera this season, and his influence was brought strongly to bear.

The directors of the Metropolitan are:—Otto H. Kahn, chairman; Edmund L. Baylies, Rawlins Lowndes Cottonet, Paul D. Cravath, T. De Witt Cuyler, Robert Goelet, Frank Gray Griswold, Clarence H. Mackay, Edward T. Stotesbury, William K. Vanderbilt, Henry Payne Whitney and Henry Rogers Winthrop.

The complete statement issued officially by the Metropolitan Opera Company is as follows:—

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announces that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

Refuse to Discuss Action.

The directors were uncommunicative as to the details of the break with German opera. Mr. Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the Board, over the telephone from his home in Morristown, N. J., informed a HERALD reporter that for the present no information as to the effect the action would have on the repertory or personnel of the company would be given out. Questioned as to the facts of the case he replied:—

"I have nothing to add to the statement which was sent out by the press department of the Metropolitan Opera Company."

There is nothing in the statement to indicate that German opera will not be presented in English, but it was stated at the opera house that, while nothing definite had been decided upon, there is no reason to believe that German opera will

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 10, COLUMN 4.)

considerable increase in the fighting tivity. After several hours of drum-e strong French forces attacked near aye. Their assault collapsed sanguinily before our line."

The German retreat from points along e historic Chemin des Dames sector on e Aaisne front in France is where for veral months the French troops of Gen-al Petain had been keeping them sharply task.

Just where the retrograde movement ok place and how far it extends cannot t be told, as the German official com-unication announcing it merely says at the Teutons, "unnoticed and undis-rbed by the enemy," systematically ithdrew their lines from the hilly front this region. The entire line to the orth of the Aisne, where the Germans ere last reported as facing the French, undulating in character from the Soisons sector eastward to the vicinity of raonne, and, therefore, it is impossible o delimit from the rather terse acknowldgment of withdrawal the terrain which as been given up.

Nevertheless it seems apparent that the ermans, tired of the terrible ordeal they ad been forced to undergo for some time rom the French artillery and violent inantry attacks, have decided to fall back pon Laon, capital of the Department of he Aisne, which, with its network of ailways, has been the quest of the rench. It is possible, and seemingly robable, that the withdrawal of the ermans will compel also the falling back f the German forces in the turn of the attle line in this region running north-ard to St. Quentin, if, indeed it does not ffect the German positions as far north s Arras.

TEN AIRPLANES ARE SMASHED BY FRENCH

[BY CABLE TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIIS, Friday.—Ten German airplanes ere brought down yesterday by the rench or compelled to land in damaged ndition, the War Office announces.

The artillery battle continues on the sne front. German attacks at [illegible]

MUCK RESIGNS, THEN LEADS U. S. NATIONAL AIR

"Star Spangled Banner" Will Be Part of Programmes in Future.

3 MUSICIANS SUSPECTS

Higginson Defends Conductor in Boston—Damrosch Calls Him Cowardly.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin, and Koeniglicher Preussischer General Music director, leading at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal. As usual it was a society event. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand, was crowded. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each programme was a sheet reading, "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

Dr. Muck Offers to Quit.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the Major and received an ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced he received another tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandoned his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programme. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem and that was why it was omitted.

Three Under Suspicion.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

The management of the orchestra announced that Dr. Muck would lead until the matter of his resignation had been decided.

A despatch from Washington to-day said that the Federal officials were hopeful that the matter would be adjusted amicably, and in view of to-day's performance Dr. Muck will remain at his post.

Walter Damrosch in discussing the announced attitude of Dr. Karl Muck concerning the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra said:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives in the newspapers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by it-

Continued on Seventh Page.

Still They Enlist in "Sun" Fu[illegible]

DR. MUCK RESIGNS; PLAYS U. S. ANTHEM

Continued from First Page.

self and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?'

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by 'military bands and ballroom orchestras'? He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war and that even though he is an 'enemy alien,' the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the great German masters of the past. Witness the reported exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

GERMAN OPERA BARRED.

Metropolitan Will Take No Chances of Demonstration Here.

"The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announces that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season." This statement was made yesterday in confirmation of the news printed in THE SUN that the directors had decided to put the ban on Teutonic opera this season.

The question whether many of the prominent singers trained in German opera would have their association severed with the Metropolitan has not been settled. However, it was pointed out by an official that these artists had a war clause in their contract by which the management stipulated that their services could be dispensed with if it were ever found necessary because of contingencies due to the war.

Frieda Hampel and Margarete Matzenauer, though coming from the Central Empires, could easily, it was said, fit into a repertoire which had no operas by any of the leading German composers of opera. Mme. Hempel has appeared successfully in "Tosca" and other Italian works, and Mme. Matzenauer, a Hungarian by birth but an Italian subject through marriage, has also sung in Italian and French.

While some of the other German singers have performed in the Latin tongues, it is not expected that they will be necessary to the casts in the French and Italian operas that are contemplated. The prominent members of the company included in this class are Johannes Sembach, Karl Braun, Melanie Kurt and Marguerita Ober.

Comment was made that the decision of the board of directors excluded only operas "in the German language." It was pointed out that this did not prevent the production of an opera like "Tristan and Isolde" in English. There was a likelihood that such a production would be in the opera "Saint Elizabeth," by Franz Liszt, which was the only novelty in German considered this season. Accordingly plans were being made to have it studied in English.

The difficulty of producing works in English, it was pointed out, resulted from lack of proper artists to present them. In response to a wide demand arrangements had been made for a certain number of appearances by Olive Fremstad as Isolde. In view of the flexibility of the arrangement there was a belief in some musical circles yesterday that Mme. Fremstad might see her way to giving the role in English.

Although Wagner and Beethoven have been eliminated there are still a large number of variegated works in the repertoire. For the regular programmes during the season of twenty-three weeks the Metropolitan has at least thirty operas which the company can give at any time. Besides that there are ten novelties in preparation in English, French and Italian.

The decision of the directors was reached only after careful deliberation. It was felt that there might be no intense feeling here against works by Teutonic composers who died years ago, but the directors wished to guard against any eventuality. They felt that an inflammatory circumstance in the war might lead unexpectedly to a demonstration or disturbance during the performance of an opera like 'Die Walkuere," and they wished to avoid all risk.

Incidentally their resolution, it is surmised, has relieved the director, Giulio Gatti-Casazza who is an Italian, of considerable embarrassment.

INTERN MUCK, SAYS T. R.

Shocked That Any One Should Apologize for Conductor.

The refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" has aroused the ire of Col. Roosevelt, and in The Bronx he said that Dr. Muck should be interned at once, and that his orchestra should either play the national anthem or be made to shut up.

"Muck ought not to be allowed at large in this country," he said. "He ought to be interned at once, as should any one who refuses to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one should apologize for him on the ground that it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinated to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play the national anthem it ought to be shut up."

THREATS IN BALTIMORE.

Ex-Gov. Warfield Says City Will Not Tolerate Muck.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—Former Gov. Warfield, who is arranging a patriotic meeting for next Tuesday, when informed that Dr. Muck and his Symphony Orchestra had played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day and would play it at the concert by the Symphony here next Wednesday night, said:

"This does not atone for the insult Dr. Muck offered the people of Baltimore where 'The Star Spangled Banner' was born. His slur on the anthem are not wiped away because he gave way. We will stand by the flag and by the anthem in Baltimore."

In a petition to the Board of Police Commissioners the former Governor says:

"Dr. Muck's actions and utterances are an insult to every Marylander and to the American people, and if this man and his associates who entertain contempt for our national flag and our loved anthem are allowed to carry out their programme in this city I believe they will meet with resentment in no uncertain way by our patriotic people. I request that you use whatever power you have to prohibit this concert."

PITTSBURG WARNS MUCK

Play Anthem or Keep Out of City, Is Edict.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, scheduled to appear in Pittsburg January 30, is to be invited to stay away. Adjt.-Gen. H. H. Bengough, retired, says Pittsburg is too big a place for "Blatherskites."

Director Charles S. Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety said this afternoon that Muck will be required to furnish a programme of the pieces he proposes to play when application is made for a license for the concert here. "If he refuses to comply with the patriotic regulations of the country and play 'The Star Spangled Banner' I will refuse him a permit to appear here," the director said.

N.Y. HERALD NOV. 3, 1917.

ewspaper Cutting.

SUN

ess: New York City.

72

NOV 3 - 19

METROPOLITAN DIRECTORS BAR GERMAN OPERA

Announcement Is Made That Thirteen Works Are Put Under the Ban.

WOMEN OF SOCIETY THREATENED PROTEST

Mr. Kahn, Chairman, Declined to Discuss Reported Dissensions at Board Meetings.

Following the nation wide protest caused by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the national anthem and the outcry here against music of German origin, the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company yesterday announced that no performances in the German language will be given during the present season.

The directors of the Metropolitan, known as an especially closely knit and smoothly running group, had for the first time in several years been torn with serious dissension on this subject, a small minority favoring a continuance of some German operas.

Giulio Gatti-Cassaza, general director of the Metropolitan, has in his care matters pertaining to the repertory and personnel of the art and music of the opera.

Mr. Gatti-Cassaza, who is Italian, having built up his organization to include German opera—thirteen such presentations were on his list for this year out of a total of more than fifty operas—was at first loth to disrupt it, regarding Wagnerian opera as a necessary complement to a well rounded season, and he also had on his hands several German singers. He had not much to say on this particular matter of policy, because the Board of Directors had not indicated that a change of policy was to be made, although it was being considered.

Ban Announced on Friday.

Meanwhile the directors at several meetings battled it out among themselves. All considerations were swept aside following the stand taken by Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a German, in protesting against playing "The Star Spangled Banner," and by evidence of an attitude on the part of many music lovers which seemed certain to lead to harsh criticism or even violence if operas in German were presented upon the Metropolitan stage. Since the invasion of Italy by Austro-Germans the fury of the more excitable elements of Italians has been brought to the notice of the opera management.

The ban on German opera was announced last night following two meetings of directors to ratify the determination already formed by the majority of the Board. It was learned that the directors, all men prominent in society, with Otto H. Kahn as chairman, have been under a constant fire of appeal from the women of society to throw out the German operas. It began to look as though the parterre row of boxes, the famous "diamond horseshoe," would be vacant—a silent protest—on the one night a week it had been intended to have a German opera.

Formal Statement Issued.

One of the directors, the head of a prominent family who has been devoting all his time to patriotic activities and war charities, was especially vigorous from the first in his opposition to German opera this season, and his influence was brought strongly to bear.

The directors of the Metropolitan are:—Otto H. Kahn, chairman; Edmund L. Baylies, Rawlins Lowndes Cottonet, Paul D. Cravath, T. De Witt Cuyler, Robert Goelet, Frank Gray Griswold, Clarence H. Mackay, Edward T. Stotesbury, William K. Vanderbilt, Henry Payne Whitney and Henry Rogers Winthrop.

The complete statement issued officially by the Metropolitan Opera Company is as follows:—

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announces that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

Refuse to Discuss Action.

The directors were uncommunicative as to the details of the break with German opera. Mr. Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the Board, over the telephone from his home in Morristown, N. J., informed a HERALD reporter that for the present no information as to the effect the action would have on the repertory or personnel of the company would be given out. Questioned as to the facts of the case he replied:—

"I have nothing to add to the statement which was sent out by the press department of the Metropolitan Opera Company."

There is nothing in the statement to indicate that German opera will not be presented in English, but it was stated at the opera house that, while nothing definite had been decided upon, there is no reason to believe that German opera will considerable increase in the fighting activity. After several hours of drumfire strong French forces attacked near Craye. Their assault collapsed sanguinarily before our line."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 10, COLUMN 4.

The German retreat from points along the historic Chemin des Dames sector on the Aaisne front in France is where for several months the French troops of General Petain had been keeping them sharply at task.

Just where the retrograde movement took place and how far it extends cannot yet be told, as the German official communication announcing it merely says that the Teutons, "unnoticed and undisturbed by the enemy," systematically withdrew their lines from the hilly front in this region. The entire line to the north of the Aisne, where the Germans were last reported as facing the French, is undulating in character from the Soissons sector eastward to the vicinity of Craonne, and, therefore, it is impossible to delimit from the rather terse acknowledgment of withdrawal the terrain which has been given up.

Nevertheless it seems apparent that the Germans, tired of the terrible ordeal they had been forced to undergo for some time from the French artillery and violent infantry attacks, have decided to fall back upon Laon, capital of the Department of the Aisne, which, with its network of railways, has been the quest of the French. It is possible, and seemingly probable, that the withdrawal of the Germans will compel also the falling back of the German forces in the turn of the battle line in this region running northward to St. Quentin, if, indeed it does not affect the German positions as far north as Arras.

TEN AIRPLANES ARE SMASHED BY FRENCH

[BY CABLE TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIIS, Friday.—Ten German airplanes were brought down yesterday by the French or compelled to land in damaged condition, the War Office announces.

The artillery battle continues on the same front. German attacks at [illegible]

MUCK RESIGNS, THEN LEADS U. S. NATIONAL AIR

"Star Spangled Banner" Will Be Part of Programmes in Future.

3 MUSICIANS SUSPECTS

Higginson Defends Conductor in Boston—Damrosch Calls Him Cowardly.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin, and Koeniglicher Preussischer General Music director, leading at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal. As usual it was a society event. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand, was crowded. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each programme was a sheet reading, "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

Dr. Muck Offers to Quit.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the Major and received an ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced he received another tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandoned his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programme. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem and that was why it was omitted.

Three Under Suspicion.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

The management of the orchestra announced that Dr. Muck would lead until the matter of his resignation had been decided.

A despatch from Washington to-day said that the Federal officials were hopeful that the matter would be adjusted amicably, and in view of to-day's performance Dr. Muck will remain at his post.

Walter Damrosch in discussing the announced attitude of Dr. Karl Muck concerning the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra said:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me as a loyal citizen of Germany to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives in the newspapers is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by it-

Continued on Seventh Page.

Still They Enlist in "Sun" Fund

E WEEK

ELIZABETH COOPER,
Author of "The Heart of O Sono San." (Stokes).

and do not depend on the dialect for their humor.

SALUTE TO ADVENTURERS.
(George H. Doran Company.)
By John Buchan. ($1.35.)

An old fashioned yarn of stirring adventure is spun by John Buchan in Salute to Adventurers (George H. Doran Company). A canny Scottish youth back in the Stuart days strays from the road on his way to college and runs first into a scornful young woman and then into a partly insane religious fanatic and his followers. He meets both later in Virginia after he has taken up mercantile life and has sailed to the colonies. He has made friendship with a Scottish adventurer who is a buccaneer and who helps him to defend the border from the indians. He is treated scornfully by the Virginians, who despise his trading activities due to the war.

Frieda Hampel and Margarete Matzenauer, though coming from the Central Empires, could easily, it was said, fit into a repertoire which had no operas by any of the leading German composers of opera. Mme. Hempel has appeared successfully in "Tosca" and other Italian works, and Mme. Matzenauer, a Hungarian by birth but an Italian subject through marriage, has also sung in Italian and French.

While some of the other German singers have performed in the Latin tongues, it is not expected that they will be necessary to the casts in the French and Italian operas that are contemplated. The prominent members of the company included in this class are Johannes Sembach, Karl Braun, Melanie Kurt and Marguerita Ober.

Comment was made that the decision of the board of directors excluded only operas "in the German language." It was pointed out that this did not prevent the production of an opera like "Tristan and Isolde" in English. There was a likelihood that such a production would be in the opera "Saint Elizabeth," by Franz Liszt, which was the only novelty in German considered this season. Accordingly plans were being made to have it studied in English.

The difficulty of producing works in English, it was pointed out, resulted from lack of proper artists to present them. In response to a wide demand arrangements had been made for a certain number of appearances by Olive Fremstad as Isolde. In view of the flexibility of the arrangement there was a belief in some musical circles yesterday that Mme. Fremstad might see her way to giving the role in English.

Although Wagner and Beethoven have been eliminated there are still a large number of variegated works in the repertoire. For the regular programmes during the season of twenty-three weeks the Metropolitan has at least thirty operas which the company can give at any time. Besides that there are ten novelties in preparation in English, French and Italian.

The decision of the directors was reached only after careful deliberation. It was felt that there might be no intense feeling here against works by Teutonic composers who died years ago, but the directors wished to guard against any eventuality. They felt that an inflammatory circumstance in the war might lead unexpectedly to a demonstration or disturbance during the performance of an opera like 'Die Walkuere," and they wished to avoid all risk.

Incidentally their resolution, it is surmised, has relieved the director, Giulio Gatti-Casazza who is an Italian, of considerable embarrassment.

INTERN MUCK, SAYS T. R.

Shocked That Any One Should Apologize for Conductor.

The refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" has aroused the ire of Col. Roosevelt, and

TIME Ne

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City

MUCK GIVES UP; DIRECTS ANTHEM AND THEN RESIGNS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Conducts Musicians in Playing "Star-Spangled Banner"—Major Higginson Says Teuton Never Refused to Play National Air.

NO OPERAS HERE IN GERMAN

Board of Directors of Metropolitan Announce That Teuton Music Will Not Be Sung in That Language During Coming Season — Probably Given in English, as in London.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" today, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher General Musik Direktor, leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

The anthem was played at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, which, as usual, was a society event, with to-day the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a print sheet reading: "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number.' The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last Spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

"Never Refused," Says Patron.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no perosnal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programs. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert given by the Symphony.

To-morrow evening the orchestra will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening; Washington Tuesday evening, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday evening.

Anthem Will Be Played.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchastra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the Symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem, and that is why it was omitted.

There is no doubt, however, that the anthem will be played by the Symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston, where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien, but the Providence Journal, ting of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion. If Dr. Muck's resignation is accepted the work of the Symphony will be little impaired. He has always refused to lead at "pop" concerts, which the Symphony gives in the Spring, considering them beneath his art.

LOCAL INDIGNATION SUBSIDES RAPIDLY

With the news of the calming of the troubled musical and partiotic waters stirred up over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and the rendering of the national anthem by the Teuton orchestra leader in Boston, local indignation subsided rapidly last night.

Where earlier in the day a statement was made by Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell that Carnegie Hall might lose its license if the Boston Symphony director persisted in refusing to play the anthem, the rendering of the piece at Boston by the orchestra automatically solved the situation.

Question Closed, He Says.

Louis Salter, manager of Carnegie Hall, said last night when interviewed by a representative of The Morning Telegraph, that the question was closed by the action taken in Boston. Mr. Salter added that he did not see how the license of Carnegie Hall could be revoked unless a breach of law was committed, but that after all this did not matter inasmuch as the affair had been settled already. When asked as to whether "The Star Spangled Banner" would be included in Thursday night's program by the Boston Symphony, Mr. Salter said that he had no idea as to what the plans of that organization were. He added that the crossing of bridges might well be left until the bridge was reached.

Commissioner Bell's statement, made before the news of the Symphony's action in Boston was learned, follows:

"If Dr. Muck persists in his refusal to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at the concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and the Carnegie Hall management does not take up the matter and compel him to include 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in his program, I will at once institute proceedings to have the concert license at Carnegie Hall revoked. A special license is not necessary for this concert, as Carnegie Hall has a concert license for a year."

NO GERMAN OPERAS, MET. DIRECTORS SAY

According to the announcement of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made late yesterday, no performances of opera will be given in the German language during the coming season. German opera, it was said, would probably be given, but only in English translation, as is now the case in London. It is also likely that the number of German operas in the repertory will be fewer than in other years.

While the action of the Metropolitan board of directors to exclude opera in the German tongue from the program will appear in the light of a patriotic move to many of the public, musicians and music lovers are apt to take a different viewpoint on the subject, to judge by the statements made yesterday by representatives of two of the leading musical journals of the country.

Herbert F. Peyser of Musical America said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them.

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a dividend sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor-in-chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Metropolitan, last Summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

n SUN

ress: New York City.

te NOV 4 - 19

Oh, say can you hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

n TIMES
ress: New York City
e NOV 3 - 19

METROPOLITAN BARS OPERAS IN GERMAN

No Performances in Teutonic Language and German Singers' Careers Here End.

"RING" CYCLE IS DROPPED

The Novelty Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" and Also "Tristan" May Be Given in English Later in Season.

War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, as forecast yesterday, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German rôles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued last night in these words:

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explanation of the directors' final action yesterday, it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

Action Due to General Protest.

The Directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this Fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in yesterday's action.

There will be no "Ring" cycle on the stage that gave the first complete "Nibelungen" tetralogy in the Western Hemisphere back in 1889, and no "Parsifal" in the house that broke in 1903 the monopoly of Bayreuth.

Both Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" and Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" were not reannounced this season, as being the works of living German composers, whose copyrights fall under the ban of "enemy trading." Mozart's "Magic Flute" had been shelved after some years, and Gluck's "Iphigenia," also done in German, had run its course in a single season. There remained Beethoven's "Fidelio," rarely given, and eight Wagner dramas, to which a ninth was to be added, along with a proposed novelty in the "St. Elizabeth" of Liszt.

As the "St. Elizabeth" has been given often as an oratorio in English it may yet be prepared and presented in this language, after some delay. The possibility is also discussed of an English "Tristan" such as Thomas Beecham gave in London to packed houses, once on the night of an air raid by the German Zeppelins.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about thirty productions in the standard repertory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—thirty-nine—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

Five Singers German Subjects.

Only five singers in the Metropolitan's list of more than seventy artists are German subjects, it was said. The five are Mmes. Hempel and Ober and Messrs. Sembach, Weil, and Braun. Of these Mme. Hempel is engaged more for French and Italian, for coloratura rôles, than for German opera. The others will be affected by the change in repertory. Equally affected also are singers from Austria, like Mme. Kurt and Mr. Bloch, with whose country America is not formally at war. Mme. Matzenauer, Hungarian born, is an Italian subject, and Mr. Leonhardt is among those who sing rôles in other languages than their own. Mr. Reiss and others are now, or soon will be, naturalized Americans.

One of the most curious difficulties arising from the situation is that two of the women singers who would become American citizens, one by marriage here, the other by naturalization, are held back by the fact that their property is mostly in Germany and would be confiscated by the German Government if they became American subjects during the war.

Mme. Olive Fremstad, an American though born in Norway, had been engaged to return in her famous German rôles, as well as Tosca, Santuza, and others of the polyglot scheme. Whether she will be able in a season to prepare an Isolde in English words, more difficult than to learn a new rôle, or will be limited to fewer operas, remains to be settled between the singer and Director Gatti-Casazza of the Metropolitan.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 3 1917

DR. MUCK AGAIN PLAYS "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in all concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future, it was announced to-night. Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the organization, led in the playing of the national anthem in a concert to-night and will do so in concerts to be given in New York and Washington next week.

Officials of the orchestra refused to discuss the question of Dr. Muck's resignation, which was offered after a concert yesterday as the climax to a storm of disapproval over the failure of the orchestra to include the national anthem in recent concerts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, has given no indication as to his probable decision on the leader's resignation.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date

SPEAKING of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Professor Muck, what has become of Chris Von Der Ahe's old baseball manager, Carl Muckenfuss?

om SUN.
ldress: New York City.
ate NOV 4 - 19

DR. MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM ON TOUR

Director to Quit if Public Demands Elimination of German Music.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programmes of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Muck credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the Major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more. Major Higginson and the doctor were noncommittal to-day. The Major planned to consult Washington authorities, who are believed to have no objection to Muck.

The symphony embraces more than fourteen nationalities equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente powers. Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians are included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears that the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

"I hardly know what to think," said Dr. Muck to-day. "It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my long connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night."

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me. And now I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all

m MORNING TELEGRAPH

lress: New York City

MUCK GIVES UP; DIRECTS ANTHEM AND THEN RESIGNS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Conducts Musicians in Playing "Star-Spangled Banner"—Major Higginson Says Teuton Never Refused to Play National Air.

NO OPERAS HERE IN GERMAN

Board of Directors of Metropolitan Announce That Teuton Music Will Not Be Sung in That Language During Coming Season — Probably Given in English, as in London.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koenigliche Preussrisher General Musik Direktor, leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

The anthem was played at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, which, as usual, was a society event, with to-day the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a print sheet reading: "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number.' The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last Spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

"Never Refused," Says Patron.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no perosnal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programs. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert given by the Symphony.

To-morrow evening the orchestra will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening; Washington Tuesday evening, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday evening.

Anthem Will Be Played.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchastra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the Symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem, and that is why it was omitted.

There is no doubt, however, that the anthem will be played by the Symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston, where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien, but the Providence Journal, ting of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion. If Dr. Muck's resignation is accepted the work of the Symphony will be little impaired. He has always refused to lead at "pop" concerts, which the Symphony gives in the Spring, considering them beneath his art.

LOCAL INDIGNATION SUBSIDES RAPIDLY

With the news of the calming of the troubled musical and partiotic waters stirred up over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and the rendering of the national anthem by the Teuton orchestra leader in Boston, local indignation subsided rapidly last night.

Where earlier in the day a statement was made by Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell that Carnegie Hall might lose its license if the Boston Symphony director persisted in refusing to play the anthem, the rendering of the piece at Boston by the orchestra automatically solved the situation.

Question Closed, He Says.

Louis Salter, manager of Carnegie Hall, said last night when interviewed by a representative of The Morning Telegraph, that the question was closed by the action taken in Boston. Mr. Salter added that he did not see how the license of Carnegie Hall could be revoked unless a breach of law was committed, but that after all this did not matter inasmuch as the affair had been settled already. When asked as to whether "The Star Spangled Banner" would be included in Thursday night's program by the Boston Symphony, Mr. Salter said that he had no idea as to what the plans of that organization were. He added that the crossing of bridges might well be left until the bridge was reached.

Commissioner Bell's statement, made before the news of the Symphony's action in Boston was learned, follows:

"If Dr. Muck persists in his refusal to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at the concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and the Carnegie Hall management does not take up the matter and compel him to include 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in his program, I will at once institute proceedings to have the concert license at Carnegie Hall revoked. A special license is not necessary for this concert, as Carnegie Hall has a concert license for a year."

NO GERMAN OPERAS, MET. DIRECTORS SAY

According to the announcement of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made late yesterday, no performances of opera will be given in the German language during the coming season. German opera, it was said, would probably be given, but only in English translation, as is now the case in London. It is also likely that the number of German operas in the repertory will be fewer than in other years.

While the action of the Metropolitan board of directors to exclude opera in the German tongue from the program will appear in the light of a patriotic move to many of the public, musicians and music lovers are apt to take a different viewpoint on the subject, to judge by the statements made yesterday by representatives of two of the leading musical journals of the country.

Herbert F. Peyser of Musical America said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them.

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a dividend sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor-in-chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Metropolitan, last Summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

n SUN

ress: New York City.

te _____

Oh, say can you hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

n TIMES

ress: New York City

e _____

METROPOLITAN BARS OPERAS IN GERMAN

No Performances in Teutonic Language and German Singers' Careers Here End.

"RING" CYCLE IS DROPPED

The Novelty Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" and Also "Tristan" May Be Given in English Later in Season.

War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, as forecast yesterday, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German rôles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued last night in these words:

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explanation of the directors' final action yesterday, it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

Action Due to General Protest.

The Directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this Fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in yesterday's action.

There will be no "Ring" cycle on the stage that gave the first complete "Nibelungen" tetralogy in the Western Hemisphere back in 1889, and no "Parsifal" in the house that broke in 1903 the monopoly of Bayreuth.

Both Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" and Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" were not reannounced this season, as being the works of living German composers, whose copyrights fall under the ban of "enemy trading." Mozart's "Magic Flute" had been shelved after some years, and Gluck's "Iphigenia," also done in German, had run its course in a single season. There remained Beethoven's "Fidelio," rarely given, and eight Wagner dramas, to which a ninth was to be added, along with a proposed novelty in the "St. Elizabeth" of Liszt.

As the "St. Elizabeth" has been given often as an oratorio in English it may yet be prepared and presented in this language, after some delay. The possibility is also discussed of an English "Tristan" such as Thomas Beecham gave in London to packed houses, once on the night of an air raid by the German Zeppelins.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about thirty productions in the standard repertory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—thirty-nine—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

Five Singers German Subjects.

Only five singers in the Metropolitan's list of more than seventy artists are German subjects, it was said. The five are Mmes. Hempel and Ober and Messrs. Sembach, Weil, and Braun. Of these Mme. Hempel is engaged more for French and Italian, for coloratura rôles, than for German opera. The others will be affected by the change in repertory. Equally affected also are singers from Austria, like Mme. Kurt and Mr. Bloch, with whose country America is not formally at war. Mme. Matzenauer, Hungarian born, is an Italian subject, and Mr. Leonhardt is among those who sing rôles in other languages than their own. Mr. Reiss and others are now, or soon will be, naturalized Americans.

One of the most curious difficulties arising from the situation is that two of the women singers who would become American citizens, one by marriage here, the other by naturalization, are held back by the fact that their property is mostly in Germany and would be confiscated by the German Government if they became American subjects during the war.

Mme. Olive Fremstad, an American though born in Norway, had been engaged to return in her famous German rôles, as well as Tosca, Santuza, and others of the polyglot scheme. Whether she will be able in a season to prepare an Isolde in English words, more difficult than to learn a new rôle, or will be limited to fewer operas, remains to be settled between the singer and Director Gatti-Casazza of the Metropolitan.

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. MUCK AGAIN PLAYS "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in all concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future, it was announced to-night. Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the organization, led in the playing of the national anthem in a concert to-night and will do so in concerts to be given in New York and Washington next week.

Officials of the orchestra refused to discuss the question of Dr. Muck's resignation, which was offered after a concert yesterday as the climax to a storm of disapproval over the failure of the orchestra to include the national anthem in recent concerts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, has given no indication as to his probable decision on the leader's resignation.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH

Address: New York City

Date____

SPEAKING of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Professor Muck, what has become of Chris Von Der Ahe's old baseball manager, Carl Muckenfuss?

om SUN

ldress: New York City.

ate _____ NOV 4 - 19

DR. MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM ON TOUR

Director to Quit if Public Demands Elimination of German Music.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programmes of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Muck credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the Major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more. Major Higginson and the doctor were noncommittal to-day. The Major planned to consult Washington authorities, who are believed to have no objection to Muck.

The symphony embraces more than fourteen nationalities equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente powers. Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians are included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears that the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

"I hardly know what to think," said Dr. Muck to-day. "It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my long connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night.

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me. And now I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City
NOV 3 - 19

MUCK GIVES UP; DIRECTS ANTHEM AND THEN RESIGNS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Conducts Musicians in Playing "Star-Spangled Banner"—Major Higginson Says Teuton Never Refused to Play National Air.

NO OPERAS HERE IN GERMAN

Board of Directors of Metropolitan Announce That Teuton Music Will Not Be Sung in That Language During Coming Season — Probably Given in English, as in London.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher General Musik Direktor, leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

The anthem was played at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, which, as usual, was a society event, with to-day the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a print sheet reading: "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number.' The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last Spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

"Never Refused," Says Patron.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programs. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert given by the Symphony.

To-morrow evening the orchestra will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening; Washington Tuesday evening, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday evening.

Anthem Will Be Played.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the Symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem, and that is why it was omitted.

There is no doubt, however, that the anthem will be played by the Symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston, where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien, but the Providence Journal, ting of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion. If Dr. Muck's resignation is accepted the work of the Symphony will be little impaired. He has always refused to lead at "pop" concerts, which the Symphony gives in the Spring, considering them beneath his art.

LOCAL INDIGNATION SUBSIDES RAPIDLY

With the news of the calming of the troubled musical and partiotic waters stirred up over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and the rendering of the national anthem by the Teuton orchestra leader in Boston, local indignation subsided rapidly last night.

Where earlier in the day a statement was made by Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell that Carnegie Hall might lose its license if the Boston Symphony director persisted in refusing to play the anthem, the rendering of the piece at Boston by the orchestra automatically solved the situation.

Question Closed, He Says.

Louis Salter, manager of Carnegie Hall, said last night when interviewed by a representative of The Morning Telegraph, that the question was closed by the action taken in Boston. Mr. Salter added that he did not see how the license of Carnegie Hall could be revoked unless a breach of law was committed, but that after all this did not matter inasmuch as the affair had been settled already. When asked as to whether "The Star Spangled Banner" would be included in Thursday night's program by the Boston Symphony, Mr. Salter said that he had no idea as to what the plans of that organization were. He added that the crossing of bridges might well be left until the bridge was reached.

Commissioner Bell's statement, made before the news of the Symphony's action in Boston was learned, follows:

"If Dr. Muck persists in his refusal to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at the concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and the Carnegie Hall management does not take up the matter and compel him to include 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in his program, I will at once institute proceedings to have the concert license at Carnegie Hall revoked. A special license is not necessary for this concert, as Carnegie Hall has a concert license for a year."

NO GERMAN OPERAS, MET. DIRECTORS SAY

According to the announcement of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made late yesterday, no performances of opera will be given in the German language during the coming season. German opera, it was said, would probably be given, but only in English translation, as is now the case in London. It is also likely that the number of German operas in the repertory will be fewer than in other years.

While the action of the Metropolitan board of directors to exclude opera in the German tongue from the program will appear in the light of a patriotic move to many of the public, musicians and music lovers are apt to take a different viewpoint on the subject, to judge by the statements made yesterday by representatives of two of the leading musical journals of the country.

Herbert F. Peyser of Musical America said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them.

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a dividend sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor-in-chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Metropolitan, last Summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

n SUN
ress: New York City.
te NOV 4 - 1917

Oh, say can you hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

n TIMES
ress: New York City
NOV 3 - 1917

METROPOLITAN BARS OPERAS IN GERMAN

No Performances in Teutonic Language and German Singers' Careers Here End.

"RING" CYCLE IS DROPPED

The Novelty Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" and Also "Tristan" May Be Given in English Later in Season.

War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, as forecast yesterday, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German rôles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued last night in these words:

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explanation of the directors' final action yesterday, it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

Action Due to General Protest.

The Directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this Fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in yesterday's action.

There will be no "Ring" cycle on the stage that gave the first complete "Nibelungen" tetralogy in the Western Hemisphere back in 1889, and no "Parsifal" in the house that broke in 1903 the monopoly of Bayreuth.

Both Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" and Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" were not reannounced this season, as being the works of living German composers, whose copyrights fall under the ban of "enemy trading." Mozart's "Magic Flute" had been shelved after some years, and Gluck's "Iphigenia," also done in German, had run its course in a single season. There remained Beethoven's "Fidelio," rarely given, and eight Wagner dramas, to which a ninth was to be added, along with a proposed novelty in the "St. Elizabeth" of Liszt.

As the "St. Elizabeth" has been given often as an oratorio in English it may yet be prepared and presented in this language, after some delay. The possibility is also discussed of an English "Tristan" such as Thomas Beecham gave in London to packed houses, once on the night of an air raid by the German Zeppelins.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about thirty productions in the standard repertory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—thirty-nine—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

Five Singers German Subjects.

Only five singers in the Metropolitan's list of more than seventy artists are German subjects, it was said. The five are Mmes. Hempel and Ober and Messrs. Sembach, Weil, and Braun. Of these Mme. Hempel is engaged more for French and Italian, for coloratura rôles, than for German opera. The others will be affected by the change in repertory. Equally affected also are singers from Austria, like Mme. Kurt and Mr. Bloch, with whose country America is not formally at war. Mme. Matzenauer, Hungarian born, is an Italian subject, and Mr. Leonhardt is among those who sing rôles in other languages than their own. Mr. Reiss and others are now, or soon will be, naturalized Americans.

One of the most curious difficulties arising from the situation is that two of the women singers who would become American citizens, one by marriage here, the other by naturalization, are held back by the fact that their property is mostly in Germany and would be confiscated by the German Government if they became American subjects during the war.

Mme. Olive Fremstad, an American though born in Norway, had been engaged to return in her famous German rôles, as well as Tosca, Santuza, and others of the polyglot scheme. Whether she will be able in a season to prepare an Isolde in English words, more difficult than to learn a new rôle, or will be limited to fewer operas, remains to be settled between the singer and Director Gatti-Casazza of the Metropolitan.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 4 1917

DR. MUCK AGAIN PLAYS "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in all concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future, it was announced to-night. Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the organization, led in the playing of the national anthem in a concert to-night and will do so in concerts to be given in New York and Washington next week.

Officials of the orchestra refused to discuss the question of Dr. Muck's resignation, which was offered after a concert yesterday as the climax to a storm of disapproval over the failure of the orchestra to include the national anthem in recent concerts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, has given no indication as to his probable decision on the leader's resignation.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917
Date

SPEAKING of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Professor Muck, what has become of Chris Von Der Ahe's old baseball manager, Carl Muckenfuss?

om SUN
ldress: New York City.
ate NOV 4 - 19

DR. MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM ON TOUR

Director to Quit if Public Demands Elimination of German Music.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programmes of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Muck credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the Major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more. Major Higginson and the doctor were noncommittal to-day. The Major planned to consult Washington authorities, who are believed to have no objection to Muck.

The symphony embraces more than fourteen nationalities equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente powers. Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians are included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears that the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

"I hardly know what to think," said Dr. Muck to-day. "It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my long connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night."

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me. And now I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City
NOV 3 - 19

MUCK GIVES UP; DIRECTS ANTHEM AND THEN RESIGNS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Conducts Musicians in Playing "Star-Spangled Banner"—Major Higginson Says Teuton Never Refused to Play National Air.

NO OPERAS HERE IN GERMAN

Board of Directors of Metropolitan Announce That Teuton Music Will Not Be Sung in That Language During Coming Season — Probably Given in English, as in London.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" to-day, with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher General Musik Direktor, leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

The anthem was played at the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, which, as usual, was a society event, with to-day the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a flag in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a print sheet reading: "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last Spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

"Never Refused," Says Patron.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no perosnal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with its programs. It is presumed that the anthem will now be played at every concert given by the Symphony.

To-morrow evening the orchestra will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening; Washington Tuesday evening, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday evening.

Anthem Will Be Played.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only to-day had been arranged for so far, but that the Symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons. At Providence, he said, no regular subscriber had requested the anthem, and that is why it was omitted.

There is no doubt, however, that the anthem will be played by the Symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston, where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous enemy alien, but the Providence Journal, ...ing of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion. If Dr. Muck's resignation is accepted the work of the Symphony will be little impaired. He has always refused to lead at "pop" concerts, which the Symphony gives in the Spring, considering them beneath his art.

LOCAL INDIGNATION SUBSIDES RAPIDLY

With the news of the calming of the troubled musical and partiotic waters stirred up over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and the rendering of the national anthem by the Teuton orchestra leader in Boston, local indignation subsided rapidly last night.

Where earlier in the day a statement was made by Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell that Carnegie Hall might lose its license if the Boston Symphony director persisted in refusing to play the anthem, the rendering of the piece at Boston by the orchestra automatically solved the situation.

Question Closed, He Says.

Louis Salter, manager of Carnegie Hall, said last night when interviewed by a representative of The Morning Telegraph, that the question was closed by the action taken in Boston. Mr. Salter added that he did not see how the license of Carnegie Hall could be revoked unless a breach of law was committed, but that after all this did not matter inasmuch as the affair had been settled already. When asked as to whether "The Star Spangled Banner" would be included in Thursday night's program by the Boston Symphony, Mr. Salter said that he had no idea as to what the plans of that organization were. He added that the crossing of bridges might well be left until the bridge was reached.

Commissioner Bell's statement, made before the news of the Symphony's action in Boston was learned, follows:

"If Dr. Muck persists in his refusal to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at the concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and the Carnegie Hall management does not take up the matter and compel him to include 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in his program, I will at once institute proceedings to have the concert license at Carnegie Hall revoked. A special license is not necessary for this concert, as Carnegie Hall has a concert license for a year."

NO GERMAN OPERAS, MET. DIRECTORS SAY

According to the announcement of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made late yesterday, no performances of opera will be given in the German language during the coming season. German opera, it was said, would probably be given, but only in English translation, as is now the case in London. It is also likely that the number of German operas in the repertory will be fewer than in other years.

While the action of the Metropolitan board of directors to exclude opera in the German tongue from the program will appear in the light of a patriotic move to many of the public, musicians and music lovers are apt to take a different viewpoint on the subject, to judge by the statements made yesterday by representatives of two of the leading musical journals of the country.

Herbert F. Peyser of Musical America said that if German operas were banned at the Metropolitan, it would be a victory not for Americanism, but for a "crowd of society people who for the past twenty years had been trying to get rid of German operas because they were not musicians or music lovers and did not care for them.

"The statement that the performance of German operas here during the war will be taken as an evidence to Germany of a dividend sentiment here is too absurd to discuss," said Mr. Peyser, "and it seems a pity that the opinion of the majority cannot rule and not the opinion of a very small minority."

"A majority of the patrons of the Metropolitan have no objection to Wagner opera and are in favor of it as a musical proposition," declared L. L. Leibling, editor-in-chief of the Musical Courier. "Common sense should rule. We are not afraid of German militarism, so why should we be afraid of German music? We are big enough in America, I hope, to appreciate that the masters who wrote the German operas—most of whom have long been dead—and what they wrote are not even relatively connected with the events of to-day."

Mr. Peyser pointed out that Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Metropolitan, last Summer at one of the civic concerts at Central Park had said that art was neutral and that he hoped it would remain so. Both Mr. Kahn and Director Gatti-Casazza, he said, were ardent lovers of German music.

n SUN
ress: New York City.
te NOV 4 - 1917

Oh, say can you hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

n TIMES
ress: New York City
NOV 3 - 1917

METROPOLITAN BARS OPERAS IN GERMAN

No Performances in Teutonic Language and German Singers' Careers Here End.

"RING" CYCLE IS DROPPED

The Novelty Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" and Also "Tristan" May Be Given in English Later in Season.

War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, as forecast yesterday, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German rôles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued last night in these words:

"The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explanation of the directors' final action yesterday, it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

Action Due to General Protest.

The Directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this Fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in yesterday's action.

There will be no "Ring" cycle on the stage that gave the first complete "Nibelungen" tetralogy in the Western Hemisphere back in 1889, and no "Parsifal" in the house that broke in 1903 the monopoly of Bayreuth.

Both Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" and Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" were not reannounced this season, as being the works of living German composers, whose copyrights fall under the ban of "enemy trading." Mozart's "Magic Flute" had been shelved after some years, and Gluck's "Iphigenia," also done in German, had run its course in a single season. There remained Beethoven's "Fidelio," rarely given, and eight Wagner dramas, to which a ninth was to be added, along with a proposed novelty in the "St. Elizabeth" of Liszt.

As the "St. Elizabeth" has been given often as an oratorio in English it may yet be prepared and presented in this language, after some delay. The possibility is also discussed of an English "Tristan" such as Thomas Beecham gave in London to packed houses, once on the night of an air raid by the German Zeppelins.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about thirty productions in the standard repertory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—thirty-nine—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

Five Singers German Subjects.

Only five singers in the Metropolitan's list of more than seventy artists are German subjects, it was said. The five are Mmes. Hempel and Ober and Messrs. Sembach, Weil, and Braun. Of these Mme. Hempel is engaged more for French and Italian, for coloratura rôles, than for German opera. The others will be affected by the change in repertory. Equally affected also are singers from Austria, like Mme. Kurt and Mr. Bloch, with whose country America is not formally at war. Mme. Matzenauer, Hungarian born, is an Italian subject, and Mr. Leonhardt is among those who sing rôles in other languages than their own. Mr. Reiss and others are now, or soon will be, naturalized Americans.

One of the most curious difficulties arising from the situation is that two of the women singers who would become American citizens, one by marriage here, the other by naturalization, are held back by the fact that their property is mostly in Germany and would be confiscated by the German Government if they became American subjects during the war.

Mme. Olive Fremstad, an American though born in Norway, had been engaged to return in her famous German rôles, as well as Tosca, Santuza, and others of the polyglot scheme. Whether she will be able in a season to prepare an Isolde in English words, more difficult than to learn a new rôle, or will be limited to fewer operas, remains to be settled between the singer and Director Gatti-Casazza of the Metropolitan.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 4 1917

DR. MUCK AGAIN PLAYS "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in all concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the future, it was announced to-night. Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the organization, led in the playing of the national anthem in a concert to-night and will do so in concerts to be given in New York and Washington next week.

Officials of the orchestra refused to discuss the question of Dr. Muck's resignation, which was offered after a concert yesterday as the climax to a storm of disapproval over the failure of the orchestra to include the national anthem in recent concerts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, has given no indication as to his probable decision on the leader's resignation.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date

SPEAKING of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Professor Muck, what has become of Chris Von Der Ahe's old baseball manager, Carl Muckenfuss?

om SUN
ldress: New York City.
ate NOV 4 - 19

DR. MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM ON TOUR

Director to Quit if Public Demands Elimination of German Music.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programmes of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Muck credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the Major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more. Major Higginson and the doctor were noncommittal to-day. The Major planned to consult Washington authorities, who are believed to have no objection to Muck.

The symphony embraces more than fourteen nationalities equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente powers. Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians are included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears that the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

"I hardly know what to think," said Dr. Muck to-day. "It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my long connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night."

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me. And now I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all

74

MUCK RESIGNS AS BOSTON ORCHESTRA LEADER RATHER THAN CONDUCT THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER

German Court Musician, Who Insulted America Under Plea of "Art," Should be Arrested, Declares Colonel Roosevelt—Famous Symphony Organization May Disband for Duration of War.

Rather than have the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which he was conductor, play the "Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Karl Muck, the German musician who has been leader of that organization for several years, threw down his baton yesterday and resigned his leadership.

Col. Henry Lee Higgenson, president of the Boston Symphony Society and main supporter of the orchestra, who backed up Muck in his refusal to play the national anthem, accepted the resignation.

It now becomes a question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not disband until after the war. It is extremely unlikely that it will go forward with its plans for the present season and it may not appear at Carnegie Hall next Thursday as scheduled.

Colonel Higgenson said in Boston yesterday, before Muck's resignation, that rather than comply with the public demand for patriotism in the orchestral concerts the organization would go out of existence temporarily.

Much feeling was raised last spring among the patriotic, both in Boston and in this city, over the retaining of Dr. Muck as conductor after this country entered the war against Germany.

Dr. Muck is high in favor in Kaiser Wilhelm's court and his position in Germany made it inadvisable from the first that he should occupy such an important position in this country.

When it was suggested to him that he should play the "Star Spangled Banner" he refused upon the ground that it was "inartistic" and that "art is universal" and that patriotism had no place in the domain of musical art.

Of course these excuses were mere evasions to cover up his Germanism. There is no doubt but that if Dr. Muck had consented to play the "Star Spangled Banner" he could never have gone back to Germany, at any rate he would never have retained his standing at the Imperial court.

Colonel Roosevelt yesterday denounced Dr. Muck and advised that he, and all others like him, should be locked up.

"Muck should not be allowed at large in this country," the ex-President said. "I am shocked that any American can apologize for him on the ground that it is not artistic to play a patriotic work. At this time no man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it should not be permitted to play at all, and any German who so openly shows his contempt for America as Muck has done in this instance should be interned."

Before the news of Muck's resignation had reached New York Mayor Mitchel already had taken steps to force him to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at Carnegie Hall next Thursday, or prevent the concert if he refused.

The License Commissioner and the Corporation Counsel were devising ways of meeting the situation when news of the German's action reached New York.

Music lovers in this city note with much interest the different attitude assumed by Joseph Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic Society. Like Dr. Muck, Mr. Stransky is a German subject, but he not only had the "Star Spangled Banner" played at each concert so far given by the Philharmonic Society, but has included music by modern American composers on his program.

TRIBUNE

New York City

Dr. Muck Submits To Public Verdict On Anthem Issue

Resignation to Rest on Whether German Music Is Acceptable

Tour Will Decide

Art International, Says Director; He Still Plays "Star-Spangled Banner"

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things, first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programme of the orchestra as the Metropolitan has done. There is no demand in Boston for any further change in the orchestra's plans.

Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the orchestra to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music.

Dr. Muck has said art is international and that that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes. As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German, he registered as provided, and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice, he gives him credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more.

The orchestra includes men of fourteen nationalities, divided among men born in the Central and Entente powers. Most of them have become naturalized. They have families, and all were in a gloomy mood to-day.

"I hardly know what to think," said Dr. Muck to-day. "It has all been very hard. It is all over now; perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my long connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night."

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all things, I want him exonerated of that false charge."

Baltimore Will Rebuke Muck, Says Ex-Governor

[Special Correspondence]

BALTIMORE, Nov. 3.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck or some other musician whose patriotism is less questionable holds the baton at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, scheduled for the Lyric here on next Wednesday night, Baltimore is going to give no uncertain voice to her indignation over Muck's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who has taken the lead in giving voice to the protest of the city wherein the national anthem was born, announced to-day that the patriotic mass meeting which he suggested before the German orchestra leader tendered his resignation will be held whether that resignation is accepted or not.

The meeting will be held Tuesday afternoon at the Lyric. It will be an "afternoon of patriotism," said Governor Warfield, "and every red-blooded American in Baltimore who feels the slur cast by an enemy alien on the song which honors the flag and which Americans honor, is invited to be present."

'YANKEE DOODLE' FOR MUCK

Dr. van Dyke Suggests That He Should Play "Dixie" Also.

After he closed his address before the League for Political Education in Carnegie Hall yesterday, Dr. Henry van Dyke was asked by a person in the audience what ought to be done with Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and he replied:

"Now that he has played 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' nothing better could be done for his improvement than to make him play 'Yankee Doodle' and 'Dixie.'"

In his address he denounced any peace that would not involve the "defeat, repentance, and reformation of the imperial German Government and the liberation of the German people." He traced the progress of events that led the United States into the war, and declared that it had become clearly the duty and task of the United States to crush forever the foe of democracy.

"Twenty kings, princes, dukes, and grandees," said Dr. van Dyke, "made up the real German Empire, and they are the ones who started this war. But there are some seven or eight millions of German people between us and the Potsdam predatory gang, and there is just one way to reach them. Do it like we play football. Make a wedge and drive in."

In a lecture before the Brooklyn Institute at the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday, Professor William Starr Myers of Princeton University took occasion to speak of the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." "His excuse," said Dr. Myers, "is that it is not up to the same standard of art as the other music. To my sense of things 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is good music. It expresses one of the noblest of the human emotions, patriotism, and I feel that that is a higher emotion than any that may be expressed in the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven."

SUN

New York City.

NOV 4 - 1917

Dr. Muck's Lack of Tact.

It is difficult to understand what inspiration any American can get out of the national anthem when it is rendered under the leadership of Dr. KARL MUCK. Dr. MUCK'S opinion of the merits of the composition, or of its suitableness for inclusion in a symphony programme, are of technical interest; but most citizens would prefer to go without "The Star Spangled Banner" rather than hear acknowledged enemies of their country play it for hire.

Dr. MUCK has given an exhibition of tactlessness which may be explained by his complete devotion to his art. His absorption in that art is not so complete, however, that he is ignorant of the war between this country and his nation. Unless he is incredibly ignorant of natural public feeling, he must have realized that there would be manifestations of popular enthusiasm that regardless of his political allegiance might impose on him, while conducting an orchestra in the United States, a disagreeable choice. Under the circumstances, any man appearing in public should have endeavored to avoid a useless row, and to protect the feelings of any individual whose hospitality, cooperation and friendly patronage he had enjoyed.

But Dr. MUCK invited the row, thereby contributing all that lay within his power to the humiliation and distress of his patron, Major HENRY L. HIGGINSON, who is the only person involved in this affair entitled to any sympathy, which he will receive from everybody, except, it may be, from Dr. KARL MUCK.

TIMES

New York City

15

TRIBUNE

New York City

NOV - 1917

The National Anthem At Orchestral Concerts

A Tempest in a Teapot—Some of the Reasons Why Dr. Muck Is Unpopular—How the Philharmonic Society Is Becoming Americanized—The Scene of Mr. Gilbert's Ballet—Something About Creoles

By H. E. Krehbiel

The question whether or not our symphonic or other high-class concerts ought to be begun by a performance of the national anthem is of no significance artistically and little value patriotically. That it has taken on a virulent form in connection with the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which begin in New York next Thursday is unfortunate; but it is perhaps more unfortunate that the fault so obviously lies with Dr. Muck. It is an open secret, we believe, that except Walter Damrosch of the Symphony Society and Modest Altschuler of the Russian Symphony Orchestra (but here we are speaking largely on presumption) all the conductors of the symphony orchestras in the United States sympathize with the enemies of our country. That fact does not act as a bar against their acceptance of a remuneration for their labor several times larger than they would be receiving (assuming that they were occupied at all) in Europe; but it has had the effect of making most of them keep their mouths shut politically. Unhappily, perhaps, for Dr. Muck, certainly for the Boston Orchestra and Major Higginson, its generous patron from the beginning, whose patriotism is beyond all question, Dr. Muck has not been so judicious. Before his agent could whisper a wise word of counsel in his ear at the outbreak of the war he had already spread his supposed knowledge of how Belgians had lopped off the hands and plucked out the eyes of innocent Germans. This sort of talk stopped short after he had reached Boston, but his associations there and in his summer homes (especially those of the past season) made persons perhaps a bit too keenly suspicious more suspicious still, and there grew, in a small but naturally energetic circle, the notion that in his case a bit of art might be spared for the sake of that devotion to the country's need which is bound to grow larger as the people are called on to make material sacrifices in its behalf. After all, some will say, if meatless and wheatless days so that our allies may be fed, why not musicless days, so that the enemy in our own land may not devour of our plenty?

We have no dread of Dr. Muck's antagonism to the United States, and we cannot conceive how his pro-German feeling can injure us any more than how a performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" under his direction could help us. As a matter of fact, both he and Major Higginson are thoroughly right when they say that the injection of the national anthem into every programme of a symphonic concert would be inartistic. We should not like to be compelled to endure it, despite our ardent patriotism. The fact remains, however, that the challenge has gone forth quite as much from Dr. Muck's attitude as from that of the public's, and that there is danger of a disturbance which might and ought to have been avoided had there been greater discretion on both sides. Let us hope that a way out of the difficulty may be found, so that there need be no expression of opinion on the subject—no demonstration either in favor of or against Dr. Muck, who, so far as the war is concerned, is a negligible factor, except that like so many artists who have come to our shores he is an alien enemy drawing sustenance from us which we can ill afford.

As a sign of the times to which the Muck episode gives an importance which it otherwise might not have, and yet as one which it is a pleasure to record, let us make note of the latest official announcement which has come from the Philharmonic Society. This announcement tells us that members of the orchestra have contributed more than $12,000 to the purchase of Liberty bonds. The publicity agent of the society adds that, although it was true some years ago that American orchestras were made up largely of Germans, this is no longer the fact, the Philharmonic Orchestra of to-day being composed entirely of American citizens, of whom by far the larger percentage were born in this country. Coming down to details, the agent says that there are now forty-two native-born musicians in the orchestra, and that the naturalized citizens represent eleven nations, viz., Italy, Holland, Belgium, Hungary, Bohemia, France, Poland, Germany and Norway. Only fourteen of the members came originally from Germany or Austria, and, says the agent, "their contribution to the orchestra's total bond subscription of $12,000 is ample testimony of their unqualified Americanism."

The press agent's figures are encouraging. A few years ago, when the writer essayed a discussion of the influence which foreign musicians had had (and were still having) upon the country, he could count less than a dozen of the ninety players of the Philharmonic Society (including a few native-born citizens of foreign descent) who were not Germans. In its first season—1842—the society numbered fifty-two performers, of whom twenty-two were Germans, thirteen Americans, eleven Englishmen, four Frenchmen and two Italians. We should like to believe that a better state of affairs exists at present; but the fact is that we do not produce orchestra players in America and are still as dependent upon the foreigners for art-work of this kind as were the ancient Romans upon the Greeks for their pedagogues. When Know Nothingism was an element in the political life of the United States there was also an uprising—a foolish one—against the Teutonism of the Philharmonic Society; but it died, as it had to, and since then the majority of our orchestral players have come from Germany, where music students are still willing to be developed into handicraftsmen, while here they aim only to be virtuosi. The principal exceptions are to be found in the wood-wind players, for whom we depend upon the Netherlands—chiefly Belgium. Some years ago Mr. Sam Franko attempted to maintain an American orchestra, the majority of the players being the children of foreign-born musicians. Even then he had to depend upon immigrants for the solo wind instruments. It is likely that the Philharmonic Society is now approaching what was then his ideal.

---

om SUN

ddress: New York City.

ate

will inevitably happen.

MUCK.

Would Temporary Retirement Suit His Sensitive Artistic Feelings?

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: Intern Dr. Muck, for he is openly and insultingly hostile to the one country that ever paid him a decent salary.

His country has produced no art of the highest order, and since the war began the rapers and robbers from his native Germany have destroyed more works of art than were ever wrecked since the early barbarians from Germania burned and plundered ancient Rome.

Prussian history should be laid bare only with a muckrake. No gems of art, pictorial, musical, architectural or literary, are to be found in it from the rise of Frederick the Great Lunatic to the fall of William the Third Infamy. And Dr. Karl Muck is the Kaiser's Honorary Prussian Music Director.

He says he is too much of an artist to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner." Beethoven was not too artistic to use the English "God Save the King"; Wagner was not too artistic to write an overture on "Rule Britannia"; Schumann was not too artistic to put "La Marseillaise" in two of his compositions; Arthur Nikisch was not too artistic to conduct the British national anthem at a concert of the London Philharmonic Society on May 18, 1911; Sir Henry Wood was not too artistic to conduct the national anthems of Belgium, Russia, France and the United States at his concerts in London; but this Honorary Prussian Musical Director, who never was and never will be the peer of either Nikisch or Wood as an orchestral conductor, is too artistic to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at his concerts of German music in New York!

His sensitive soul shrinks within him at the very idea. Possibly his tender Prussian art soul would shudder at the thought of conducting "The Watch on the Rhine" on the shores of the Hudson. There are other Prussian directors who have so much sensitiveness for themselves that they have none left over for mere Americans, Lusitania passengers, Belgian girls, English nurses and sailors of any nationality.

Dr. Muck should be put behind barbed wire where his delicacy cannot run amuck. Intern him. His country, whose savage breast has so long been soothed by the charms of music, interned English music students at the beginning of the war.

Clarence Lucas.

New York, November 3.

Some Can Afford It.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: Does it occur to Dr. Muck that, scattered all over this country, in the various orchestras, there are Germans who, rather than risk their livelihoods, play daily "The Star Spangled Banner," and play it standing?

Were he in an equally dependent position, his allegiance to Prussia would hesitate to find its expression in a refusal the insolence of which exceeds all bounds.

Violet Tangeman.

New York, November 3.

A New Rendering.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: Apropos of the Boston Symphony discord the old saying might be paraphrased to "Muck ado about Something."

P.

New York, November 3.

Apple Juice Must Fall Into Line.

From the Chicago Daily News.

All law abiding cider is expected this year to refrain from becoming hard.

---

om AMERICAN

ddress: New York City.

ate

Dr. Muck to Direct National Air Again

Boston, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left to-day for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert to-morrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, probably will be at the concert.

---

n MORNING TELEGRAPH

ress: New York City

NOV - 5 1917

BRIDGE TABLE TALK

By BAIRD LEONARD.

"I suppose you'll all hoot at me, but if Art hasn't got anything to do with morality I don't see why it should have anything to do with patriotism. Still, if Americans want the Star Spangled Banner played at their symphony concerts, it's up to the conductor to play it, even if he's a one-armed Hottentot. I've read the papers on the thing right along, and I'm not so ready to believe it was an international issue with Dr. Muck. He probably felt just as he would if somebody had asked him to include 'The Maiden's Prayer' in one of his programs. Still, Mayor Curley wasn't taking any chances. Boston, you remember, is the burg that dumped the tea into the river. Three spades."

"Well, if Americans are going to make such a fuss about having their national anthem played, why don't they show it some respect by standing silently instead of gazing around and gabbing away to the final bar? At the World Series the teams kept throwing the ball around the practice diamond when the fans were standing with uncovered heads yodeling all the words they knew, poor dears. There's something to be said for consistency. I double one no-trump."

"Do you think they'll really give us the vote to-morrow? If I thought they wouldn't I'd never speak to a man again! To think of all the parades I've marched in and all the signatures I've collected! And you can never find anybody anymore who's opposed to suffrage. That's the funny part. I suppose there will be a lot of antis at the polls, though. Henry says that men always say they believe in suffrage these days just to avoid an argument. Then they vote as they please. Who led that club?"

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Nov. 3, 1917 NOV 5 1917

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in its concerts in the future, it was announced by the management here. From information obtainable to-day it is understood Major Higginson has not yet accepted the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra.

The statement that the National anthem will be included in future concerts of the orchestra would seem to indicate there is no intention to disband the famous organization.

The orchestra will go on tour next week, playing in Brooklyn Friday evening.

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ess: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917

DR. MUCK TO LEAD U. S. ANTHEM HERE

German Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Appear at Carnegie Next Thursday.

RESIGNATION IS TENTATIVE

Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Syphony Orchestra will render "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their local concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday and subsequently in Brooklyn, or the local officials will set the wheels of justice in motion, it developed last night.

In line with the statements of the preceding day, both Commissioner of Licenses Bell and Corporation Counsel Lamar Hardy reiterated their statement to the effect the license of Carnegie Hall depends upon the interpolation of the national anthem into the symphonic program and assurances this will be done have been made by the management of the hall.

At the same time yesterday word was received from Boston to the effect there will be no change in the bookings of the Symphony organization by reason of the resignation tendered by Dr. Muck on Friday, following his leading of "The Star-Spangled Banner" under protest.

Resignation Only Tentative.

This resignation, the advices from Boston state, was only tentative and is contingent entirely upon the reception accorded the German musician on tour. If he is hostily treated, it is declared he will sever his connection with the organization, but otherwise he will remain at its head.

In all of the programs of the orchestra during its tour of the country the national anthem will be included, it is promised. At the same time, it was asserted yesterday, the original selection of German works will also be rendered and if there is any opposition to this plan Dr. Muck states positively he will lay down the baton at once and retire from the symphony.

This course may result in Major Higginson carrying out his threat to disband the organization and music patrons are awaiting with much anxiety the opening program of the orchestra here Thursday. The likelihood of a pronounced opposition to the German music, it was pointed out in music circles yesterday, is heightened by the action of the Metropolitan Opera Company on Friday in announcing a deletion of German works from their repertory this season.

No Jar to Art, He Thinks.

Concerning Dr. Muck's attitude there was much talk among the leaders of music in this city and Brooklyn yesterday, and it was generally agreed the German had drawn a rather fine line of demarkation when he explained his failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" by the fact his was an organization consecrated to art.

What Sousa Thinks About Muck.

After yesterday's matinee at the Hippodrome, a very German acquaintance of John Philip Sousa saw the famous bandmaster in Mark Luescher's office and took occasion to bring up the Muck muss. The Teuton, defending Herr Doktor Muck, said that it was insulting for the American public to expect the German director to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Muck is a German subject," sputtered the Teuton to Sousa. "He is loyal to his Kaiser and his country. What would you think, what would you do, if you happened to be in Berlin and the German people demanded that you, John Philip Sousa, play 'Die Wacht Am Rhein?'"

"What would I do?" said the quiet bandmaster of an American Marine Band. "I wouldn't be in Berlin. While my country was at war I wouldn't be making music for her enemies. Professor Muck ought to be in Berlin, where he belongs. If he is so loyal to the Kaiser he should now be with the Kaiser and among Germans."

The vociferous defender of Muck had nothing more to say and departed glowering. Lieutenant Sousa, who gave up $1,000 a week salary to serve his country as a musician-sailor, then went on to say that Muck's artistic objections to our national anthem would not "hold water." Nearly every enduring national anthem, he said, was either derived from or traceable to some classical and wholly artistic composition. The various national anthems, in turn, invariably become the themes for standard symphonic compositions and are recognized as of the highest inspiration to the best com-

(Continued From Page 1.)

DR. MUCK TO LEAD U. S. ANTHEM HERE

(Continued)

"In view of the present conditions," declared Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, which will sponsor the symphony engagements there, "it would seem that no great jar to the art sense would follow an occasional playing of the national anthem at the concerts in deference to the American sentiment of patriotism. Under ordinary conditions, of course, patriotic music is not symphonic music and it is not particularly appropriate on a symphony program."

Another view of the artistic value of the anthem was expressed by Professor William Starr Myers:

"Dr. Muck's excuse," said he yesterday, "is that it is not up to the same standard of art as the other music. To my sense of things 'The Star Spangled Banner' is good music. It expresses one of the noblest of the human emotions—patriotism, and I feel that is a higher emotion than any that may be expressed in the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917
Date

MUCK SECOND TIME PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

Whether Boston Conductor's Resignation Will Be Accepted Depends on Public.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in "The Star Spangled Banner," and will do so next week at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. Major Higginson has not yet accepted his resignation as conductor.

If there is public demand for Muck's removal and the elimination of German music from the concerts of the orchestra, both will be done. It is hinted that this would end the orchestra's career. The cities to be visited next week will pronounce the verdict. Boston has demanded nothing further than the playing of the national air.

Muck maintains his position that art is international, and therefore greater than any one nation. He does not refuse to play the anthem, but does not consider it art, and admits his sympathies are with Germany. The orchestra embraces fourteen nationalities.

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City
NOV 5 - 1
Date

"Dr. Muck Again Leads Anthem."—Headline. May get to like it. Who knows? Still some men will do a whole lot for $20,000 a year.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 5 19
Date

BALTIMORE THREAT TO MOB DR. MUCK

Ex-Gov. Warfield Says He Will Lead Patriots' Crowd if German Leads Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 4.—If Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra attempt to give the scheduled concert here next Wednesday night, there will be riot instead of a symphony, unless the situation changes in the mean time.

Ex-Gov. Warfield, who notified the Police Board that there would be serious trouble if an attempt was made to give the concert, said to-day he would be willing to lead a mob in breaking it up.

He has arranged for a patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon. It will be attended by a detachment of National Army men from Camp Meade, and the music will be furnished by the Camp Meade band.

The objects of this meeting are to reaffirm the allegiance of the people of Baltimore to the country, its flag and anthem, and "to protest against the insults to the 'Star Spangled Banner' by Dr. Karl Muck of Germany."

s: New York City
NOV 4 - 191

The Case of Doctor Muck, Major Higginson, and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

DR. KARL MUCK conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home town on Friday, and placed his resignation in the hands of Major Higginson, "that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra." Dr. Muck will continue to conduct till the question of his resignation is settled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played as it should be played.

This appears to be the culmination of an excitement that was unfortunately allowed to be fanned into a lively flame. It should have been foreseen and forestalled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" should have been played at the opening concerts in Boston, and at the opening concerts of the series in other cities. If Dr. Muck did not want to conduct it, the assistant conductor should have done it; or it could have been played at a sign from the concertmaster. We think that Mr. Walter Damrosch is nearer right in saying that he did not wish to hear Dr. Muck conduct our national anthem, feeling as he does and must necessarily feel about the war, than Colonel Roosevelt, who declared that Dr. Muck should be locked up if he refused to.

Dr. Muck declined to follow the example of the New York Sympheny Society and the New York Philharmonic Society, which played "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their first concerts. Major Higginson, the founder and supporter of the orchestra, upholds the conductor in this matter, and threatened, as he has at times threatened before, for other reasons, to disband the orchestra. They both declare that their decision was based on the belief that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not good enough to have a place in a concert of the highest class of music; that it would disturb the symmetry of the program as planned; that "art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group"—and art should not be mixed up or connected with patriotism.

Dr. Muck did add to this the statement that he is "not a naturalized American citizen, and naturally no one would expect him to do exactly the same as if he were a citizen of America." This probably had more to do with his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" than his estimate of its musical value.

***

As everybody, even the most musical, knows, the national anthem stands for much more than what it is as music and verse. It stands for patriotism, for devotion to the country, for all the united effort that we are making to preserve it. Thought of this can never, should never, be wholly absent from the minds of any of us, even when we are spending our time in enjoyment of the arts. It is open to any to think that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not all that it should be as music or as verse; but whatever its standing in those respects, it is the embodiment for us of feelings that are all-pervasive in a time of immeasurable solemnity—a solemnity that has not yet been brought home to the minds of all, but which is likely soon to be, in increasing measure.

It is therefore appropriate that any series of concerts should be begun with a performance of the national anthem at the present time. Such a practice is one that nobody in this country need be ashamed of, but all may be proud of, no matter how musically sensitive.

There has been, of course, a considerable dodging of the issue in the reasons given for the Boston Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck is a Prussian; an official of the Prussian Court, as "General Musical Director"; a friend of the Kaiser. He is a German of the Germans, and naturally does not like to conduct the national anthem of a country with which his own is at war. It goes hard against the grain now; it might get him into trouble in Berlin when he returns. Major Higginson correctly regards Dr. Muck as one of the finest conductors his organization has ever had; one who, especially at the present moment, would be quite irreplaceable. He naturally has not wished to force upon him a task so abhorrent that it might be a cause for Major Higginson's patriotism is, of course, wholly beyond question. His title and the scar upon his face are honorable records of distinguished service in the civil war. And in the fifty years that have passed since he saw that service he has given innumerable proofs of where his heart is. It is almost an insult to recall these things in the record of one who has been so good an American.

***

Dr. Muck has been in a difficult position. He is here because he has been urgently called here; because his qualities as a musician have been so highly valued and so much desired. They have not changed or deteriorated because his country is at war with ours, and is a most malignant, unscrupulous, and dangerous enemy. He has gone about his business, conducting the Boston Orchestra as well as he knows how; and, so far as anybody has sufficient reason to believe, has not worked in any way against the United States.

No doubt he does not like "The Star-Spangled Banner" from a purely mu-

Dr Karl Muck, Resigning Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

CALENDAR OF CONCERTS.

November.

4—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
4—Efrem Zimbalist, violin, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
4—Hans Barth, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
4—Mary Zentay, violin, evening, Cort Theatre.
5—Carolyn C. Baldwin, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
5—Mischa Levitzki, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
6—Charles Cooper, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—The Friends of Music, afternoon, Punch & Judy Theatre.
8—Louis Graveure, baritone, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—Boston Symphony Orchestra, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—First of the Morning Musicales, Hotel Biltmore.
9—Luther Festival, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—Christine Langenhan, soprano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Concerts for Children, morning, Aeolian Hall.
10—Boston Symphony Orchestra, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
10—Harold Bauer, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Society, evening, Carnegie Hall.
10—Paquita Madriguera, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
11—Philharmonic Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
11—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
11—Arthur Friedheim, piano, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
11—Eddy Brown, violin, evening, Carnegie Hall.
12—Joseph Bonnet, organ, afternoon, Hotel Astor.
12—Dorothy Berliner, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
12—Antonio Augenti, tenor, evening, Aeolian Hall.
13—Frances Alda, soprano, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
13—Moses Boguslawski, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
13—Mrs. Farrington Smith, songs, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
13—Chamber Music Society, evening, Aeolian Hall.
14—Alice Sovereign, soprano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
15—Symphony Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
15—Arthur Alexander, tenor, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.

sical point of view. But if it were as good music, with as unexceptionable a parentage, as "Gott Erhalte Franz den Kaiser," he would not wish to play it, and for the same cause as now—it is the patriotic hymn of a country at war with his own. That, of course, is the real reason why Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," and resigned after he did it under pressure.

So far as Dr. Muck himself is concerned, it is a fairly good reason. He makes no concealment of his feelings, which are quite inevitable. There might be a grim joy for some in forcing him personally to conduct the tune often, or even to put him into a prison for refusing; but to what advantage to this country, and what disadvantage to Germany? Dr. Muck would not be

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ess: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917

DR. MUCK TO LEAD U. S. ANTHEM HERE

German Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Appear at Carnegie Next Thursday.

RESIGNATION IS TENTATIVE

Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Syphony Orchestra will render "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their local concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday and subsequently in Brooklyn, or the local officials will set the wheels of justice in motion, it developed last night.

In line with the statements of the preceding day, both Commissioner of Licenses Bell and Corporation Counsel Lamar Hardy reiterated their statement to the effect the license of Carnegie Hall depends upon the interpolation of the national anthem into the symphonic program and assurances this will be done have been made by the management of the hall.

At the same time yesterday word was received from Boston to the effect there will be no change in the bookings of the Symphony organization by reason of the resignation tendered by Dr. Muck on Friday, following his leading of "The Star-Spangled Banner" under protest.

Resignation Only Tentative.

This resignation, the advices from Boston state, was only tentative and is contingent entirely upon the reception accorded the German musician on tour. If he is hostily treated, it is declared he will sever his connection with the organization, but otherwise he will remain at its head.

In all of the programs of the orchestra during its tour of the country the national anthem will be included, it is promised. At the same time, it was asserted yesterday, the original selection of German works will also be rendered and if there is any opposition to this plan Dr. Muck states positively he will lay down the baton at once and retire from the symphony.

This course may result in Major Higginson carrying out his threat to disband the organization and music patrons are awaiting with much anxiety the opening program of the orchestra here Thursday. The likelihood of a pronounced opposition to the German music, it was pointed out in music circles yesterday, is heightened by the action of the Metropolitan Opera Company on Friday in announcing a deletion of German works from their repertory this season.

No Jar to Art, He Thinks.

Concerning Dr. Muck's attitude there was much talk among the leaders of music in this city and Brooklyn yesterday, and it was generally agreed the German had drawn a rather fine line of demarkation when he explained his failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" by the fact his was an organization consecrated to art.

What Sousa Thinks About Muck.

After yesterday's matinee at the Hippodrome, a very German acquaintance of John Philip Sousa saw the famous bandmaster in Mark Luescher's office and took occasion to bring up the Muck muss. The Teuton, defending Herr Doktor Muck, said that it was insulting for the American public to expect the German director to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Muck is a German subject," sputtered the Teuton to Sousa. "He is loyal to his Kaiser and his country. What would you think, what would you do, if you happened to be in Berlin and the German people demanded that you, John Philip Sousa, play 'Die Wacht Am Rhein?"

"What would I do?" said the quiet bandmaster of an American Marine Band. "I wouldn't be in Berlin. While my country was at war I wouldn't be making music for her enemies. Professor Muck ought to be in Berlin, where he belongs. If he is so loyal to the Kaiser he should now be with the Kaiser and among Germans."

The vociferous defender of Muck had nothing more to say and departed glowering. Lieutenant Sousa, who gave up $1,000 a week salary to serve his country as a musician-sailor, then went on to say that Muck's artistic objections to our national anthem would not "hold water." Nearly every enduring national anthem, he said, was either derived from or traceable to some classical and wholly artistic composition. The various national anthems, in turn, invariably become the themes for standard symphonic compositions and are recognized as of the highest inspiration to the best com-

(Continued From Page 1.)

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ess: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917

(Continued)

"In view of the present conditions," declared Dr. Charles D. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, which will sponsor the symphony engagements there, "it would seem that no great jar to the art sense would follow an occasional playing of the national anthem at the concerts in deference to the American sentiment of patriotism. Under ordinary conditions, of course, patriotic music is not symphonic music and it is not particularly appropriate on a symphony program."

Another view of the artistic value of the anthem was expressed by Professor William Starr Myers:

"Dr. Muck's excuse," said he yesterday, "is that it is not up to the same standard of art as the other music. To my sense of things 'The Star Spangled Banner' is good music. It expresses one of the noblest of the human emotions—patriotism, and I feel that is a higher emotion than any that may be expressed in the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917
Date

MUCK SECOND TIME PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

Whether Boston Conductor's Resignation Will Be Accepted Depends on Public.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again to-night in "The Star Spangled Banner," and will do so next week at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. Major Higginson has not yet accepted his resignation as conductor.

If there is public demand for Muck's removal and the elimination of German music from the concerts of the orchestra, both will be done. It is hinted that this would end the orchestra's career. The cities to be visited next week will pronounce the verdict. Boston has demanded nothing further than the playing of the national air.

Muck maintains his position that art is international, and therefore greater than any one nation. He does not refuse to play the anthem, but does not consider it art, and admits his sympathies are with Germany. The orchestra embraces fourteen nationalities.

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City
NOV 5 - 1917
Date

"Dr. Muck Again Leads Anthem."—Headline. May get to like it. Who knows? Still some men will do a whole lot for $20,000 a year.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 5 - 19
Date

BALTIMORE THREAT TO MOB DR. MUCK

Ex-Gov. Warfield Says He Will Lead Patriots' Crowd if German Leads Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 4.—If Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra attempt to give the scheduled concert here next Wednesday night, there will be riot instead of a symphony, unless the situation changes in the mean time.

Ex-Gov. Warfield, who notified the Police Board that there would be serious trouble if an attempt was made to give the concert, said to-day he would be willing to lead a mob in breaking it up.

He has arranged for a patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon. It will be attended by a detachment of National Army men from Camp Meade, and the music will be furnished by the Camp Meade band.

The objects of this meeting are to reaffirm the allegiance of the people of Baltimore to the country, its flag and anthem, and "to protest against the insults to the 'Star Spangled Banner' by Dr. Karl Muck of Germany."

s: New York City
NOV 4 - 1917

The Case of Doctor Muck, Major Higginson, and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

DR. KARL MUCK conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home town on Friday, and placed his resignation in the hands of Major Higginson, "that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra." Dr. Muck will continue to conduct till the question of his resignation is settled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played as it should be played.

This appears to be the culmination of an excitement that was unfortunately allowed to be fanned into a lively flame. It should have been foreseen and forestalled. "The Star-Spangled Banner" should have been played at the opening concerts in Boston, and at the opening concerts of the series in other cities. If Dr. Muck did not want to conduct it, the assistant conductor should have done it; or it could have been played at a sign from the concertmaster. We think that Mr. Walter Damrosch is nearer right in saying that he did not wish to hear Dr. Muck conduct our national anthem, feeling as he does and must necessarily feel about the war, than Colonel Roosevelt, who declared that Dr. Muck should be locked up if he refused to.

Dr. Muck declined to follow the example of the New York Symphony Society and the New York Philharmonic Society, which played "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their first concerts. Major Higginson, the founder and supporter of the orchestra, upholds the conductor in this matter, and threatened, as he has at times threatened before, for other reasons, to disband the orchestra. They both declare that their decision was based on the belief that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not good enough to have a place in a concert of the highest class of music; that it would disturb the symmetry of the program as planned; that "art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group"—and art should not be mixed up or connected with patriotism.

Dr. Muck did add to this the statement that he is "not a naturalized American citizen, and naturally no one would expect him to do exactly the same as if he were a citizen of America." This probably had more to do with his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" than his estimate of its musical value.

***

As everybody, even the most musical, knows, the national anthem stands for much more than what it is as music and verse. It stands for patriotism, for devotion to the country, for all the united effort that we are making to preserve it. Thought of this can never, should never, be wholly absent from the minds of any of us, even when we are spending our time in enjoyment of the arts. It is open to any to think that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not all that it should be as music or as verse; but whatever its standing in those respects, it is the embodiment for us of feelings that are all-pervasive in a time of immeasurable solemnity—a solemnity that has not yet been brought home to the minds of all, but which is likely soon to be, in increasing measure.

It is therefore appropriate that any series of concerts should be begun with a performance of the national anthem at the present time. Such a practice is one that nobody in this country need be ashamed of, but all may be proud of, no matter how musically sensitive.

There has been, of course, a considerable dodging of the issue in the reasons given for the Boston Orchestra's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck is a Prussian; an official of the Prussian Court, as "General Musical Director"; a friend of the Kaiser. He is a German of the Germans, and naturally does not like to conduct the national anthem of a country with which his own is at war. It goes hard against the grain now; it might get him into trouble in Berlin when he returns. Major Higginson correctly regards Dr. Muck as one of the finest conductors his organization has ever had; one who, especially at the present moment, would be quite irreplaceable. He naturally has not wished to force upon him a task so abhorrent that it might be a cause for Major Higginson's patriotism is, of course, wholly beyond question. His title and the scar upon his face are honorable records of distinguished service in the civil war. And in the fifty years that have passed since he saw that service he has given innumerable proofs of where his heart is. It is almost an insult to recall these things in the record of one who has been so good an American.

***

Dr. Muck has been in a difficult position. He is here because he has been urgently called here; because his qualities as a musician have been so highly valued and so much desired. They have not changed or deteriorated because his country is at war with ours, and is a most malignant, unscrupulous, and dangerous enemy. He has gone about his business, conducting the Boston Orchestra as well as he knows how; and, so far as anybody has sufficient reason to believe, has not worked in any way against the United States.

No doubt he does not like "The Star-Spangled Banner" from a purely mu-

Dr Karl Muck, Resigning Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

CALENDAR OF CONCERTS.

November.

4—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
4—Efrem Zimbalist, violin, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
4—Hans Barth, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
4—Mary Zentay, violin, evening, Cort Theatre.
5—Carolyn C. Baldwin, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
5—Mischa Levitzki, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
6—Charles Cooper, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—The Friends of Music, afternoon, Punch & Judy Theatre.
8—Louis Graveure, baritone, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
8—Boston Symphony Orchestra, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—First of the Morning Musicales, Hotel Biltmore.
9—Luther Festival, evening, Carnegie Hall.
9—Christine Langenhan, soprano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Concerts for Children, morning, Aeolian Hall.
10—Boston Symphony Orchestra, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
10—Harold Bauer, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
10—Symphony Society, evening, Carnegie Hall.
10—Paquita Madriguera, piano, evening, Aeolian Hall.
11—Philharmonic Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
11—Symphony Society, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
11—Arthur Friedheim, piano, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
11—Eddy Brown, violin, evening, Carnegie Hall.
12—Joseph Bonnet, organ, afternoon, Hotel Astor.
12—Dorothy Berliner, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
12—Antonio Augenti, tenor, evening, Aeolian Hall.
13—Frances Alda, soprano, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
13—Moses Boguslawski, piano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
13—Mrs. Farrington Smith, songs, afternoon, Princess Theatre.
13—Chamber Music Society, evening, Aeolian Hall.
14—Alice Sovereign, soprano, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.
15—Symphony Society, afternoon, Carnegie Hall.
15—Arthur Alexander, tenor, afternoon, Aeolian Hall.

sical point of view. But if it were as good music, with as unexceptionable a parentage, as "Gott Erhalte Franz den Kaiser," he would not wish to play it, and for the same cause as now—it is the patriotic hymn of a country at war with his own. That, of course, is the real reason why Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," and resigned after he did it under pressure.

So far as Dr. Muck himself is concerned, it is a fairly good reason. He makes no concealment of his feelings, which are quite inevitable. There might be a grim joy for some in forcing him personally to conduct the tune often, or even to put him into a prison for refusing; but to what advantage to this country, and what disadvantage to Germany? Dr. Muck would not be

RIBUNE

New York City

American Nov. 7, 1917

Soldiers to Join Baltimore Protest On Muck Concert

Camp Meade Detachment Will Participate in Patriotic Demonstration

[Special Correspondence]

BALTIMORE, Nov. 4.—The indignation of Baltimore citizens over the scheduled appearance of Dr. Karl Muck, German leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the concert here Wednesday night has spread to the National Army soldiers from this city who are training at Camp Meade.

General Joseph E. Kuhn, commander of the camp, has decided to give an outlet for the indignation by sending to the patriotic mass meeting Tuesday the Camp Meade band and fifty soldiers. General Kuhn notified former Governor Warfield, who is leading in Baltimore's protest, of this to-day. Practically every patriotic society in the city will be represented.

If Dr. Muck is retained as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as it has been announced he will be, there is a possibility that the concert Wednesday night will be forbidden. General Lawrason Riggs, president of the Police Board, said it was the duty of the board to see that no gathering tending to disturb the peace be permitted.

"At present," he said, "it does not appear that there will be any call for action in regard to the Boston Symphony concert, but the board will be guided by developments of the next two days.

"The matter has now grown out of the realm of academic discussion," General Riggs continued, speaking as an individual. "It has become a question of an aroused public feeling. The presence of Dr. Muck necessarily would destroy any pleasure in the music. Personally I would not care to attend the concert if he were to conduct."

Police Marshal Robert D. Carter said to-day he was absolutely opposed to any concert led by Dr. Muck. The marshal said he had received many anonymous postal cards and letters making threats against Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Lyric Theatre. He added that if the sentiment expressed at the patriotic mass meeting Tuesday indicated that there might be trouble at the concert steps would be taken to prevent the concert.

Boston Orchestra Leaves For Baltimore; Dr. Muck To Lead National Anthem

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left to-day for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert Wednesday evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. Dr. Muck will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star-Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, probably will be at the concert if there are indications that difficulties will arise.

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every future concert, the question is whether there will be objection to Dr. Muck such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the programme.

Friends of the orchestra point out that the field of symphonic music will be considerably restricted if German works are eliminated. They ask whether under this theory there should not be protests against the bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" and Mendelssohn's wedding march.

There were no developments to-day concerning the resignation of Dr. Muck. Major Higginson adheres to his announced position that Muck's loss would be a disaster, and if the acceptance of his resignation is forced it will mean the end of the orchestra. The major pays Dr. Muck $18,000 a year, or $3,000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. Dr. Muck came to Boston on a five-year contract, which expired last spring, and Major Higginson considered him so essential to the success of the organization that he asked him to remain.

Anthem To Be Played at All Milwaukee City Concerts

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 4.—"The Milwaukee City Symphony Orchestra will open every concert this season with the national anthem, and the audience, as well as the musicians, will be required to stand during the music," Joseph C. Grieb, secretary and manager of the Milwaukee City Auditorium, said today. Grieb announced plans for the city's 10-cent popular concerts. He added:

"We will have no repetition of the scandals in other cities over the playing of this hymn. Thus Milwaukee will again show the rest of the country that it is loyal to the core."

Higginson Assumes Blame in Muck Case

Orchestra Sponsor Says He Did Not Tell Director of Demand for Anthem

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made to-night by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor of the orchestra. Major Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made.

The statement was brought forth by criticism by citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence of the omission of the national anthem from the programme of the concert in that city last week.

The orchestra, with Dr. Muck, left to-night for Baltimore, where citizens are preparting a protest against a concert scheduled for Wednesday night.

Major Higginson, in his statement, said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said to-night:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist. The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

Post Nov. 8

NO WAR TAXES ON SYMPHONY

Season Tickets Bought Before Nov. 1 Not Taxable

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in Boston, Cambridge, New York, Philadelphia, Washington and other cities who purchased season tickets will not have to pay a 10 per cent war tax.

Internal Revenue Commissioner Ropes at Washington yesterday ruled that theatre and concert tickets purchased prior to Nov. 1 for performances after that date are not subject to the war tax.

A request for a construction of the law was made by the boxholders at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York some time ago, and was supplemented by a like request from C. A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra.

Pending a reply Symphony subscribers were told to wait when they proffered the tax or asked what the amount would be, and at Symphony Hall collections on season tickets were not made. In Cambridge, however, in many instances the tax was collected.

The Symphony management last night said the matter in Cambridge would be satisfactorily adjusted as soon as possible.

The war tax applies to single tickets for each concert, and is collected the same as at the other concert halls and theatres.

WANT DR. MUCK TO STAY WITH SYMPHONY

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under consideration, is receiving numerous letters on the subject, with about 75 per cent. of the writers favoring the retention of Dr. Muck.

Many army and navy officers in uniform were present at two Washington concerts by the Symphony Orchestra, at which Dr. Muck led the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of each program. The audiences applauded.

THREATS OF VIOLENCE.

The Baltimore concert, scheduled for tonight, has been cancelled by order of the police, at request of the Baltimore Grand Jury. Many threats of violence had been made, especially by former-Governor Warfield.

At a patriotic meeting in the Baltimore Lyric, where the orchestra had been billed to appear tonight, Captain Hughes, representing Generals Kuhn and Nicholson at Camp Meade, said:

"Muck's reference to 'The Star Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave."

Captain Hughes added that he hoped Key would arise and haunt Muck. Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck were adopted.

TO PLAY IN NEW YORK.

Concerts are scheduled for Brooklyn and New York tomorrow and Friday nights. Dr. Muck will lead the playing of the national anthem.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the Symphony Society of New York, now denounces Dr. Muck as hypocritical, considering his German citizenship. He says:

"Dr. Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at the present time, and I confess that while I always enjoy hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms I should not at the present time enjoy hearing him conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feeling regarding this war, this would be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that the issue could easily be met by having an assistant conductor lead in the 'Star Spangled Banner.'"

Post Nov. 8, 1917

SLOPPING OVER

The spectacle afforded the country by last Tuesday's mass meeting in Baltimore called for the discussion of patriotic questions was anything but edifying. Dr. Muck was made the chief issue, and we are told that the audience hissed and yelled every time the conductor's name was mentioned, and that one hysterical woman screamed "kill him" when he was referred to by former Governor Warfield.

We are at loss to see how "The Star Spangled Banner" or the cause of the United States gains anything by such exhibitions as that. Dr. Muck is leading the official American anthem at every concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and doing it with perfectly good grace so far as appearances furnish any test. It is time the tempest subsided.

George Washington was a great man, said Artemas Ward, because "he never slopped over." Some of the ardent Baltimoreans should emulate him.

DR. MUCK GETS OVATION FROM N. Y. AUDIENCE

Revised Nov. 9

Metropolis May Secure Symphony Dates from Baltimore

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—It is an ill wind that blows no good. The trouble in Baltimore over Dr. Muck and the playing of the Star Spangled Banner, which resulted in no performance being given by the Boston Orchestra, may mean additional Boston Symphony Orchestra performances for New York.

For years New York has paid tribute to the Boston Orchestra. Every seat to the all too few concerts are subscribed months—sometimes years—ahead of the performances. The cutting off of the Baltimore concerts leaves a few adidtional open dates and New York managers are trying in every way to secure these openings.

Maj. H. L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, is in New York today consulting with local managers about the additional New York performances. Maj. Higginson also conferred today with the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn Institute, under whose auspices the Boston Orchestra is to play.

The Major has signified his willingness to have the Star Spangled Banner played at Brooklyn and itis considered entirely likely that the regular concerts of the Boston band in Brooklyn will be given as usual.

Of last evening's performance of Dr. Muck and his men at Carnegie Hall, the Sun's critic says, today:—

Germans Applaud Muck

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall last evening. The principal number on the program was 'The Star Spangled Banner.' It was not intended originally that it should occupy this conspicuous position, but it attained it by force of circumstances over which the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, had no control.

"Since Baytimore arose in its patriotic majesty all concerned have seen a great light and have been enabled by it to discern that 'our flag is still there. The house bills last evening said: 'The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the program.'

"Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian, closely affiliated with the Imperial Government and a personal friend of the Kaiser, was received by the audience with prolonged and hearty applause when he appeared on the stage. Germans in the audience within range of the observer's eyes violently beat their hands.

"Dr. Muck personally conducted the national anthem of his country's enemies with dignity. The audience applauded again with energy. The Germans under the Sun's representative's observation did not applaud at all. Dr. Muck did not bow in response to the approval of the playing of the anthem. And that was the termination of the tempest in a Boston tea pot."

RECORD, NOV., 9, 1917

78

KREISLER AS FORMER OFFICER FACES TROUBLE

Pittsburgh Refused Him License—Violinist Respected Here

By J. V. Clark

Fritz Kreisler announces a recital of music for the violin at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18. Mr. Kreisler has played at Symphony Hall many times, both with the Symphony Orchestra and at his own recitals. He has never faced a vacant seat, for he is the most popular living violinist with the Boston audiences. There are those who think Mr. Ysaye, the master violinist; there are those who herald the coming, youthful Heifetz as the violinistic marvel, there are those who are transported by the colorful playing of Mr. Elman, and there are those, less numerous, who think that elegance in fiddling begins and ends with Mr. Thibaud. Each has his following—Mr. Kreisler has the largest.

Before the war Mr. Kreisler was popular. After the war, in which he served for a time as an officer in the Austrian army, he was, if anything, more popular. There was the glamour about him, the excited curiosity that there is about any celebrity who does his bit. Many performers, who have fought, served in the nursing departments of armies or entertained on one side or the other, have that glamour. It has attracted "business," but it has not been paraded. Miss Garden, Mme. Guilbert, Baklanoff, Marcoux—to take a few names at random—are now more interesting than they were before their war days.

Mr. Kreisler did not parade his war activities in cheap press agent yarns. He wrote on his war experiences and wrote intelligently for the small audiences that appreciate serious articles on the great war. He never attempted to turn his martial prowess to dollar getting. After the war, as before, he appeared simply as a violinist. After the war, as before, his simplicity, his dignity and his towering ability, which amount almost to genius, made him admired and respected.

Now all the attitude towards Mr. Kreisler is changing. It is being discovered by some papers (a very tardy discovery and a sad comment on the alterness of certain American journalists) that Mr. Kreisler was an officer in the Austrian army, which is an ally of Germany, an enemy country to the United States. For that reason many well-meaning persons think he should not be allowed to play in this country and that his beautiful art should not be enjoyed by the thousands to whom he has brought refreshment and inspiration.

The attitude of the Boston public towards Mr. Kreisler will be interesting to note. Once they knew him to be an Austrian officer and applauded him—as recently as two weeks ago. Will the news that Pittsburgh has refused a performance license to Mr. Kreisler turn his friends to foes?

It is not the province of a reviewer to discuss questions of government or police policy, but we hope that officials, like the public, will consider that Mr. Kreisler's beautiful playing can certainly lend no aid or comfort to the enemy.

This paper has constantly maintained that every artist of foreign, enemy, birth now in the United States, should be watched most carefully. This, of course, applies to Dr. Muck as fully as any other. The secret service department of our country is "on the job."

We hope every artist, like certain singers in New York, who indulge in alleged seditious talk, will be treated with loss of position and then by the proper authorities. We do hope, however, that great artists, who have long been admired and, what is more, respected, against whose character as men and women there has never been a reproach, will be treated with the consideration with which they have always been treated by the great American public.

Kreisler, "Not Like Muck," Will Be Welcomed in Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Baltimore, which has no liking for Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has no quarrel with Fritz Kreisler, the great violinist. Kreisler was recently refused a license to appear in Pittsburgh, because he was at one time an officer in the army of Austria, an ally of Germany, although not an enemy of the United States. Kreisler concerts will be welcomed in Baltimore.

Ex-Gov. Edwin Warfield, head of the anti-Muck leaders, says he will not head any movement to stop Kreisler concerts in Baltimore the first of which is set for Nov. 22.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem, or their flag. But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country, I have no doubt, to try to help Germany win the war by his association with aliens here.

"With Kreisler all is very different. He is accepted everywhere. He has played at many Red Cross conferences. He will be welcomed in Baltimore."

TRANSCRIPT
– NOV. 9, 1917 –

NEWS OF MUSIC

Dr. Muck and the Boston Orchestra in New York—A Tranquil Concert Quite Without "Incident"—Miss Nikoloric and Miss Young in Newcomers' Recitals—Items and Incidents

AS in Philadelphia last Monday, as in Washington last Tuesday, not an incident," except unusually hearty applause for Dr. Muck, marked the concert of the Boston Orchestra in New York Thursday evening. Evidently the public of the band, in the city next to Boston in importance to it, is disposed, like the similar public here, to make an end of an embroglio that need never have come to recent pass, had those most concerned been wiser and more tactful in the handling of it. The usual audience assembled in Carnegie Hall yesterday; bore itself in the usual manner and heard a concert that, but for the preface of "The Star-Spangled Banner," went the usual way. Whatever the sources of the recent outcry against orchestra and conductor, it is now clear that little of it comes from the public that weekly or monthly sits before them. Indeed only one item of the much anticipated "news" transpired on the outskirts of the concert and that not of the sort expected. Now that the management of the orchestra has naturally cancelled the schedule for Baltimore; spokesmen for the many who cannot buy tickets for its concerts in New York, since for years every place has been taken by subscription, are pressing for a third concert there during the monthly visits. Whether or not it will be arranged remains to be seen. Mr. Aldrich's justly tempered account in The Times of the concert last evening follows:

> There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing of the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way. There were two or three empty boxes and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage, and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the programme. Major Higginson was present.
>
> The house bill stated that "the National Anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed on the counterpoint of the strings, till the last part, when all joined in the tune robustly. There was much applause and no fault found apparently with the spirit of the whole thing.
>
> The regular numbers of the programme were Brahms's E minor symphony, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem "Prometheus," and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal." Dr. Muck has more than once played Brahms's fourth symphony; and the beautiful version of it that he gives is well remembered; a reading full of life, of sinuous grace in the first movement, of immense vigor in the third and last movements, of lovely sentiment in the andante: everywhere of beautiful color and subtle adjustment of the instrumental voices, of finely turned and pregnant phrasing, of subtle nuancing of tempo. It caused, and very justly, great enthusiasm; Dr. Muck was several times recalled, and made the orchestra rise to share in the applause.
>
> Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is not very exciting. It is difficult to find any interpretation of Shakspeare's hero or of the play in it. There are melodious passages of somewhat more lustre than Berlioz often achieved; there are passages of fine instrumental coloring; but it is not music to touch the imagination. Still less is Liszt's laborious illustration of the fate of Prometheus; one of the least frequently heard of the symphonic poems. The reason why was made plain last evening. The performance of the "Parsifal" prelude was an imposing one.

TRAVELER, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9,

New York Comments on Boston Symphony Concert

New York newspapers give varied accounts of the opening concert in that city of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Times:

Providence Journal
NOV. 9, 1917.

The Symphony's Change of Front

Major Higginson says that he received, before the recent Boston Symphony concert in this city, a request from women of Providence unknown to him and not subscribers to the Symphony concerts that the orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon its visit here. But the request, as has been stated again and again, was signed by officers and representatives of several responsible local organizations, nearly all of a musical character; and hundreds of the members of these organizations were subscribers to the Symphony concerts. Major Higginson's explanation does not explain.

The founder and promoter of the Boston organization further says that "The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request has never been refused." Yet Major Higginson declared, after the Providence concert, that the orchestra would never play here again, and Dr. Muck was quoted as saying that the anthem would not be rendered by the organization in New York or anywhere else.

It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star-Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts.

GLOBE. NOV. 9.

MUCK LEADS NATIONAL ANTHEM IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Nov 8—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr Karl Muck, played the "Star Spangled Banner," as the opening number in its first concert of the season here tonight in Carnegie Hall.

The audience applauded with energy when Dr Muck appeared on the stage, for the house bills announced that he would play the National anthem. The audience applauded with still greater energy when he concluded the number.

After its exciting experiences of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck, and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way.

The Sun:

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian, closely affiliated with the imperial government and a personal friend of the Kaiser, was received by the audience with prolonged and hearty applause when he appeared on the stage. Germans in the audience within range of the Sun observer's eyes violently beat their hands.

Dr. Muck personally conducted the national anthem of his country's enemies with dignity. The audience applauded again with energy. The Germans under the Sun representative's observation did not applaud at all. Dr. Muck did not bow in response to the approval of the playing of the anthem. And that was the termination of the tempest in a Boston teapot.

The Tribune:

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder whatever. When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage the audience, which filled the house, with the exception of a few boxes, applauded mildly.

Dr. Muck signalled for the musicians to rise and then at the first note the house followed. At the conclusion of the anthem the applause was warmer and heartier.

New York seemed quite ready to forget the leader's first refusal to conduct the national anthem—more ready than Baltimore, which has refused to allow the orchestra to play there this year.

The Herald:

After the national anthem, during which Dr. Muck gave not the slightest indication of pleasure or displeasure at being ordered to conduct it, everything progressed as in the past. Apparently the severe criticism that the orchestra met was forgotten. The whole body of musicians concentrated their minds on the music and any differences were temporarily put out of consideration.

The World:

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

The World:

Baltimore's exhibition of hysteria over the danger to public security in a symphony concert led by an enemy conductor was bad enough. But it has remained for Pittsburgh to discover a new musical menace to the country in a performance by an alien violinist. The police of that city, having suddenly awakened to the fact that Fritz Kreisler is an officer in the Austrian army, have forbidden him to give an entertainment there on the ground that it would be "unpatriotic."

We are still at war with Austria and the violinist's bow is technically no more an enemy weapon now than it has been these many years. But to the supersensitive militarist imagination the magic wand has suddenly become invested with a direful potency. The spell it exercises is a dangerous spell of some sort since we went to war, and all good citizens must avoid imperilling their patriotism and refrain from lending aid and comfort to the enemy by listening to Kreisler!

Is there any further length to which enemy-music-phobia can go? Will the little German bands be allowed to play "Stille Nacht" when Christmas comes? Are we indeed getting ready to sing our own "Hymn of Hate" against all things German, music and musicians most of all?

The parochial attitude of intolerance manifested would be silly if it were not such a reflection on the American spirit of freedom and fair play. Cabinet officers did not hesitate to attend and applaud the Boston Symphony concert in Washington. Why must local officials imagine a vain peril to the nation in a musical performance?

RECORD, NOV., 9, 1917

78

KREISLER AS FORMER OFFICER FACES TROUBLE

Pittsburgh Refused Him License—Violinist Respected Here

By J. V. Clark

Fritz Kreisler announces a recital of music for the violin at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18. Mr. Kreisler has played at Symphony Hall many times, both with the Symphony Orchestra and at his own recitals. He has never faced a vacant seat, for he is the most popular living violinist with the Boston audiences. There are those who think Mr. Ysaye, the master violinist; there are those who herald the coming, youthful Heifetz as the violinistic marvel, there are those who are transported by the colorful playing of Mr. Elman, and there are those, less numerous, who think that elegance in fiddling begins and ends with Mr. Thibaud. Each has his following—Mr. Kreisler has the largest.

Before the war Mr. Kreisler was popular. After the war, in which he served for a time as an officer in the Austrian army, he was, if anything, more popular. There was the glamour about him, the excited curiosity that there is about any celebrity who does his bit. Many performers, who have fought, served in the nursing departments of armies or entertained on one side or the other, have that glamour. It has attracted "business," but it has not been paraded. Miss Garden, Mme. Guilbert, Baklanoff, Marcoux—to take a few names at random—are now more interesting than they were before their war days.

Mr. Kreisler did not parade his war activities in cheap press agent yarns. He wrote on his war experiences and wrote intelligently for the small audiences that appreciate serious articles on the great war. He never attempted to turn his martial prowess to dollar getting. After the war, as before, he appeared simply as a violinist. After the war, as before, his simplicity, his dignity and his towering ability, which amount almost to genius, made him admired and respected.

Now all the attitude towards Mr. Kreisler is changing. It is being discovered by some papers (a very tardy discovery and a sad comment on the alterness of certain American journalists) that Mr. Kreisler was an officer in the Austrian army, which is an ally of Germany, an enemy country to the United States. For that reason many well-meaning persons think he should not be allowed to play in this country and that his beautiful art should not be enjoyed by the thousands to whom he has brought refreshment and inspiration.

The attitude of the Boston public towards Mr. Kreisler will be interesting to note. Once they knew him to be an Austrian officer and applauded him—as recently as two weeks ago. Will the news that Pittsburgh has refused a performance license to Mr. Kreisler turn his friends to foes?

It is not the province of a reviewer to discuss questions of government or police policy, but we hope that officials, like the public, will consider that Mr. Kreisler's beautiful playing can certainly lend no aid or comfort to the enemy.

This paper has constantly maintained that every artist of foreign, enemy, birth now in the United States, should be watched most carefully. This, of course, applies to Dr. Muck as fully as any other. The secret service department of our country is "on the job."

We hope every artist, like certain singers in New York, who indulge in alleged seditious talk, will be treated with loss of position and then by the proper authorities. We do hope, however, that great artists, who have long been admired and, what is more, respected, against whose character as men and women there has never been a reproach, will be treated with the consideration with which they have always been treated by the great American public.

Kreisler, "Not Like Muck," Will Be Welcomed in Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Nov. 8.—Baltimore, which has no liking for Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has no quarrel with Fritz Kreisler, the great violinist. Kreisler was recently refused a license to appear in Pittsburgh, because he was at one time an officer in the army of Austria, an ally of Germany, although not an enemy of the United States. Kreisler concerts will be welcomed in Baltimore.

Ex-Gov. Edwin Warfield, head of the anti-Muck leaders, says he will not head any movement to stop Kreisler concerts in Baltimore the first of which is set for Nov. 22.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem, or their flag. But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country, I have no doubt, to try to help Germany win the war by his association with aliens here.

"With Kreisler all is very different. He is accepted everywhere. He has played at many Red Cross conferences. He will be welcomed in Baltimore."

TRANSCRIPT
- NOV. 9, 1917 -

NEWS OF MUSIC

Dr. Muck and the Boston Orchestra in New York—A Tranquil Concert Quite Without "Incident"—Miss Nikoloric and Miss Young in Newcomers' Recitals—Items and Incidents

As in Philadelphia last Monday, as in Washington last Tuesday, not an incident," except unusually hearty applause for Dr. Muck, marked the concert of the Boston Orchestra in New York Thursday evening. Evidently the public of the band, in the city next to Boston in importance to it, is disposed, like the similar public here, to make an end of an embroglio that need never have come to recent pass, had those most concerned been wiser and more tactful in the handling of it. The usual audience assembled in Carnegie Hall yesterday; bore itself in the usual manner and heard a concert that, but for the preface of "The Star-Spangled Banner," went the usual way. Whatever the sources of the recent outcry against orchestra and conductor, it is now clear that little of it comes from the public that weekly or monthly sits before them. Indeed only one item of the much anticipated "news" transpired on the outskirts of the concert and that not of the sort expected. Now that the management of the orchestra has naturally cancelled the schedule for Baltimore; spokesmen for the many who cannot buy tickets for its concerts in New York, since for years every place has been taken by subscription, are pressing for a third concert there during the monthly visits. Whether or not it will be arranged remains to be seen. Mr. Aldrich's justly tempered account in The Times of the concert last evening follows:

> There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing of the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way. There were two or three empty boxes and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage, and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the programme. Major Higginson was present.
>
> The house bill stated that "the National Anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed on the counterpoint of the strings, till the last part, when all joined in the tune robustly. There was much applause and no fault found apparently with the spirit of the whole thing.
>
> The regular numbers of the programme were Brahms's E minor symphony, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem "Prometheus," and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal." Dr. Muck has more than once played Brahms's fourth symphony; and the beautiful version of it that he gives is well remembered; a reading full of life, of sinuous grace in the first movement, of immense vigor in the third and last movements, of lovely sentiment in the andante: everywhere of beautiful color and subtle adjustment of the instrumental voices, of finely turned and pregnant phrasing, of subtle nuancing of tempo. It caused, and very justly, great enthusiasm; Dr. Muck was several times recalled, and made the orchestra rise to share in the applause.
>
> Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is not very exciting. It is difficult to find any interpretation of Shakspeare's hero or of the play in it. There are melodious passages of somewhat more lustre than Berlioz often achieved; there are passages of fine instrumental coloring; but it is not music to touch the imagination. Still less is Liszt's laborious illustration of the fate of Prometheus; one of the least frequently heard of the symphonic poems. The reason why was made plain last evening. The performance of the "Parsifal" prelude was an imposing one.

TRAVELER, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9,

New York Comments on Boston Symphony Concert

New York newspapers give varied accounts of the opening concert in that city of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Times:

Providence Journal
NOV. 9, 1917

The Symphony's Change of Front

Major Higginson says that he received, before the recent Boston Symphony concert in this city, a request from women of Providence unknown to him and not subscribers to the Symphony concerts that the orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon its visit here. But the request, as has been stated again and again, was signed by officers and representatives of several responsible local organizations, nearly all of a musical character; and hundreds of the members of these organizations were subscribers to the Symphony concerts. Major Higginson's explanation does not explain.

The founder and promoter of the Boston organization further says that "The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request has never been refused." Yet Major Higginson declared, after the Providence concert, that the orchestra would never play here again, and Dr. Muck was quoted as saying that the anthem would not be rendered by the organization in New York or anywhere else.

It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star-Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts.

GLOBE. NOV. 9.

MUCK LEADS NATIONAL ANTHEM IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Nov 8—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr Karl Muck, played the "Star Spangled Banner," as the opening number in its first concert of the season here tonight in Carnegie Hall.

The audience applauded with energy when Dr Muck appeared on the stage, for the house bills announced that he would play the National anthem. The audience applauded with still greater energy when he concluded the number.

After its exciting experiences of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck, and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way.

The Sun:

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian, closely affiliated with the imperial government and a personal friend of the Kaiser, was received by the audience with prolonged and hearty applause when he appeared on the stage. Germans in the audience within range of the Sun observer's eyes violently beat their hands.

Dr. Muck personally conducted the national anthem of his country's enemies with dignity. The audience applauded again with energy. The Germans under the Sun representative's observation did not applaud at all. Dr. Muck did not bow in response to the approval of the playing of the anthem. And that was the termination of the tempest in a Boston teapot.

The Tribune:

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder whatever. When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage the audience, which filled the house, with the exception of a few boxes, applauded mildly.

Dr. Muck signalled for the musicians to rise and then at the first note the house followed. At the conclusion of the anthem the applause was warmer and heartier.

New York seemed quite ready to forget the leader's first refusal to conduct the national anthem—more ready than Baltimore, which has refused to allow the orchestra to play there this year.

The Herald:

After the national anthem, during which Dr. Muck gave not the slightest indication of pleasure or displeasure at being ordered to conduct it, everything progressed as in the past. Apparently the severe criticism that the orchestra met was forgotten. The whole body of musicians concentrated their minds on the music and any differences were temporarily put out of consideration.

The World:

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

The World:

Baltimore's exhibition of hysteria over the danger to public security in a symphony concert led by an enemy conductor was bad enough. But it has remained for Pittsburgh to discover a new musical menace to the country in a performance by an alien violinist. The police of that city, having suddenly awakened to the fact that Fritz Kreisler is an officer in the Austrian army, have forbidden him to give an entertainment there on the ground that it would be "unpatriotic."

We are still at war with Austria and the violinist's bow is technically no more an enemy weapon now than it has been these many years. But to the supersensitive militarist imagination the magic wand has suddenly become invested with a direful potency. The spell it exercises is a dangerous spell of some sort since we went to war, and all good citizens must avoid imperilling their patriotism and refrain from lending aid and comfort to the enemy by listening to Kreisler!

Is there any further length to which enemy-music-phobia can go? Will the little German bands be allowed to play "Stille Nacht" when Christmas comes? Are we indeed getting ready to sing our own "Hymn of Hate" against all things German, music and musicians most of all?

The parochial attitude of intolerance manifested would be silly if it were not such a reflection on the American spirit of freedom and fair play. Cabinet officers did not hesitate to attend and applaud the Boston Symphony concert in Washington. Why must local officials imagine a vain peril to the nation in a musical performance?

APVERTISER
— NOV. 9, 1917 —

Our Letter Box

Walter Damrosch on Dr. Muck

To the Editor:—

As I learn to my astonishment that my interview rearding Doctor Muck and the "Star Spangled Banner" has been entirely misquoted in some of the papers, partly through misleading headlines and because only a very small portion of my interview was printed, I take pleasure herewith in sending you the actual statements which I made at the time and which appeared correctly in most of the New York papers:—

If Doctor Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, "How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?" fair-minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

But the explanation that he gives is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?"

Does Doctor Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by "military bands and ballroom orchestras?" He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war, and that, even though he is an "enemy alien," the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter.

There seems to be every reason why the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an American institution should play our national anthem, but that Doctor Muck, after his extraordinary statements, should not be permitted to conduct it. Walter Damrosch.

New York, Nov. 5.

Where Shall We Fight?

HERALD
— NOV. 9, 1917 —

NEW YORK IS KIND TO MUCK

Gives Him Warm Greeting at Symphony Concert in Carnegie Hall.

NATIONAL ANTHEM PLAYED

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—After its exciting experience of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way.

There were two or three empty boxes and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Karl Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the program. Maj. Higginson was present.

The house bill stated that "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the program." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed in counterpoint by the strings till the last part, when all joined in the tune. There was much applause and no fault found, apparently, with the spirit of the whole thing.

President A. Augustus Healy of the board of directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which runs most of the concerts at the Brooklyn Academy and acts as agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's independent series there, was appointed at the regular board meeting today to head a committee to confer with Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston with regard to the concert of the orchestra in the neighboring borough tomorrow. It has already been announced that Dr. Karl Muck will conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" over there.

Maj. Higginson, who accompanied his orchestra to New York and was present at its concert in Carnegie Hall this evening, was expected to meet the Brooklyn committee tomorrow. He has found the usual subscription audiences in other cities, except only Providence and Baltimore, favorable to a continuance of the orchestra with its existing personnel and present leader. There was no concert in Baltimore last Wednesday, and a sold-out house was turned away.

A proposal has been made to the Boston management that it shall use several open dates now abandoned in the Maryland city by giving extra concerts on its monthly tours here in New York, where some hundreds of would-be subscribers are yet on the annual waiting list.

POST
— NOV. 9, 1917 —

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM FIRST

New York Audience Applauds Him Vigorously

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, played "The Star Spangled Banner" as the opening number in its first concert of the season here tonight in Carnegie Hall.

The audience applauded with energy when Dr. Muck appeared on the stage, for the house bills announced that he would play the national anthem. The audience applauded with still greater energy when he concluded the number.

HERALD
NOV. 11, 1917.

MAJ. HIGGINSON SAYS DR. MUCK IS NOT A PRUSSIAN

Tells Brooklyn Committee Director Was Born in Bavaria.

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted "The Star Spangled Banner" in Brooklyn tonight at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual series of concerts in that borough, and an academy audience, 3000 strong, rose to the national anthem as enthusiastically as a crowd at Carnegie Hall had done the previous night in New York. The Brooklyn program included music of Tschaikowski, Beethoven, Liszt and Sibelius, and the conductor shared in general applause for the later numbers—German, Russian and Finnish.

President A. Augustus Healy, who, with Frank L. Babbott and a committee of the institute, met Maj. Higginson before the concert, said they had presented the protests of a number of subscribers against Dr. Muck, first as a Prussian, and, second, as having "refused to conduct" the anthem. Mr. Higginson told the committee that Mr. Muck had not refused to lead the American air when so requested, and that he was not a Prussian citizen, having been born in Bavaria.

HERALD
NOV. 10, 1917 -

If Dr. Muck never refused to play the anthem, why did the program formally announce that the anthem would be played? We are curious to know (one flop).

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 2 - 1917

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL NOT PLAY U. S. ANTHEM

Dr. Muck, Conductor, Refuses to Include Number in New York Concert Programme

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week.

A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our programme for the New York concerts is all made up, and is not liable to any changes. The American National anthem is not on the programme, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter, and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts, I shall pay no more attention to her letter than it was never written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed, we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be, as it has always been, to give the music loving public the most exquisite, artistic compositions, in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

ORCHESTRA TO PLAY ANTHEM

St. Louis Symphony Directors Order National Hymn at Concerts

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert programme; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

99 ADVERTISER — NOV. 9, 1917 —

Our Letter Box

Walter Damrosch on Dr. Muck

To the Editor:—

As I learn to my astonishment that my interview rearding Doctor Muck and the "Star Spangled Banner" has been entirely misquoted in some of the papers, partly through misleading headlines and because only a very small portion of my interview was printed, I take pleasure herewith in sending you the actual statements which I made at the time and which appeared correctly in most of the New York papers:—

If Doctor Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, "How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?" fair-minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

But the explanation that he gives is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?"

Does Doctor Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by "military bands and ballroom orchestras?" He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war, and that, even though he is an "enemy alien," the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter.

There seems to be every reason why the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an American institution should play our national anthem, but that Doctor Muck, after his extraordinary statements, should not be permitted to conduct it. Walter Damrosch.

New York, Nov. 5.

Where Shall We Fight?

HERALD — NOV. 9, 1917 —

NEW YORK IS KIND TO MUCK

Gives Him Warm Greeting at Symphony Concert in Carnegie Hall.

NATIONAL ANTHEM PLAYED

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 8—After its exciting experience of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion that has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way.

There were two or three empty boxes and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Karl Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the program. Maj. Higginson was present.

The house bill stated that "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the program." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed in counterpoint by the strings till the last part, when all joined in the tune. There was much applause and no fault found, apparently, with the spirit of the whole thing.

President A. Augustus Healy of the board of directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which runs most of the concerts at the Brooklyn Academy and acts as agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's independent series there, was appointed at the regular board meeting today to head a committee to confer with Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston with regard to the concert of the orchestra in the neighboring borough tomorrow. It has already been announced that Dr. Karl Muck will conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" over there.

Maj. Higginson, who accompanied his orchestra to New York and was present at its concert in Carnegie Hall this evening, was expected to meet the Brooklyn committee tomorrow. He has found the usual subscription audiences in other cities, except only Providence and Baltimore, favorable to a continuance of the orchestra with its existing personnel and present leader. There was no concert in Baltimore last Wednesday, and a sold-out house was turned away.

A proposal has been made to the Boston management that it shall use several open dates now abandoned in the Maryland city by giving extra concerts on its monthly tours here in New York, where some hundreds of would-be subscribers are yet on the annual waiting list.

POST — NOV. 9, 1917 —

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM FIRST

New York Audience Applauds Him Vigorously

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, played "The Star Spangled Banner" as the opening number in its first concert of the season here tonight in Carnegie Hall.

The audience applauded with energy when Dr. Muck appeared on the stage, for the house bills announced that he would play the national anthem. The audience applauded with still greater energy when he concluded the number.

HERALD — NOV. 11, 1917 —

MAJ. HIGGINSON SAYS DR. MUCK IS NOT A PRUSSIAN

Tells Brooklyn Committee Director Was Born in Bavaria.

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 9—Dr. Karl Muck conducted "The Star Spangled Banner" in Brooklyn tonight at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual series of concerts in that borough, and an academy audience, 3000 strong, rose to the national anthem as enthusiastically as a crowd at Carnegie Hall had done the previous night in New York. The Brooklyn program included music of Tschaikowski, Beethoven, Liszt and Sibelius, and the conductor shared in general applause for the later numbers—German, Russian and Finnish.

President A. Augustus Healy, who, with Frank L. Babbott and a committee of the institute, met Maj. Higginson before the concert, said they had presented the protests of a number of subscribers against Dr. Muck, first as a Prussian, and, second, as having "refused to conduct" the anthem. Mr. Higginson told the committee that Mr. Muck had not refused to lead the American air when so requested, and that he was not a Prussian citizen, having been born in Bavaria.

HERALD — NOV. 10, 1917 —

If Dr. Muck never refused to play the anthem, why did the program formally announce that the anthem would be played? We are curious to know (one flop).

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 2 - 1917

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL NOT PLAY U. S. ANTHEM

Dr. Muck, Conductor, Refuses to Include Number in New York Concert Programme

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week.

A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our programme for the New York concerts is all made up, and is not liable to any changes. The American National anthem is not on the programme, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter, and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts, I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed, we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim, as conductor, will continue to be, as it has always been, to give the music loving public the most exquisite, artistic compositions, in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

ORCHESTRA TO PLAY ANTHEM

St. Louis Symphony Directors Order National Hymn at Concerts

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert programme; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 2 - 19

ORCHESTRA SHOWS FLAG, BUT SHUNS THE ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Conductor Declares He Will Not Play "Star-Spangled Banner."

GOVERNMENT TAKES HAND

Seeking Motive That May Lie Behind the Stubbornness of Dr. Karl Muck.

Special to "The Record."

Boston, Nov. 1.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra bowed slightly today to the public demand that it show a little patriotism. While Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the organization, and Dr. Karl Muck, the German director, insisted that it would not play "The Star-Spangled Banner," a large United States flag was raised over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. This followed criticism by Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Church, that the hall was the only public building in Boston not displaying the Stars and Stripes.

The Symphony gives its regular Friday public rehearsal tomorrow, and the anthem is not on the program. Mayor Curley has been quoted as saying that it must be played or the license of the hall will be revoked. In fact, Director Muck distinctly states that it will not be played at the New York concert of the orchestra next week. In view of his assertions that it has no place in a program of artistic music—an opinion in which Major Higginson agrees—it will not be played in other cities which the orchestra is to visit. Major Higginson has said he will disband the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with the program.

While a demand was made today that Dr. Muck be interned as a dangerous alien enemy, he said when asked in regard to playing the anthem:

"I am not a naturalized citizen of America. Naturally I could not be expected to do as a citizen would do."

In regard to a letter of a New York woman that New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, he said:

"Our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I know. Our manager has investigated this letter and finds that this woman is not a subscriber. I shall pay no more attention to this letter than if it never had been written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization, and we stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of purely national airs or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations. Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it is accustomed from us we would be unworthy of its present gratitude and esteem. My aim has been and will be to give the most artistic compositions in the best manner possible. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony has any excuse for being."

Department of Justice at Work.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1.—The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians of any sort to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally, the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer, he could be dealt with under the Espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, yet remain to be developed by the Government's agents.

At any rate officials in Washington consider the action of Dr. Muck disrespectful, to say the least, and do not regard his explanation worthy of much merit.

Damrosch Criticizes Muck.

New York, Nov. 1.—The question whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at its opening concert here next week was debated further among local patrons of the orchestra today. Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall, said, in reference to the stand of Dr. Muck, that, while he thought it would be an injustice to Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct the national anthem now, at the same time he considered his reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"'The Star-Spangled Banner' is not played in our country because it is a work of art," Damrosch added, "but because it is a symbol of the loyalty and the patriotism of our people in time of war. While I do not believe in cheapening this symbol by producing it on every occasion, it is most fitting that a musical season this year should be introduced by a playing of the anthem. The issue in the case of the Boston Orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it."

Baltimore Will Demand It.

Baltimore, Nov. 1. — A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here November 14, and, unless the national anthem is played, it will be demanded from the floor.

Concert-goers took the matter in hand, today, and it also was brought to the attention of the Federal and mu-

BULLETIN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 2 - 1

ART OR SHAM PATRIOTISM

Question Vexes Musical Circles as Result of Boston Orchestra's Refusal to Play National Anthem

"Pure artistry versus sham patriotism" has been the chief topic for debate in local musical circles since Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, barred the "Star Spangled Banner" from his program. Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem brought a protest from a number of patrons who had purchased tickets for the concert, the organization will give in the Academy of Music on Monday night.

Musicians were divided between their sympathy with Dr. Muck's artistic aims, their sense of patriotism, and the belief that the trouble was due to the conductor's enemies.

Leopold Stokowski, director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, characterized the incident as a "very sad affair."

"The 'Star Spangled Banner' will not be omitted from any concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra," he said.

Mr. Stokowski's statement was corroborated by Alexander Van Rensselaer, president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association; Andrew Wheeler, secretary for the Orchestra, and Arthur Judson, the business manager.

Thaddeus Rich, concertmeister of the Orchestra, and Camille Zechwer expressed the belief that enemies of the conductor had sought this means to humiliate him. Constantin von Sternberg endorsed the view, adding that although the anthem was "in no sense classical music," he personally would include it in every program.

CUTS OUT GERMAN OPERA

No Wagnerian Compositions on Metropolitan Program This Season

(By Associated Press)

New York, Nov. 2.—German operas will not be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House this season. The management has rescinded its decision to include Wagnerian operas in the program. It is said that as a result, Gadski and Otto Goritz will not be among the singers.

The directors reached the conclusion, it is said, that to continue German opera might enable Germany, by garbling despatches for home consumption, to convey the impression that the United States was not heart and soul in the war.

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date

Dr. Muck on "The Star Spangled Banner"

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: The defiance of public sentiment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra deserves the condemnation of all Americans. Dr. Karl Muck, able leader that he is, is a German, released by his government prior to the war for a period of years, to conduct Boston's magnificent band of musicians. As an enemy alien he is tolerated here, even permitted the same freedom as that enjoyed by Americans. Most of his players are Americans either by birth or naturization, and loyal to this country. But Dr. Muck is still German and now that this country is at war with his, flatly refuses to permit this American orchestra, in American cities, to play the acknowledge National Anthem. And the amazing thing about it is that in this he is backed by Mr. Higginson, the orchestra's virtual owner.

We have no quarrel with German music or German composers. We will hear with as much pleasure as ever the grand operas of Wagner, Weber and Mozart; the symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms and others. We are willing to listen to music by German players and German singers with as much pleasure as in antebellum days. We are even willing that this German conductor shall wield his baton as of yore and forget that he is an enemy; but no American should tolerate for a moment an attitude toward the "Star-Spangled Banner" as that adopted by Messrs. Muck and Higginson.

Stokowski, Damrosch and Stransky this season invariably include in their symphony programs the National Anthem. Why should we, therefore, be considerate of Dr. Muck's feelings? There are other conductors, Americans among them, who are perfectly able to take his place.

Mr. Higginson threatens to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra rather than to submit to the dictation. Unless the orchestra plays the anthem here it is a safe bet there will be something doing.

St. Louis Orchestra to Play It.

St. Louis, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons. Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

phony Orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the symphony concert in that city Tuesday evening.

The Boston Orchestra gives the first of its series of ten concerts here in Carnegie Hall a week from tomorrow night, and letters have already appeared in some of the papers asking whether the German leader of the Boston organization inteds to open his local concerts with the anthem. Both the Philharmonic and New York Symphony Orchestras played it at their concerts last week.

rom RECORD
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.

ate NOV 2 - 19

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play "The Star-Spangled Banner," would it like to try the experiment of playing "Die Wacht am Rhein?" Even if the national anthem is not art music, it might be played once in an evening as an act of respect to the United States. If Dr. Muck is so exquisitely constituted that he cannot play the national anthem once an evening to an American audience, and if Miss Geraldine Farrar can't sing anything but German songs, we suggest internment or deportation for both of them. The American people are entitled to courtesy in their own country, even from artists.

BULLETIN
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

- 191

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA FOLLY

Colonel HIGGINSON, proprietor of the Boston Orchestra, proposes to run it to suit his own ideas of art, and is adamant to all appeals to have the National Anthem played at the opening of every concert when all present must rise. For more than thirty years the Boston banker has kept the organization together, and is credited with having invested more than a million dollars in it without hope of recovering any part of it. No orchestra of the kind has ever paid its way in this country, but Boston has the only one with a single guarantor.

It is a much mixed situation in which art and patriotism seem to be in conflict. As a fact it is only a difference in attitude of mind. Surely if there is no particular reason for playing any American hymn at this time, it seems, on the other hand, rather specious to object to it. It is hard to believe that the American mind is so delicately attuned to musical art that it would be swept from its esthetic moorings by hearing a good orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner." It is done twice a week by the Philadelphia Orchestra, and, so far, without any reported damage to art, to artists, or to the public.

Doubtless, many of the members of the Boston Orchestra are Germans, and with natural pro-German feelings, and the conduct of their leader in defending himself has been destitute of sense or tact. Now that the issue has been joined it seems likely that the orchestra will play the National Anthem or will go out of business—as Colonel HIGGINSON suggests. That would be a misfortune for the public, but it would probably relieve the pocketbook of the octogenarian impresario. At any rate, his ideas as to the bit of respect which Dr. MUCK and his orchestra should pay to the emblem of this nation in accordance with a fixed custom, are wholly at variance with those of forty-nine-fiftieths of his countrymen.

As for Dr. MUCK, it is to be said at once, that if, according to the latest reports of his intentions, he shall persist in his refusal to honor the American National Anthem, either the Academy of Music in this city should be closed to him on next Monday night, or the entire auditorium should be empty of its customary audience.

NORTH AMERICAN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that the national anthem is out of place in a purely symphonic program; as Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader of the orchestra, had arranged programs in which the symphony was entirely German, it seems just now to most Americans that Major Higginson is probably right.

If Doctor Muck's program clashes with the "Star-Spangled Banner" it will probably not be the anthem which will go.

Maybe, after all, it's only a misprint. Perhaps his name is Doctor Mucker.

m ENQUIRER
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 2 -

—In answer to criticisms of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because it refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization and its leading patron, said, "You ask me why we should not play it; I ask why we should?"

'S enough. Any so-called American who can't answer that question himself will never have it answered to his satisfaction by any one else.

om PRESS
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

te NOV 2 -

FAIR PLAY.

Those well-meaning ladies and gentlemen of New England who demand that the "Star-Spangled Banner" be played at each concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under penalty of revocation of the orchestra's license would probably be shocked if they were told that they are fostering the same lawless spirit that animated the recent flogging outrage in Kentucky. Yet there is an unpleasant similarity between the two cases. Both are instances of patriotism run amuck. Blind prejudice in the one case, violence in the other, they are equally indefensible.

Because he is a German, Dr. Muck, the conductor of the orchestra, appears to have been singled out as a target for the attacks of over-zealous patriots. If a thoroughly American conductor had declined to play the national anthem on the ground that it had no proper place on a symphony program, we doubt whether the ladies and gentlemen of New England would have attempted to coerce him. In listening to the works of great German masters of music these sensible people have subscribed to the incontestable principle that racial enmity, war, nationality do not exist in the realm of art. Hence this firm insistence upon the "Star-Spangled Banner" is utterly inconsistent, and it has moreover the ugly look of personal prejudice against Dr. Muck.

If that talented gentleman has done anything to warrant the suspicion or dislike of good Americans, then he belongs in a detention camp and is not fit to lead one of the country's greatest orchestras. But if he has behaved circumspectly and is worthy of retaining his baton, it is rank injustice to confront him with the alternative of playing the anthem of a nation with which his country is at war or losing his place. What would the patriots of New England say if Americans in Germany were made under duress to salute the German flag?

ss:

METROPOLITAN DROPS ALL GERMANS' OPERAS

Directors Said to Fear Their Production Would Be Used Politically in Fatherland

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and, in fact, the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera might have a political effect in Germany as evidence that the United States was divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives have induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused tonight to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said today, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programs for the season.

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

19

ORCHESTRA SHOWS FLAG, BUT SHUNS THE ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Conductor Declares He Will Not Play "Star-Spangled Banner."

GOVERNMENT TAKES HAND

Seeking Motive That May Lie Behind the Stubbornness of Dr. Karl Muck.

Special to "The Record."

Boston, Nov. 1.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra bowed slightly today to the public demand that it show a little patriotism. While Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the organization, and Dr. Karl Muck, the German director, insisted that it would not play "The Star-Spangled Banner," a large United States flag was raised over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. This followed criticism by Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Church, that the hall was the only public building in Boston not displaying the Stars and Stripes.

The Symphony gives its regular Friday public rehearsal tomorrow, and the anthem is not on the program. Mayor Curley has been quoted as saying that it must be played or the license of the hall will be revoked. In fact, Director Muck distinctly states that it will not be played at the New York concert of the orchestra next week. In view of his assertions that it has no place in a program of artistic music—an opinion in which Major Higginson agrees—it will not be played in other cities which the orchestra is to visit. Major Higginson has said he will disband the orchestra rather than yield to public interference with the program.

While a demand was made today that Dr. Muck be interned as a dangerous alien enemy, he said when asked in regard to playing the anthem:

"I am not a naturalized citizen of America. Naturally I could not be expected to do as a citizen would do."

In regard to a letter of a New York woman that New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, he said:

"Our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I know. Our manager has investigated this letter and finds that this woman is not a subscriber. I shall pay no more attention to this letter than if it never had been written.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization, and we stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of purely national airs or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations. Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it is accustomed from us we would be unworthy of its present gratitude and esteem. My aim has been and will be to give the most artistic compositions in the best manner possible. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony has any excuse for being."

Department of Justice at Work.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1.—The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians of any sort to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck [illegible] unusually large tion to the cus-ge of colors to nes among the namentation.

Warm
Lambs'-wool-li or white Japanese less kind, and $6.8
(Th

Warm Ma
a
The popular "
several styles an $16.50; junior siz
Other mackina and $12; junior, $

These
?
by Meredith a burglar and lesson of a right begin-[illegible]hout so much misery,

[illegible]quare deal universally Better—de Over
2 to 8 years. 75c, 85c, $1 and t nightgowns,
sizes. 85c—6 to 12 year sizes.
rd Floor, Chestnut)

BULLETIN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

19

ART OR SHAM PATRIOTISM

Question Vexes Musical Circles as Result of Boston Orchestra's Refusal to Play National Anthem

"Pure artistry versus sham patriotism" has been the chief topic for debate in local musical circles since Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, barred the "Star Spangled Banner" from his program. Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem brought a protest from a number of patrons who had purchased tickets for the concert, the organization will give in the Academy of Music on Monday night.

Musicians were divided between their sympathy with Dr. Muck's artistic aims, their sense of patriotism, and the belief that the trouble was due to the conductor's enemies.

Leopold Stokowski, director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, characterized the incident as a "very sad affair."

"The 'Star Spangled Banner' will not be omitted from any concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra," he said.

Mr. Stokowski's statement was corroborated by Alexander Van Rensselaer, president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association; Andrew Wheeler, secretary for the Orchestra, and Arthur Judson, the business manager.

Thaddeus Rich, concertmeister of the Orchestra, and Camille Zechwer expressed the belief that enemies of the conductor had sought this means to humiliate him. Constantin von Sternberg endorsed the view, adding that although the anthem was "in no sense classical music," he personally would include it in every program.

CUTS OUT GERMAN OPERA

No Wagnerian Compositions on Metropolitan Program This Season

(By Associated Press)

New York, Nov. 2.—German operas will not be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House this season. The management has rescinded its decision to include Wagnerian operas in the program. It is said that as a result, Gadski and Otto Goritz will not be among the singers.

The directors reached the conclusion, it is said, that to continue German opera might enable Germany, by garbling despatches for home consumption, to convey the impression that the United States was not heart and soul in the war.

[illegible]SES

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date

Dr. Muck on "The Star Spangled Banner"

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: The defiance of public sentiment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra deserves the condemnation of all Americans. Dr. Karl Muck, able leader that he is, is a German, released by his government prior to the war for a period of years, to conduct Boston's magnificent band of musicians. As an enemy alien he is tolerated here, even permitted the same freedom as that enjoyed by Americans. Most of his players are Americans either by birth or naturization, and loyal to this country. But Dr. Muck is still German and now that this country is at war with his, flatly refuses to permit this American orchestra, in American cities, to play the acknowledge National Anthem. And the amazing thing about it is that in this he is backed by Mr. Higginson, the orchestra's virtual owner.

We have no quarrel with German music or German composers. We will hear with as much pleasure as ever the grand operas of Wagner, Weber and Mozart; the symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms and others. We are willing to listen to music by German players and German singers with as much pleasure as in antebellum days. We are even willing that this German conductor shall wield his baton as of yore and forget that he is an enemy; but no American should tolerate for a moment an attitude toward the "Star-Spangled Banner" as that adopted by Messrs. Muck and Higginson.

Stokowski, Damrosch and Stransky this season invariably include in their symphony programs the National Anthem. Why should we, therefore, be considerate of Dr. Muck's feelings? There are other conductors, Americans among them, who are perfectly able to take his place.

Mr. Higginson threatens to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra rather than to submit to public demand. This would be regrettable, but there are worse calamities, and to permit Dr. Muck to get away with this would be distinctly humiliating to all Americans.

MUSIQUE.

PRESS
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

AGOG OVER MUCK'S ACTION IN NEW YORK MUSIC CIRCLES

New York, Oct. 31.—New York music circles were agog today over the report from Providence, R. I., that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the symphony concert in that city Tuesday evening.

The Boston Orchestra gives the first of its series of ten concerts here in Carnegie Hall a week from tomorrow night, and letters have already appeared in some of the papers asking whether the German leader of the Boston organization inteds to open his local concerts with the anthem. Both the Philharmonic and New York Symphony Orchestras played it at their concerts last week.

rom RECORD
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play "The Star-Spangled Banner," would it like to try the experiment of playing "Die Wacht am Rhein?" Even if the national anthem is not art music, it might be played once in an evening as an act of respect to the United States. If Dr. Muck is so exquisitely constituted that he cannot play the national anthem once an evening to an American audience, and if Miss Geraldine Farrar can't sing anything but German songs, we suggest internment or deportation for both of them. The American people are entitled to courtesy in their own country, even from artists.

BULLETIN
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA FOLLY

Colonel HIGGINSON, proprietor of the Boston Orchestra, proposes to run it to suit his own ideas of art, and is adamant to all appeals to have the National Anthem played at the opening of every concert when all present must rise. For more than thirty years the Boston banker has kept the organization together, and is credited with having invested more than a million dollars in it without hope of recovering any part of it. No orchestra of the kind has ever paid its way in this country, but Boston has the only one with a single guarantor.

It is a much mixed situation in which art and patriotism seem to be in conflict. As a fact it is only a difference in attitude of mind. Surely if there is no particular reason for playing any American hymn at this time, it seems, on the other hand, rather specious to object to it. It is hard to believe that the American mind is so delicately attuned to musical art that it would be swept from its esthetic moorings by hearing a good orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner." It is done twice a week by the Philadelphia Orchestra, and, so far, without any reported damage to art, to artists, or to the public.

Doubtless, many of the members of the Boston Orchestra are Germans, and with natural pro-German feelings, and the conduct of their leader in defending himself has been destitute of sense or tact. Now that the issue has been joined it seems likely that the orchestra will play the National Anthem or will go out of business—as Colonel HIGGINSON suggests. That would be a misfortune for the public, but it would probably relieve the pocketbook of the octogenarian impresario. At any rate, his ideas as to the bit of respect which Dr. MUCK and his orchestra should pay to the emblem of this nation in accordance with a fixed custom, are wholly at variance with those of forty-nine-fiftieths of his countrymen.

As for Dr. MUCK, it is to be said at once, that if, according to the latest reports of his intentions, he shall persist in his refusal to honor the American National Anthem, either the Academy of Music in this city should be closed to him on next Monday night, or the entire auditorium should be empty of its customary audience.

NORTH AMERICAN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that the national anthem is out of place in a purely symphonic program; as Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader of the orchestra, had arranged programs in which the symphony was entirely German. It seems just now to most Americans that Major Higginson is probably right.

If Doctor Muck's program clashes with the "Star-Spangled Banner" it will probably not be the anthem which will go.

Maybe, after all, it's only a misprint. Perhaps his name is Doctor Mucker.

m ENQUIRER
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

—In answer to criticisms of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because it refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization and its leading patron, said, "You ask me why we should not play it; I ask why we should?"

'S enough. Any so-called American who can't answer that question himself will never have it answered to his satisfaction by any one else.

om PRESS
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

80

te

FAIR PLAY.

Those well-meaning ladies and gentlemen of New England who demand that the "Star-Spangled Banner" be played at each concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under penalty of revocation of the orchestra's license would probably be shocked if they were told that they are fostering the same lawless spirit that animated the recent flogging outrage in Kentucky. Yet there is an unpleasant similarity between the two cases. Both are instances of patriotism run amuck. Blind prejudice in the one case, violence in the other, they are equally indefensible.

Because he is a German, Dr. Muck, the conductor of the orchestra, appears to have been singled out as a target for the attacks of over-zealous patriots. If a thoroughly American conductor had declined to play the national anthem on the ground that it had no proper place on a symphony program, we doubt whether the ladies and gentlemen of New England would have attempted to coerce him. In listening to the works of great German masters of music these sensible people have subscribed to the incontestable principle that racial enmity, war, nationality do not exist in the realm of art. Hence this firm insistence upon the "Star-Spangled Banner" is utterly inconsistent, and it has moreover the ugly look of personal prejudice against Dr. Muck.

If that talented gentleman has done anything to warrant the suspicion or dislike of good Americans, then he belongs in a detention camp and is not fit to lead one of the country's greatest orchestras. But if he has behaved circumspectly and is worthy of retaining his baton, it is rank injustice to confront him with the alternative of playing the anthem of a nation with which his country is at war or losing his place. What would the patriots of New England say if Americans in Germany were made under duress to salute the German flag?

ss:

METROPOLITAN DROPS ALL GERMANS' OPERAS

Directors Said to Fear Their Production Would Be Used Politically in Fatherland

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 1. German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and, in fact, the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera might have a political effect in Germany as evidence that the United States was divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives have induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused tonight to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said today, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programs for the season.

From PUBLIC NORTH AMERICAN
Address: PHILADELPHIA, Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 2 - 1917

Current Topics of the Town

IT WAS Philadelphia that first gave a cordial and a stabilizing recognition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra away from its home town.

That is the testimony of Wilhelm Gericke, a predecessor of Karl Muck in the leadership of the orchestra.

Philadelphia is wondering if the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its visit here next Monday evening will reward the loyal support of thirty-two years by ignoring its desire to have at least the opening concert of the season prefaced by the performance of the "Star Spangled Banner."

The orchestra insulted Providence—will it insult Philadelphia?

DR. W. W. KEEN, who wears the uniform of a major of the United States army and who nobly served his country in the Civil War, speaks for his city when he says:

"I notice that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and especially its leader, refused at Providence, R. I., to play the national hymn.

"These are the gravest days we have ever encountered as a nation. It is wartime. The playing of the national hymn is not a question of music, but a question of loyalty, a question of patriotism.

"If the orchestra next Monday night refuses to play it, I trust that the audience will rise en masse and leave the hall at once as a rebuke."

MAJOR HENRY L. HIGGINSON is quoted as saying that "it would be a gross mistake—a violation of artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

Until Major Higginson said that—if he said it—he seemed worthy to be called the Major Keen of Boston. He has been honored for his splendid service to humanity since as a young man he fought in the Civil War.

I have never heard addresses that seemed to me to reflect a deeper, truer devotion to country than those of Major Higginson.

And what does he mean now by declaring that the national anthem has no place on the program of the orchestra of which he is the mainspring?

None among us asks to hear that anthem in season and out of season. There is such a thing as overdoing it. It ought to be saved for occasions. But one of those occasions arises when the people unite to demand it.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

MAY DEAL WITH MUCK UNDER ESPIONAGE ACT

Washington, Nov. 1.—The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star Spangled Banner," may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians of any sort to play the National Anthem, the refusal to Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally, the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer he could be dealt with under the espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, remain to be developed by the Government's agents.

At any rate, officials in Washington consider the action of Dr. Muck disrespectful to say the least and regard his explanation as poor.

GERALDINE FARRAR SINGS THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Haverhill, Mass., Nov. 1.—Geraldine Farrar, who is under the management of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had to add "The Star-Spangled Banner" to her program tonight. It was her all-German program before the Boston Symphony last Sunday that started demands for the anthem to be played by the orchestra. Mayor Morse, of Haverhill, after many protests requested her to sing the anthem and she said she would be pleased to do so.

DAMROSCH WITH DR. MUCK AGAINST PLAYING ANTHEM

Calls It Injustice to Ask Prussian Citizen to Lead 'Star-Spangled Banner'

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Walter Damrosch took issue today with those musicians who are criticising Dr. Karl Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for refusing to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner." He expresses the belief that it was unfair to attempt to force Doctor Muck to conduct the national air while the United States is at war with Germany, of which country he is a subject. Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Doctor Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia, and is in this country not by his own desire, but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty.

"I should think that the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' under the direction of an assistant conductor."

Asked whether the national anthem would be played at the Symphony's concert in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night, Doctor Muck, who is now in Boston, announced emphatically that never would his orchestra accede to the public demand in this respect.

"The public has no right to make such a demand on a purely artistic organization. We are simply an artistic organization, and, as such, have nothing to do with merely national and political compositions."

BALTIMORE HINTS AT ROW IF ANTHEM ISN'T HEARD

BALTIMORE, Nov. 1.—A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here on November 14, and unless the national anthem is played it will be demanded from the floor of the Lyric.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand today and it was also brought to the attention of the federal and municipal authorities. Baltimore has never needed much excuse for mob action. Unless the orchestra plays the national anthem here it is a safe bet there will be something doing.

SEATHOLDERS FOR CONCERT PROTEST DR. MUCK'S ACTION

Refusal of Doctor Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to give "The Star-Spangled Banner" a place in his program yesterday brought a protest from persons who have purchased seats for the concert which the organization is to give at the Academy of Music next Monday night.

Altho all the local agents of the orchestra refused to discuss the situation, it is known that a large number of patrons of the orchestra have protested to the management against Doctor Muck's attitude. It was denied yesterday that any subscriptions to the concerts had been canceled this far.

Neither Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, nor Arthur Judson, manager, would comment on the attitude of Doctor Muck yesterday.

"The affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are no business of ours," said Mr. Judson. "The Philadelphia Orchestra has played 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at every concert this season, and will continue to do so as long as there seems to be any necessity for it.

"I might also point out that the directors of the orchestra have invested $59,000 in Liberty bonds and the members have put all the available cash in their emergency fund in Liberty bonds."

Members of the musical profession were outspoken yesterday as to the effect of Doctor Muck's attitude.

"It makes no difference now," said one man, "whether Doctor Muck and Major Higginson adhere to their refusal to play the hymn or whether they agree to do it. The fact remains that they have refused, and that is enough to change the attitude of the American public toward the organization.

"I have no doubt that the Boston Orchestra will feel the effect of this bit of publicity for many months to come."

The concert at the Academy of Music next Monday night will be the first of a short tour which the Boston Symphony is making as far south as Washington. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week it will play in New York.

In recent seasons Doctor Muck has been under fire repeatedly on account of his attitude with respect to programs. He has been repeatedly criticised for his rigid rules in program making and his consistent refusal to include new works and the works of American composers in his program. "Is the Boston Symphony to be considered merely a museum for the exhibition of the old masterpieces?" was a question asked recently by an important New York critic.

Whether the cities to be visited by the organization on its present tour will insist on the performance of the national hymn is a problem whose solution will be eagerly awaited by musicians the country over.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

RESOLUTIONS SCORE MUCK FOR FAILING TO PLAY ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Arouses Providence People's Ire at Act.

FEDERAL AGENT REPORTS

Manager Ellis Gives Reasons for Ignoring Requests for Song.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play the "Star Spangled Banner," at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commission was requested by the Council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war, "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was announced, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, would make a detailed report to Washington with the recommendation that the orchestra be refused permission to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its program.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the Orchestra, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played but that they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

The telegram asking that the national anthem be played at the concert was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee, of Rhode Island. The telegram, with the names of club officers signing it, was printed in an afternoon paper yesterday.

ANTHEM AT ALL CONCERTS, ST. LOUIS ORCHESTRA VOTES

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts. Max Zach, director, opposed playing the anthem at symphony concerts, because it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program, but he was willing to play it at popular concerts.

From PUBLIC Ledger
PHIA, PA.
Address:
1917

The Boston Teapot Tempest

DR. KARL MUCK, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seems to deserve the hauling over the coals—or it might be called the Muck-raking—he is getting for his pertinacious refusal to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, wherein he was requested to introduce the air by a number of organizations.

The issue need not have arisen if a sincere desire to pay "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind" had existed in the mind of the conductor of the orchestra instead of a ridiculous obstinacy which adheres to its original intention merely to save the face of a false pride and to defend a fantastic and inflated egotism.

Major Higginson is quoted as saying in behalf of the management, "Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

If the word "it" applied to Doctor Muck's bumptious self-assertion, to his deliberate and cynical defiance of the public that has supported and applauded him, then Major Higginson would be quite correct. Colossal arrogance of this type has no place on the conductor's dais, no place in the temple of art, no place among the exalted and imperishable principles which a symphony orchestra is created to interpret.

But no—Major Higginson refers to the "Star Spangled Banner." The air that is good enough to send our men forward under the flag to die for their country and to inspire us afresh to an unfaltering loyalty at home is not good enough to preface such works as Richard Strauss's "Domestic Symphony," which depicts a baby crying in a bathtub, or Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," which describes the antics of a crazy broomstick, or "The Merry Pranks of Till Eulenspiegel."

Major Higginson is a patriot—but a patriot may be misguided; he is a public benefactor—but a public benefactor may be woefully mistaken. This country is at war. It is at war with all its resources, and it is the first business of its loyal musicians to sustain and fortify the patriotic disposition of the people. Those of alien origin who even seem to contemn our national anthem have only themselves to blame if they incur the odium they deserve when they stand contemptuously superior to the precious inheritance of the will and the spirit of the people as expressed in a national anthem.

Does Doctor Muck care to place himself on a parity with the Mexicans who refused to salute our flag?

PRESS
— NOV. 2, 1917 —

BOSTON SYMPHONY FORCED TO HOIST U. S. FLAG OVER HALL

Yields to Public Demand in This, But Dr. Muck Declares He Will Not Have "The Star Spangled Banner" Played—Points Out That He Isn't a Citizen.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Boston, Nov. 1.—While Dr. Karl Muck, German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, insisted today that he would not have "The Star Spangled Banner" played at the forthcoming concerts of the orchestra in New York or elsewhere in its tour which begins next week, the management of the orchestra yielded to the public demand so far as to have a large flag displayed on Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra.

There were reports that Mayor Curley had threatened to revoke the licence of the hall unless the anthem were played. The management professed to know nothing of this and the Mayor was in New York.

The Providence "Journal" which exposed many German spies, demanded today that Muck be interned as a dangerous enemy alien, and Muck in an interview said:—

I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of the United States.

Our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any change. The American National anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I know. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed from us we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim has been and will continue to be to give the music-loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think that the Boston symphony has any excuse for being.

ST. LOUIS ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last Spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has ben played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts ,on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

rom RECORD

ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.

te.....

FLAYS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Rhode Island Defense Council Says It Refused National Anthem.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Karl Muck "for his deliberately insulting attitude in failing to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The police commission was requested by the Council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, would make a detailed report to Washington with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its program.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that the "Star Spangled Banner" be played, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received. It was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island. The telegram, with the names of club officers signing it, was printed in an afternoon paper yesterday.

Founder Opposes Demand.

Boston, Oct. 31.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today threatened to withdraw his support and cause the orchestra to disband if the demand that it play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at each concert should continue.

"If the public goes too far in this thing," he said, "I will withdraw my support, which will probably mean the orchestra's disorganization. And if it should break up, I don't believe it will ever be reorganized. It mean mean, also, that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now.

"Now, as to 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' Why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. Last spring at the 'Pops' we played the anthem and 'America' every night. Another man was leading the orchestra then, but there was no dodging. It was because our contracts have arranged for Dr. Karl Muck to conduct in the winter. Those were popular summer concerts. These are not. People think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem. Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheer-

n ..... PHILADELPHIA

ress: .....

e .....

U. S. AGENT URGES FEDERAL BAN ON BOSTON SYMPHONY

Major H. L. Higginson Won't Force Playing of "Star Spangled Banner"

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Following the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, to play the "Star Spangled Banner" as part of its concert program here last evening, Special Agent Thomas Howick, of the Department of Justice, today telegraphed his superiors in Washington particulars of the case and recommended that the orchestra be prohibited from fulfilling all later engagements unless the anthem be played.

The Rhode Island Council of Defense, at a meeting today, passed resolutions condemning Doctor Muck's attitude and requested the police commission to refuse license of further concerts by the orchestra during the war. The directors of the Musicians' Association adopted similar resolutions.

Previous to the appearance of the orchestra here last evening officers of the nine women's musical clubs of this city and Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the local Liberty Loan committee, telegraphed to Boston asking that the national anthem be played as part of the program.

The management not only ignored the request, but, anticipating trouble, refused admission to the hall except to holders of season tickets. It was admitted later that the orchestra had played the anthem at popular concerts in Boston, but that Doctor Muck did not lead on this occasion.

Higginson Is Defiant

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Oct. 31.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when asked today concerning the trouble at Providence last night when it was said that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner," stated that he would abandon the symphony orchestra altogether rather than force it to play the anthem.

"For thirty years," said the major, "I have been selling a certain thing, to wit: High-class music. It is so advertised and everybody knows what to expect.

"My contracts with my players call for a certain number of weeks of art music, after which I say to them there will be popular concerts, in which you may play if you wish. It is all in the contract.

"I could not, without breaking it, have the program changed. As a matter of fact I have nothing to do with the program. It is made up by Doctor Muck during the summer and goes through the winter as it is. Some people in Providence are trying to make trouble. I have almost decided as a result to give up the Providence concerts altogether.

No Request From Subscriber

"Last night we received some requests from people to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' at Providence. We looked up the lists of subscribers and found that none who requested the national anthem was on the list. As a result, we decided not to play the piece. It would have been out of place in the program, which was a purely harmonic one. Doctor Muck had nothing to do with it.

"There are those who accuse Doctor Muck of un-Americanism. I have been to the highest authorities in Washington, to former United States District Attorney Anderson and to the Secret Service concerning stories about Doctor Muck. I find that there is absolutely nothing against him.

"In the matter of the 'Star Spangled Banner'—they ask me why we should not play it. I ask why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Major Higginson spoke of the obstacles that have beset him in the conduct of an orchestra which embraces musicians of twenty-five nationalities, particularly since the United States entered the war. He made it plain that he has received criticisms from friends and also anonymous letters making false accusations against its members.

"When a man or a woman—for many of them are—sends an anonymous letter like that accusing some man it's like sticking a dirk in a man's back. They've a notion they are going to test my loyalty.

Threatens to Sell Hall

"For several decades I have given my time so that Boston might have this orchestra, but when Doctor Muck goes the orchestra will go, and Symphony Hall, which costs me $13,000 to $18,000 a year to maintain, may be sold.

"Now as to the 'Star Spangled Banner,' why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. If it did it would be played. Last summer during our summer concerts with the two-thirds orchestra we played that and 'America' every night, and those who went know it. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging it, because our contracts have arranged for Doctor Muck to conduct at the winter concerts.

"Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe you were for him? No. They'd say:

"'Put that man in the guard house and watch him.'

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any par-

NORTH AMERICAN

Philadelphia, Pa.

U. S. ANTHEM BARRED BY BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Higginson Threatens to Disband Players if Outcry Continues

PLEADS ART REASONS

BOSTON, Oct. 31.—Major Higginson threatens to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra if the outcry caused by its refusal to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" continues. He stated today he ordered the sale of tickets stopped at Providence, where a protest was made, for fear of trouble.

He threatens to sell Symphony Hall. He explains the omission of the anthem in the program on the ground of art and make-up of the numbers far in advance. He says that the German members of the orchestra have been O. K.'d by federal authorities.

RHODE ISLAND DEFENSE COUNCIL REBUKES MUCK

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by prominent women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island council of defense.

The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Doctor Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action will be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the department of justice, will make a detailed report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its program.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this city, asking that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played, but that ts they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Doctor Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

The telegram asking that the national anthem be played at the concert was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island. The telegram, with the names of club officers signing it, was printed in an afternoon paper yesterday.

ENQUIRER

Philadelphia, Pa.

..... 1 - 1917

82

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY BE DISBANDED

Orchestra's Patron Threatens Action If Clamor for National Anthem Does Not Cease

"Star-Spangled Banner" Out of Place in Harmonic Programmes, Says Major Higginson

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 31.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced today that the orchestra would be disbanded and Symphony Hall sold if public clamor for the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" continued.

The matter was brought to a head by demands that the anthem be played by the orchestra at a concert in Providence last night. This followed protests over Geraldine Farrar's all-German programme when she was the soloist at the orchestra's pension fund concert in Boston Sunday.

Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice at Providence, today recommended to Washington that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the anthem should be played.

Major Higginson said the anthem was out of place in purely harmonic programmes. It has no place in a programme of artistic symphony music, he said. He added that Dr. Muck made up the programmes in the summer and that when war was started he addressed the orchestra and asked them to forget their racial differences. More than a dozen nationalities are represented in it. The Major said that the Department of Justice had reported to him that none of the German members, even the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, was under suspicion.

"They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play the anthem," said the Major. "Suppose you were in Germany and got up and cheered the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you you were for him? No. They'd say: 'Put that man in the madhouse and watch him.'"

Dr. Muck said:

"Why will people be so silly. Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

R. I. DEFENSE COUNCIL CONDEMNS ORCHESTRA

By Associated Press.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Kark Muck, its conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Council of Defense of this State. The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he had received a telegram signed by a number of women, asking that the "Star-Spangled Banner" be played but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know such a telegram had been received.

The telegram asking that the National Anthem be played at the concert was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles. It was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee of Rhode Island.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md. NOV 3
Date

PLAYS IT AND RESIGNS

Director Muck, Of Boston Symphony, Yields To Pressure.

ANTHEM CLOSES THE PROGRAM

Acceptance Of Resignation By Maj. Higginson Uncertain — Given Ovation By Boston Audience.

Boston, Mass, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" today with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preusserisher general musik director leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is ucertain. Symphony Hall officials said the playing of the National Anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

It was the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the archestra, as usual, a society event with the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above whcih floated an American flog in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoekd unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading: "'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I ocnsidered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

Says His Loss Would Be Disaster.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To losehim would be a disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the Major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced he received another great tribute of applause. Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra arther than yield to pubilc interference with its programs. Tomorrow evening it will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only today had been arranged for so far, but that the symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons.

It Will Be Played.

There is no doubt, however, but that the anthem will be played by the symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous alien, but the Providence Journal, which started the agitation for the playing of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

New York Prepared To Bar It.

New York, Nov. 2.—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from giving its oencert next Thursday unless Dr. Muck agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel, previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the Corporation Counsel.

Santelmann Takes Issue.

[From The Sun Bureau.]

Washington, Nov. 2.—Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the famous Marine Band, took sharp issue with Director Muck today over the statement that the national anthem has no rightful place upon a program of artistic symphony music.

"The national anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic the program might be," said Mr Santelmann. "In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Lieutenant Santelmann's family originally came from Germany. He is a strong supporter of the war against Kaiserism and has a son at Camp Meade.

NEWS
Address: Baltimore, Md. NOV 2 - 1917

DR. MUCK'S STAND CONDEMNED HERE

Leader Refused To Play National Anthem.

The reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to grant numerous requests for the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, as described in dispatches, has aroused loyal Baltimoreans, especially as the orchestra is scheduled to give its first concert at the Lyric season within a few days.

Not only has the statement concerning Dr. Muck's alleged refusal to play the national anthem created astonishment but it has also stirred up more than a little wrath.

A number of subscribers to the series of five concerts the orchestra will give at the Lyric expressed themselves very forcibly yesterday and angry protests were heard on all sides.

"Our people should insist that the concerts here open with 'The Star-Spangled Banner,'" Edward H. Morrison of Roland Park said in a letter to The News, "and they should not be allowed to proceed unless it be done. Walter Damrosch began his New York season with a patriotic speech and the national anthem and Joseph Stransky did the same thing."

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Conservatory, was evidently much concerned over the report of Dr. Muck's coup, but when he was asked to make a statement he said that he had not had time to think the matter over and did not wish to give an interview until he had carefully considered it.

SUN
ss: Baltimore, Md.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra And "The Star-Spangled Banner"—Correspondents Denounce As Disloyal The Refusal To Play The National Hymn.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I inclose you a copy of a letter I sent Mr. C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

Mr. C. A. Ellis, Boston Symphony Orchestra:

Dear Mr. Ellis—I have just read the account in THE SUN of the refusal of the orchestra to play the national anthem in Providence and the alleged statement of Mr. Higginson. If the latter is correct, I confess that I have never read a more childish reason assigned for a refusal to do a very obvious and graceful action.

As a long-time subscriber, I make the request that you have "The Star-Spangled Banner" played at the close of the concert next Wednesday night. If the men who compose the orchestra and its conductor refuse to do this, it will be an easy matter to classify them: the organization should be disbanded and the money of the subscribers refunded.

B. MERRILL HOPKINSON, M. D.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Apropos of the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence, I will say that I do not believe that being a musician should act as a cloak to cover disloyalty. I note that Colonel Higginson says that the national hymn has no place in the program of this high-toned organization. This might be so in ordinary times, but we are not living in ordinary times now, for we are fighting in a death struggle with Germany and Austria, and, to my mind, we have no place in this country for loyal subjects of either of the powers at war with us, and the leader of the Boston Symphony is doubtless a better subject of the Kaiser than of America.

I note that Kreisler is booked for the soloist at one of the Boston Symphony concerts to be given here this winter. He is an Austrian, and, I am told, sends his money to his fatherland, and so our own money is used against us. I think in these times American audiences might give the "go by" to disloyal orchestras and soloists.

R. BROOKE HOPKINS.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" Should Come First.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: "The Star-Spangled Banner" should be played as the first number on the program when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its opening concert November 7, and at each subsequent concert, and the patrons of these concerts should rise in their seats, if necessary, and not permit the concert to proceed until this is done. E. H. M.
Roland Park, Oct. 31.

STAR
ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 1 - 1917

MUCK IS IN U.S. BY CONSENT OF KAISER

Conductor of Boston Symphony Was Titled By Germany's Imperial Head.

THE EMPEROR LIKED AMERICANS

Orchestra Continues to Refuse to Play National Anthem at Concerts.

"Dr. Karl Muck said today that the orchestra would not include The Star-spangled Banner in its New York concert repertoire next week," says a Boston dispatch to The Star.

Tremendous interest has been aroused not only in musical but in all circles, both here and throughout the United States, by the reported refusal of the noted Boston Symphony Orchestra organization, Karl Muck, conductor, to play the Star-spangled Banner at a concert in Providence, R. I., on October 30, when requested. The attitude as reported of Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, of Boston, the orchestra's staunch financial backer for years, is also arresting attention. The orchestra is just beginning its thirty-seventh season.

This circumstance recalls vividly a certain circumstance in Baltimore last spring. The United States declared war upon Germany on April 6, 1917. Following this and since, concert orchestras throughout the United States began playing the Star-spangled Banner or America at their concerts. Immediately previous to this time, as is well-known, national feeling in this country against Germany was bitter and no one knew it any better than the Germans in the United States. Yet, in spite of this, Dr. Karl Muck had the grea indelicacy to present in Baltimor on Wednesday, March 14, less tha a month before the actual declara tion of war was made, an all-Teu tonic program, with a German spe cial soloist (Elena Gerhardt) sing ing in the German language. Atten tion was called to this by The Star at the time.

Belief was expressed in more than one quarter that Dr. Muck's action in doing this under such national circumstances was nothing short of an insult in effect, and, without doubt, it was felt all the more keenly in Baltimore by citizens of the United States who love their country, because of the long and hard efforts which were made here to secure for Baltimore permanent annual series of concerts by this orchestra.

It seems not to be realized by many that Dr. Muck came to the United States by Kaiser Wilhelm's "imperial consent." Due mention of this concession was emphasized throughout the country when Dr. Muck came to Boston in 1906, and also of his later decoration by the Kaiser. It is recorded in a history of the orchestra by M. A. DeWolfe Howe, published November, 1914, under the title The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This record says:

"The imperial consent to his leaving Berlin had first of all to be obtained."

Immediately following these words is this assertion—most curious in the light of present events:

"In an interview soon after his arrival in America Dr. Muck attributed this consent entirely to the Emperor's regard for Americans, especially for Harvard University, with which Mr. Higginson was known to be closely associated."

In closing, the paragraph says Dr. Muck's engagement resulted from long negotiations.

On another page the book says:

"After the single year of absence from Berlin granted by the Emperor he was induced to grant yet another."

Next in this connection it says of Dr. Muck:

"In January of 1908 it became clear that his absence from Berlin would not be longer extended. Realizing and acknowledging the fact that a director could hardly find himself in a post in which the conditions for artistic satisfaction are so completely met, he resigned his position. When he returned to Germany it was not without the hope—felt also in America—that he would yet again return to Boston."

Dr. Muck's present orchestra engagement began with the season of 1912-13 under contract for a term of five years. The five years, therefore, has expired. Particulars of his reengagement are not known here. It was rumored during the summer just past that his services would not be retained, but evidently they have, as he is advertised conductor of the orchestra this season.

Dr. Muck's decoration by the Kaiser is told by Howe's historical sketch of [illegible] at the same time [illegible]hard Strauss. In the 200 years through which the Royal Orchestra had existed in Berlin, this title had previously been bestowed but three times—to Spontini in 1820, to Meyerbeer in 1842, and to Mendelssohn in 1843. Fortunately, the honor did not carry with it the necessity of remaining permanently in Berlin, though it could hardly have made it easier for Dr. Muck to receive the further release permitting the resumption of his work in Boston. Otherwise the interval between his two terms of service would have been shorter."

A dispatch from San Francisco on January 10 said that a Frederick Greisheimer was found guilty in the Superior Court there that day of having obtained money from Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under false pretenses and was sentenced to 18 months in San Quentin Penitentiary. The dispatch added:

"Greisheimer is said to have told Dr. Muck the money was to be used in financing a pro-German newspaper."

This, of course, was before the United States' declaration of war against Germany.

A present dispatch quotes C. A. El-

NEWS
Baltimore, Md. NOV 3 - 1917

DR. KARL MUCK RESIGNS FROM BIG ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Loses Leader, Who Declined To Play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

EX-GOV. WARFIELD ACTS

Tells Police Commissioners That Patriotic Residents Will Not Allow Appearance Here.

(By the Associated Press.)

Goodbye, Gadski Et Al!

(By the Associated Press.)

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 2.—The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had been criticised for not playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence, was an-

[illegible]gginson
lis, manager of the orchestra, as saying he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of Providence asking that The Star-spangled Banner be played, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know such a telegram had been received.

Major Higginson is said to threaten to withdraw his support from the orchestra "if the public goes too far in this thing," and that this probably would mean disorganization of it probably for all time and sale of the Boston Symphony Hall, in Boston, which "is losing $15,000 a year now." He is quoted also as saying, "I do not propose to have the public interfere with the program," and that "this will probably be the last year the symphony will go to Providence, because of last night's affair." He is also reported as saying that Dr. Muck makes the programs, and that he (Major Higginson) not only has "nothing to do with the program," but also could not, without breaking his contract with his players, have the program changed, and to say "I ask why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Musicians and music lovers in the United States always have regarded Major Higginson highly for his liberal and steadfast support of this orchestra with the highest artistic aims in view. Howe's history says he was born in New York in 1834, of New England stock; that before the end of 1856 he went to Europe for four years, devoting himself chiefly to the study of music in Vienna. He returned home in 1860 and served in the Civil War. In 1868 he entered the Boston banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co. Since then he devoted his fortune, through the orchestra, in the interests of music of the highest type.

The stand the orchestra has taken regarding not playing the Star-spangled Banner seems worthy of severest criticism. It is unbelievable that "artistic unity" solely—much over-estimated often, anyhow—can be so deliberately tactless under present conditions, when other orchestras of high class in this country are at least practicing tact by having played our national anthem voluntarily. This stand has stigmatized the whole Boston Symphony Orchestra organization.

[illegible]
[illegible]h had [illegible]r Hig-
[illegible]ment:
[illegible]n.
[illegible]he Or-
[illegible]angled
[illegible]ented.
[illegible]spring
[illegible]k con-
[illegible]of the
[illegible]d him
[illegible]these [illegible]on in [illegible]wish
[illegible]d him
[illegible]of the
[illegible]be a
[illegible]osts
[illegible]arnest
[illegible]Week.
[illegible]ignа-
[illegible]more,
[illegible]ap-
[illegible]e the [illegible]nd in [illegible]body
[illegible]"Dr.
[illegible]lowed
[illegible]this
[illegible]ment
[illegible]riotic
[illegible]letter
[illegible]l not [illegible]Muck
[illegible]ouble
[illegible]h his [illegible]t he [illegible]this
[illegible]flag
[illegible]to go
[illegible]s his [illegible]pan-
[illegible]tran-
[illegible]ring
[illegible]ry in [illegible]ness-
[illegible]pre-
[illegible]ches-

tra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md. NOV 3

Date

PLAYS IT AND RESIGNS

Director Muck, Of Boston Symphony, Yields To Pressure.

ANTHEM CLOSES THE PROGRAM

Acceptance Of Resignation By Maj. Higginson Uncertain — Given Ovation By Boston Audience.

Boston, Mass, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" today with Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preusserisher general musik director leading. Dr. Muck has resigned, but the acceptance of his resignation is ucertain. Symphony Hall officials said the playing of the National Anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

It was the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the archestra, as usual, a society event with the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above whcih floated an American flog in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports that the hall's license was to be revoekd unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading: "'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I ocnsidered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

Says His Loss Would Be Disaster.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To losehim would be a disaster. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

Then Dr. Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with the Major and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem as announced he received another great tribute of applause. Thus Major Higginson abandons his announced intention of disbanding the orchestra arther than yield to pubilc interference with its programs. Tomorrow evening it will play its regular weekly concert at Symphony Hall. Next week it goes on tour, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, was asked specifically whether the anthem would be played at future concerts. He said that only today had been arranged for so far, but that the symphony would abide by the desires of its patrons.

It Will Be Played.

There is no doubt, however, but that the anthem will be played by the symphony on tour. Major Higginson had it given in Boston where there was much minimizing of the issue. Other cities which insist upon it at all undoubtedly will hear it.

Dr. Muck came to lead the Boston Symphony in 1906. Major Higginson insists that Federal officials have exonerated him from suspicion as a dangerous alien, but the Providence Journal, which started the agitation for the playing of the anthem, demands that he be interned. Three members of the orchestra are still under Federal suspicion.

New York Prepared To Bar It.

New York, Nov. 2.—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra from giving its oencert next Thursday unless Dr. Muck agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel, previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the Corporation Counsel.

Santelmann Takes Issue.

[From The Sun Bureau.]

Washington, Nov. 2.—Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the famous Marine Band, took sharp issue with Director Muck today over the statement that the national anthem has no rightful place upon a program of artistic symphony music.

"The national anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic the program might be," said Mr Santelmann. "In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Lieutenant Santelmann's family originally came from Germany. He is a strong supporter of the war against Kaiserism and has a son at Camp Meade.

From NEWS

Address: Baltimore, Md. 2 - 1917

DR. MUCK'S STAND CONDEMNED HERE

Leader Refused To Play National Anthem.

The reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to grant numerous requests for the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, as described in dispatches, has aroused loyal Baltimoreans, especially as the orchestra is scheduled to give its first concert at the Lyric season within a few days.

Not only has the statement concerning Dr. Muck's alleged refusal to play the national anthem created astonishment but it has also stirred up more than a little wrath.

A number of subscribers to the series of five concerts the orchestra will give at the Lyric expressed themselves very forcibly yesterday and angry protests were heard on all sides.

"Our people should insist that the concerts here open with 'The Star-Spangled Banner,'" Edward H. Morrison of Roland Park said in a letter to The News, "and they should not be allowed to proceed unless it be done. Walter Damrosch began his New York season with a patriotic speech and the national anthem and Joseph Stransky did the same thing."

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Conservatory, was evidently much concerned over the report of Dr. Muck's coup, but when he was asked to make a statement he said that he had not had time to think the matter over and did not wish to give an interview until he had carefully considered it.

SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md. NOV 4 - 191

The Boston Symphony Orchestra And "The Star-Spangled Banner"—Correspondents Denounce As Disloyal The Refusal To Play The National Hymn.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: I inclose you a copy of a letter I sent Mr. C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

Mr. C. A. Ellis, Boston Symphony Orchestra:

Dear Mr. Ellis—I have just read the account in The Sun of the refusal of the orchestra to play the national anthem in Providence and the alleged statement of Mr. Higginson. If the latter is correct, I confess that I have never read a more childish reason assigned for a refusal to do a very obvious and graceful action.

As a long-time subscriber, I make the request that you have "The Star-Spangled Banner" played at the close of the concert next Wednesday night. If the men who compose the orchestra and its conductor refuse to do this, it will be an easy matter to classify them; the organization should be disbanded and the money of the subscribers refunded.

B. Merrill Hopkinson, M. D.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: Apropos of the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence, I will say that I do not believe that being a musician should act as a cloak to cover disloyalty. I note that Colonel Higginson says that the national hymn has no place in the program of this high-toned organization. This might be so in ordinary times, but we are not living in ordinary times now, for we are fighting in a death struggle with Germany and Austria, and, to my mind, we have no place in this country for loyal subjects of either of the powers at war with us, and the leader of the Boston Symphony is doubtless a better subject of the Kaiser than of America.

I note that Kreisler is booked for the soloist at one of the Boston Symphony concerts to be given here this winter. He is an Austrian, and, I am told, sends his money to his fatherland, and so our own money is used against us. I think in these times American audiences might give the "go by" to disloyal orchestras and soloists.

R. Brooke Hopkins.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" Should Come First.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: "The Star-Spangled Banner" should be played as the first number on the program when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its opening concert November 7, and at each subsequent concert, and the patrons of these concerts should rise in their seats, if necessary, and not permit the concert to proceed until this is done. E. H. M.
Roland Park, Oct. 31.

STAR

ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 1 - 1917

MUCK IS IN U.S. BY CONSENT OF KAISER

Conductor of Boston Symphony Was Titled By Germany's Imperial Head.

THE EMPEROR LIKED AMERICANS

Orchestra Continues to Refuse to Play National Anthem at Concerts.

"Dr. Karl Muck said today that the orchestra would not include The Star-spangled Banner in its New York concert repertoire next week," says a Boston dispatch to The Star.

Tremendous interest has been aroused not only in musical but in all circles, both here and throughout the United States, by the reported refusal of the noted Boston Symphony Orchestra organization, Karl Muck, conductor, to play the Star-spangled Banner at a concert in Providence, R. I., on October 30, when requested. The attitude as reported of Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, of Boston, the orchestra's staunch financial backer for years, is also arresting attention. The orchestra is just beginning its thirty-seventh season.

This circumstance recalls vividly a certain circumstance in Baltimore last spring. The United States declared war upon Germany on April 6, 1917. Following this and since, concert orchestras throughout the United States began playing the Star-spangled Banner or America at their concerts. Immediately previous to this time, as is well-known, national feeling in this country against Germany was bitter and no one knew it any better than the Germans not without the hope—felt also in America—that he would yet again return to Boston."

Dr. Muck's present orchestra engagement began with the season of 1912-13 under contract for a term of five years. The five years, therefore, has expired. Particulars of his reengagement are not known here. It was rumored during the summer just past that his services would not be retained, but evidently they have, as he is advertised conductor of the orchestra this season.

Dr. Muck's decoration by the Kaiser is told by Fiske's historical sketch of

PAIGE
1916
TOURING CAR
$700; IN EXCELLENT MECHANICAL CONDITION; TIRES ALL GOOD, WITH ONE NEW SPARE TIRE.
USED CAR DEPARTMENT
Lambert Auto Co.
MT. ROYAL AND MARYLAND AVES.

THE AUTO LAUNDRY
Autos Washed and Polished While You Wait.
SIMONIZING A SPECIALTY!
We make your old car look like new.
406 DOLPHIN ST. MADISON 4984-J.
o20-*1m

1918 PATTERSON, 4-passenger.
1915 HUDSON, 7-passenger Touring Car.
1915 STUDEBAKER, 7-Passenger Touring Car.
1916 PAIGE Touring Car.
AUTO OUTING COMPANY,
o26-*6td6tS1t 21 East North Ave.

CADILLAC 5-PASSENGER; TO GO AT A SACRIFICE.
Guaranteed Perfect Running Order; Newly Painted.
CHESAPEAKE GARAGE, 1703-5 W. Balto. St.
n1-*1m

1917 5-PASS. 4-CYL.
LIGHT TOURING CAR
With Winter Top. Owing to financial conditions, owner must sell at once. 1700 N. CHARLES ST.
o13-*1m

GET IT OF ME. S. Wall Strickler GET IT RIGHT.
METAL & BRICK GARAGES, 2028 N. Calvert.
o22-*1m

1918 FORD CARS
$100 DOWN AND $25 PER MONTH.
ADDRESS POSTOFFICE BOX 656.
o31-*3td2t

RADIATORS Manufactured and Repaired. Dolphin Radiator and Fender Co., Dolphin St., at Mt. Royal Ave. Ph. Mad. 4344.
WE KNOW HOW. o27-*1m

BARGAINS IN USED FORDS, Touring Runabouts and Trucks. Motor Agency, Inc., 3 S. Eutaw St. St. Paul 3013.
o15-*1m

FORDS OPEN AND CLOSED, $1, $1.50 and $2 hr. Homewood 1666-J.
o10-*tf

FORD 1916; perfect running order; new tires. Be quick. 1929 Walbrook Ave.
o31-d3t*3t

CARBON Cleaned, 25c Per Cylinder. M. H. BOYCE, JR., Cor. Fait and Lakewood Aves.
n1-d6t*6tS1t

FOR SALE—Abbott-Detroit Car, Six Cylinder, 1916 model, seven passenger, four speeds, pantasote top, seat covers; splendid condition; cost $2,400; make offer. A. G. Hancock, 38 South St.
o30-*eod1in

FOR SALE—Late 1917 Ford Touring, Demountable rims, extra tire. 3714 Roland Ave.
o30-d3t*3t

FOR SALE—DODGE TOURING CAR, $575. Paige Roadster, $250. 1917 Ford Touring, $350. EASTWICK MOTOR CO., 122 W. North Ave. o12-*1m GUILFORD MOTOR CO., York Road, near Arlington Ave. — Brand-new Crow-Elkhart Roadster, Case Touring, Apperson 8, 2 Marion Hanleys. Used Cadillac, Overland, Chalmers Roadster. Office, Homewood 2255; Garage, Tuxedo 632.

tf

OLD AUTOS AND WRECKS BOUGHT; best price given; parts magnetos; tires for sale. 640 S. PACA ST. Phone South 1024.
o30-*1m

YOU CAN OWN A CAR, TOO. See my lot of good Second-hand Ford Cars, '14 to '17, for $175 up. All

---

NEWS

Baltimore, Md. NOV 3 - 1917

DR. KARL MUCK RESIGNS FROM BIGORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Loses Leader, Who Declined To Play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

EX-GOV. WARFIELD ACTS

Tells Police Commissioners That Patriotic Residents Will Not Allow Appearance Here.

(By the Associated Press.)

Goodbye, Gadski Et Al!

(By the Associated Press.)

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 2.—The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had been criticised for not playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence, was announced by Mapor Henry L. Higginson at a concert this afternoon.

It was also announced that the national anthem would be played at the concert and at future concerts given by the organization.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation, Major Higginson made the following statement:

Consented To Play Anthem.

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the Orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the Orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the Orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Booked To Appear Here Next Week.

Before news of Dr. Muck's resignation had been received in Baltimore, Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield appeared in person yesterday before the Board of Police Commissioners and in a warm communication to that body expressed the opinion that if "Dr. Muck and his associates are allowed to carry out their program in this city they will meet with resentment in no uncertain way by our patriotic people.

"You can rest assured," the letter continued, "that Marylanders will not tolerate the presence of Dr. Muck in this city and that serious trouble will ensue if he comes here with his orchestra."

The Ex-Governor stated that he felt "deeply outraged by what this man has said in regard to the flag and to the anthem which I love so dearly."

Ex-Governor Warfield noted in his communication that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was composed by Francis Scott Key, a Marylander, during the bombardment of Fort McHenry in 1814, and that the flag was consecrated by Maryland blood.

New York Was Aroused.

New York, Nov. 2.—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

m SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 3 - 191
e

Letters To The Editor

Please be concise. As a rule, 200 words should be enough; beyond that the editor reserves the right to blue pencil. Your name and address must accompany each communication—not for publication unless you wish, but as evidence of good faith.

Which Is The More Valuable, Patriotism Or Symphonies?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I was astonished to read in your paper of yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" after their concert in Providence, R. I. Their defense was that it has no place on the program of artistic symphonic music and because the names of those persons who had petitioned the orchestral management to play the hymn were not found among their subscribers.

For years the American people were the only race on earth, among the great nations, who sat in their seats at public performances when their national anthem was played or sung, but of recent years, especially since the war in Europe has been in progress, the public have rightly demanded that all persons present on such public occasions shall stand up with heads uncovered when the air is played or sung.

With the present state of mind of the American people I cannot imagine a greater insult than the refusal of the Boston Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when requested to do so by patriotic civic clubs and other prominent organizations. In Great Britain, whether the performance be of an operatic, orchestral or other character, "God Save the King" is always played at the end of the program. We are at war, with our soldiers and sailors at the front, the American flag waving and a great wave of enthusiasm spreading over our land. Is Major Higginson ashamed of our national hymn? Is it to be expected that Karl Muck and his orchestra, containing many Germans in it, would be anxious to perform the national air of a country which is now the victim of explosions, destruction of property, plots, etc., against our Government? But Major Higginson has no such excuse, as he is an American by birth.

It is to be hoped that our citizens shall insist upon the anthem being played here when the Boston Orchestra performs. Such a procedure does not make the hymn a part of the program; it is merely played after the program is finished.

For if, as citizens of the United States, we deeply resent the refusal of any band or musical organization to play our national air, how much more must we feel the offense when it is committed in Maryland, the State in which the noble lines of the anthem were written! And added to the insult is the recent destruction of the railroad piers and storehouses on the city water front. At this time it is rather dangerous for anyone to express opinions or be guilty of acts which are contrary to the war spirit. The way out of this whole question is for the officials at Washington to order, under penalty, that at the conclusion of any meeting or public performance of any kind, musical or otherwise, the national anthem be played or sung with the audience standing.

CIVIS.

Baltimore, Nov. 1.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The Boston Symphony Orchestra by refusing to play the national anthem at Providence established the fact to the American people that the majority, if not all of them, are absolutely not only against us, but did not even consider the wishes of their patrons of sufficient importance to be regarded. The loyal citizens of Baltimore have neither the desire nor time to patronize disloyal musicians that come to our city, be they who they may. And if the facts are as stated in THE SUN they should not be permitted to play in Baltimore city under any consideration.

Disloyalty, treason and accursed hellishness, and too much favor and consideration shown to this class of personages by many well-meaning but otherwise misguided persons, are making themselves felt right here in Baltimore. The disastrous fire at Locust Point, for instance. The day has passed for temporizing. The man that is not with us in this cause of justice and right and for the uplifting of the human race forever is against us.

D. M. SHAWEN.

Baltimore, Nov. 2.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: My attention is called this morning to the stir in New England over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." As this orchestra is soon to appear for a concert in Baltimore I am wondering what course it will pursue in this city, where the national anthem was born. Will it play "The Star-Spangled Banner" or not? And if not, will the patriotic people of Baltimore be just as well satisfied to support the Boston Symphony? Which emotion is after all the stronger, love for music or love for country?

Major Henry L. Higginson makes a terrible threat. He says, "If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which would probably mean its disorganization. And if it should break up I don't believe it would ever be reorganized. It might also mean Symphony Hall would be sold." Doubtless many of us would feel deep regret to have the Boston Symphony discontinue its concerts, but if it be a question of patriotism or music I am certain that the people of this country, who are now in the midst of a mighty struggle, and who are consecrating their sons and devoting their means to the winning of victory against a merciless foe, will not hesitate long to say that the music must cease sooner than the cause fail of hearty and complete support.

This is no time to temporize. If the patriotism of this orchestra is questioned, let it prove that it has the American spirit by showing a willingness to play the national air. What if it has a program previously prepared, let it add this selection. No concert closes in Great Britain without "God Save the King." Why should we Americans require less show of patriotism from our minstrels? We detest a slacker and a shirker, and we detest more intensely a traitor.

If Dr. Karl Muck and Major Henry L. Higginson are thoroughly true to the flag, they need not hesitate for one moment to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the close of their concerts. The musical critics will not find fault with them and the punctilious audience will not object. But if they refuse to play this anthem, now that the point has been raised, they will assuredly lose some of their best support and arouse the indignation of the people.

DE WITT M. BENHAM,
Pastor of Central Presbyterian Church.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

An Independent Press Is The Safeguard Of Democracy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: It was very refreshing to read in your leading editorial this morning THE SUN's spirited reply to Mayor Preston's ill-advised attempt to secure your influence in the quarrel between the city machine and the State machine by an appeal to your pocket nerve.

I think your advertising patrons could hardly have considered what construction could be put upon their signatures to the Mayor's appeal, but signed it merely out of courtesy to his Honor.

If THE SUN will always fight vigorously and aggressively for the public weal, without fear or favor, there seems to me no question but that it will promote its own financial interests, as well as its moral influence in this community in helping to overthrow the disgraceful slavery of our citizens to the party bosses in the city, the counties and the State.

An absolutely independent press is the strongest safeguard of the liberties and welfare of the people in a democracy, and a talented and high-principled editor occupies the place of greatest honor and influence under that form of government.

I trust that annexation will be secured on its merits by an independent nonpartisan vote of the electorate, despite the disgraceful squabbles of the bosses.

LAWRENCE TURNBULL.

Baltimore, Nov. 2.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md. NOV 2 - 1917

SYMPHONY STANDS PAT

Director Muck Says Art Is Greater Than Any National Considerations.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 1.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York repertoire next week. A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Dr. Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. Thre American national anthem is not on the program, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts. I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The symphony goes on tour next week and Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge today from the positio nannounced yesterday—that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. However, a mammoth flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

St. Louis Orchestra To Play It.

St. Louis, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the National Anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

---

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 1 - 191
e

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS UNDER HOT FIRE

Refusal To Play "Star-Spangled Banner" When Requested Causes Storm.

HIGGINSON DEFIES PUBLIC

Threatens Dissolution Of Orchestra If Protests Go Too Far—Federal Agent Sends Report And Recommendation To Washington.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 31.—A special report to Washington on the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence last night, despite the request of responsible persons, was made today by Thomas Howick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice. He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited by the Government giving concerts anywhere, unless the National Anthem is played at each.

Mr. Howick was deluged with complaints from all parts of Rhode Island because of the refusal of the orchestra officials to play the national air. It is expected patriotic soocieties all oover the State will take action denouncing the refusal.

Resolutions condemning the orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, "for his deliberately insulting attitude,' were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commision was requested by the Council to refuse further permision for concerts here during the war, "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Says Public Must Not Interfere.

"If the public goes too far in this thing," declared Major Henry L. Higginson today, "I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which would probably mean its disorganization. And if it should break up I don't believe it would ever be reorganized. It might also mean Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now."

"I do not propose to have the public interfere with the program. These programs were made out in the summer, and I had nothing to do with them. If Dr. Muck goes, the orchestra would probably be broken up. This will probably be the last year the symphony will go to Providence, because of last night's affair.

"For 30 years I have been selling a certain thing, to wit, high class music. It is so advertised, and everybody knows what to expect. My contracts with my players call for a certain number of weeks of art music, after which I say to them there will be popular concerts in which you may play if you wish. It is all in the contract. I could not, without breaking it, have the program changed. As a matter of fact, I have nothing to do with the program. It is made up by Dr. Muck during the summer and goes through the winter asit is.

"Would Have Been Out Of Place."

"Last night we received some requests from people to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at Providence. We looked up the lists of the subscribers to the concert and found that none of those who requested the National Anthem weer on the list. As a result we decided not to play the piece. It would have been out of place in the program, which was a purely harmonic one. Dr. Muck had nothing to do with it.

"There are those who accuse Dr. Muck of un-Americanism.

"Would you expect to have him anything else?

"I have been to the highest authorities in Washington, to former United States District Attorney Anderson and Secret Service, concerning stories about Dr.

[Continued from page 1.]

Muck. I find that there is absolutely nothing against him. Mr. Anderson told me something about the card index system in which all suspicious persons of German origin are listed. They had nothing concerning the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

"In the matter of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' they ask me why we shouldn't play it. I ask why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Sunday Geraldine Farrar sang nine songs at the orchestra's pension fund concert. They were all in German, despite the fact that she is adept in arias of the French and American operas. Many protests were made.

Signed By Nine Club Presidents.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this Banner" be played, but that, as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received

The telegram asking that the Anthem be played at the concert was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee, of Rhode Island. The telegram with the names of club officers signing it, was printed in an afternoon paper yesterday.

Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

MUCK WILL NOT PLAY ANTHEM HERE

MUCH INTEREST IN BOSTON SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY.

PUBLIC DISLIKES DIRECTOR

His Attitude Toward American Taste In Music Has Antagonized a Great Many People—Baltimore Symphony Orchestra Always Plays The Star-spangled Banner at Its Concerts—Damrosch Says Muck Is Right.

The Star-spangled Banner may not be played when the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its season at the Lyric next Wednesday.

The refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the famous orchestra, to play the national anthem at art concerts, despite repeated requests from organizations and individuals in various cities, has brewed a storm which is spreading over the country.

Dr. Muck says a patriotic anthem of any kind is out of place at a symphonic concert. His antagonists retort that the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of the able Walter Damrosch, plays it, and most people in Baltimore know that ever since the Lusitania went down the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Gustav Strube, invariably closes its concerts with The Star-spangled Banner.

Indeed, it will be recalled that last winter, just after diplomatic relations had been served, Mr. Damrosch had his big band stand and play the air at the outset of a concert, the program of which was most electic.

"LOYAL PRUSSIAN CITIZEN."

A curious paradox is presented in the fact that the patriotic Mr. Damrosch sustains Dr. Muck in his attitude. A dispatch from New York last night stated that Mr. Damrosch had said it was unjust to expect Dr. Muck to lead the orchestra in playing The Star-spangled Banner, because, he declared, Muck was a "loyal citizen of Prussia."

Inquiry yesterday failed to reveal that any requests had yet been made by persons in Baltimore for the orchestra to play it here. Letters have been received by The American, however, demanding that it be included on the program. One Roland Park business man wrote: "Our people here should not permit the concerts here to begin until our national anthem is played as a prelude."

No such requests have been made at the ticket offices, and the sale of seats for the concert is exceptionally heavy.

Dr. Muck's popularity with the American public has never been very large. He did not hold American taste and appreciation in high esteem.

There were some Baltimore musicians who predicted last night that Dr. Muck would be deposed as a leader or that the orchestra—concededly the greatest in America—would be disbanded.

FOUNDER IS INDIGNANT.

A Dispatch to The American last night from Boston stated:

"Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and one of New England's wealthiest men, today declared that the National Anthem has no place in an 'art concert" and waxed indignant that so many people are demanding the removal of Dr. Karl Muck, its German leader, because he refused to play The Star-spangled Banner at a Providence concert where Geraldine Farrar was soloist.

"Freida Hempel, soloist at next Saturday's concert, was notified that unless she gives an enthusiastic rendition of The Star-spangled Banner she need not appear. She has agreed to sing it with enthusiasm.

"Dr. Muck said tonight that "The Star-spangled Banner will not be played when the orchestra goes to New York. From this it is assumed it will not be played in Baltimore.

" 'The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business," said Dr. Muck. 'Art is greater than any national considerations. I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America.'

"Major Higginson said:

" 'For several decades I have given my time so that Boston might have this orchestra, but when Dr. Muck goes the orchestra will go, and Symphony Hall, which it costs me $13,000 to $18,000 a year to maintain, may be sold.

PLAYED AT POP CONCERTS.

" 'Now as to The tSar-spangled Banner, why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. If it did it would be played. Last summer, with the two-thirds orchestra, we played that and America every night, and those who went there knew it. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging it, and because our contracts have arranged for Dr. Muck to conduct at the winter concerts.

" 'Those were popular concerts. These are not—they are art concerts and The Star-spangled Banner has no place at them. They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play that anthem. Supposing you were in Germany and got up and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: "Put that man in the guardhouse and watch him."

" 'These people may think that playing the anthem will assist the spirit of patriotism.

" 'I have received assurances from three sources of our government that there are no imputations against any of our musicians.

" 'I am under contract with public and musicians for concerts of a certain kind, arranged for long ago. I have never meddled with the art side. I owe the public something as to the kind of concerts and these men something as to employment. There is nothing against them now—they are earning their bread. If I dismiss them where have they to go? Straight to the enemy's camp and into mischief.' "

m SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.

Letters To The Editor

Please be concise. As a rule, 200 words should be enough; beyond that the editor reserves the right to blue pencil. Your name and address must accompany each communication—not for publication unless you wish, but as evidence of good faith.

Which Is The More Valuable, Patriotism Or Symphonies?

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: I was astonished to read in your paper of yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" after their concert in Providence, R. I. Their defense was that it has no place on the program of artistic symphonic music and because the names of those persons who had petitioned the orchestral management to play the hymn were not found among their subscribers.

For years the American people were the only race on earth, among the great nations, who sat in their seats at public performances when their national anthem was played or sung, but of recent years, especially since the war in Europe has been in progress, the public have rightly demanded that all persons present on such public occasions shall stand up with heads uncovered when the air is played or sung.

With the present state of mind of the American people I cannot imagine a greater insult than the refusal of the Boston Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when requested to do so by patriotic civic clubs and other prominent organizations. In Great Britain, whether the performance be of an operatic, orchestral or other character, "God Save the King" is always played at the end of the program. We are at war, with our soldiers and sailors at the front, the American flag waving and a great wave of enthusiasm spreading over our land. Is Major Higginson ashamed of our national hymn? Is it to be expected that Karl Muck and his orchestra, containing many Germans in it, would be anxious to perform the national air of a country which is now the victim of explosions, destruction of property, plots, etc., against our Government? But Major Higginson has no such excuse, as he is an American by birth.

It is to be hoped that our citizens shall insist upon the anthem being played here when the Boston Orchestra performs. Such a procedure does not make the hymn a part of the program; it is merely played after the program is finished.

For if, as citizens of the United States, we deeply resent the refusal of any band or musical organization to play our national air, how much more must we feel the offense when it is committed in Maryland, the State in which the noble lines of the anthem were written! And added to the insult is the recent destruction of the railroad piers and storehouses on the city water front. At this time it is rather dangerous for anyone to express opinions or be guilty of acts which are contrary to the war spirit. The way out of this whole question is for the officials at Washington to order, under penalty, that at the conclusion of any meeting or public performance of any kind, musical or otherwise, the national anthem be played or sung with the audience standing.

Civis.

Baltimore, Nov. 1.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: The Boston Symphony Orchestra by refusing to play the national anthem at Providence established the fact to the American people that the majority, if not all of them, are absolutely not only against us, but did not even consider the wishes of their patrons of sufficient importance to be regarded. The loyal citizens of Baltimore have neither the desire nor time to patronize disloyal musicians that come to our city, be they who they may. And if the facts are as stated in The Sun they should not be permitted to play in Baltimore city under any consideration.

Disloyalty, treason and accursed hellishness, and too much favor and consideration shown to this class of personages by many well-meaning but otherwise misguided persons, are making themselves felt right here in Baltimore. The disastrous fire at Locust Point, for instance. The day has passed for temporizing. The man that is not with us in this cause of justice and right and for the uplifting of the human race forever is against us.

D. M. Shawen.

Baltimore, Nov. 2.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: My attention is called this morning to the stir in New England over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." As this orchestra is soon to appear for a concert in Baltimore I am wondering what course it will pursue in this city, where the national anthem was born. Will it play "The Star-Spangled Banner" or not? And if not, will the patriotic people of Baltimore be just as well satisfied to support the Boston Symphony? Which emotion is after all the stronger, love for music or love for country?

Major Henry L. Higginson makes a terrible threat. He says, "If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which would probably mean its disorganization. And if it should break up I don't believe it would ever be reorganized. It might also mean Symphony Hall would be sold." Doubtless many of us would feel deep regret to have the Boston Symphony discontinue its concerts, but if it be a question of patriotism or music I am certain that the people of this country, who are now in the midst of a mighty struggle, and who are consecrating their sons and devoting their means to the winning of victory against a merciless foe, will not hesitate long to say that the music must cease sooner than the cause fail of hearty and complete support.

This is no time to temporize. If the patriotism of this orchestra is questioned, let it prove that it has the American spirit by showing a willingness to play the national air. What if it has a program previously prepared, let it add this selection. No concert closes in Great Britain without "God Save the King." Why should we Americans require less show of patriotism from our minstrels? We detest a slacker and a shirker, and we detest more intensely a traitor.

If Dr. Karl Muck and Major Henry L. Higginson are thoroughly true to the flag, they need not hesitate for one moment to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the close of their concerts. The musical critics will not find fault with them and the punctilious audience will not object. But if they refuse to play this anthem, now that the point has been raised, they will assuredly lose some of their best support and arouse the indignation of the people.

De Witt M. Benham,
Pastor of Central Presbyterian Church.
Baltimore, Nov. 1.

An Independent Press Is The Safeguard Of Democracy.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: It was very refreshing to read in your leading editorial this morning The Sun's spirited reply to Mayor Preston's ill-advised attempt to secure your influence in the quarrel between the city machine and the State machine by an appeal to your pocket nerve.

I think your advertising patrons could hardly have considered what construction could be put upon their signatures to the Mayor's appeal, but signed it merely out of courtesy to his Honor.

If The Sun will always fight vigorously and aggressively for the public weal, without fear or favor, there seems to me no question but that it will promote its own financial interests, as well as its moral influence in this community in helping to overthrow the disgraceful slavery of our citizens to the party bosses in the city, the counties and the State.

An absolutely independent press is the strongest safeguard of the liberties and welfare of the people in a democracy, and a talented and high-principled editor occupies the place of greatest honor and influence under that form of government.

I trust that annexation will be secured on its merits by an independent nonpartisan vote of the electorate, despite the disgraceful squabbles of the bosses.

Lawrence Turnbull.
Baltimore, Nov. 2.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

SYMPHONY STANDS PAT

Director Muck Says Art Is Greater Than Any National Considerations.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 1.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra would not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York repertoire next week. A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Dr. Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. Thre American national anthem is not on the program, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter and finds that this woman writer is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts. I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The symphony goes on tour next week and Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge today from the positio nannounced yesterday—that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. However, a mammoth flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

St. Louis Orchestra To Play It.

St. Louis, Nov. 1.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra today voted that the "Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season, and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the National Anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts, on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program; but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 1 -

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS UNDER HOT FIRE

Refusal To Play "Star-Spangled Banner" When Requested Causes Storm.

HIGGINSON DEFIES PUBLIC

Threatens Dissolution Of Orchestra If Protests Go Too Far—Federal Agent Sends Report And Recommendation To Washington.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 31.—A special report to Washington on the failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence last night, despite the request of responsible persons, was made today by Thomas Howick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice. He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited by the Government giving concerts anywhere, unless the National Anthem is played at each.

Mr. Howick was deluged with complaints from all parts of Rhode Island because of the refusal of the orchestra officials to play the national air. It is expected patriotic soocieties all over the State will take action denouncing the refusal.

Resolutions condemning the orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, "for his deliberately insulting attitude," were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The Police Commision was requested by the Council to refuse further permision for concerts here during the war, "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Says Public Must Not Interfere.

"If the public goes too far in this thing," declared Major Henry L. Higginson today, "I will withdraw my support from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which would probably mean its disorganization. And if it should break up I don't believe it would ever be reorganized. It might also mean Symphony Hall would be sold. It is losing $15,000 a year now."

"I do not propose to have the public interfere with the program. These programs were made out in the summer, and I had nothing to do with them. If Dr. Muck goes, the orchestra would probably be broken up. This will probably be the last year the symphony will go to Providence, because of last night's affair.

"For 30 years I have been selling a certain thing, to wit, high class music. It is so advertised, and everybody knows what to expect. My contracts with my players call for a certain number of weeks of art music, after which I say to them there will be popular concerts in which you may play if you wish. It is all in the contract. I could not, without breaking it, have the program changed. As a matter of fact, I have nothing to do with the program. It is made up by Dr. Muck during the summer and goes through the winter asit is.

"Would Have Been Out Of Place."

"Last night we received some requests from people to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' at Providence. We looked up the lists of the subscribers to the concert and found that none of those who requested the National Anthem weer on the list. As a result we decided not to play the piece. It would have been out of place in the program, which was a purely harmonic one. Dr. Muck had nothing to do with it.

"There are those who accuse Dr. Muck of un-Americanism.

"Would you expect to have him anything else?

"I have been to the highest authorities in Washington, to former United States District Attorney Anderson and Secret Service, concerning stories about Dr.

[Continued from Page 1.]

Muck. I find that there is absolutely nothing against him. Mr. Anderson told me something about the card index system in which all suspicious persons of German origin are listed. They had nothing concerning the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

"In the matter of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' they ask me why we shouldn't play it. I ask why should we play it? Certainly it has no place in a program of artistic symphony music."

Sunday Geraldine Farrar sang nine songs at the orchestra's pension fund concert. They were all in German, despite the fact that she is adept in arias of the French and American operas. Many protests were made.

Signed By Nine Club Presidents.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony, said today he had received a telegram signed by a number of women of this Banner" be played, but that, as they were not subscribers to the concert, the request was ignored. Dr. Muck, he said, did not know that such a telegram had been received.

The telegram asking that the Anthem be played at the concert was signed by the presidents of nine local societies, all prominent in musical circles, and was supplemented by a similar message from the Liberty Loan Committee, of Rhode Island. The telegram with the names of club officers signing it, was printed in an afternoon paper yesterday.

Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

MUCK WILL NOT PLAY ANTHEM HERE

MUCH INTEREST IN BOSTON SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY.

PUBLIC DISLIKES DIRECTOR

His Attitude Toward American Taste in Music Has Antagonized a Great Many People—Baltimore Symphony Orchestra Always Plays The Star-spangled Banner at Its Concerts—Damrosch Says Muck Is Right.

The Star-spangled Banner may not be played when the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its season at the Lyric next Wednesday.

The refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the famous orchestra, to play the national anthem at art concerts, despite repeated requests from organizations and individuals in various cities, has brewed a storm which is spreading over the country.

Dr. Muck says a patriotic anthem of any kind is out of place at a symphonic concert. His antagonists retort that the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of the able Walter Damrosch, plays it, and most people in Baltimore know that ever since the Lusitania went down the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Gustav Strube, invariably closes its concerts with The Star-spangled Banner.

Indeed, it will be recalled that last winter, just after diplomatic relations had been served, Mr. Damrosch had his big band stand and play the air at the outset of a concert, the program of which was most electic.

"LOYAL PRUSSIAN CITIZEN."

A curious paradox is presented in the fact that the patriotic Mr. Damrosch sustains Dr. Muck in his attitude. A dispatch from New York last night stated that Mr. Damrosch had said it was unjust to expect Dr. Muck to lead the orchestra in playing The Star-spangled Banner, because, he declared, Muck was a "loyal citizen of Prussia."

Inquiry yesterday failed to reveal that any requests had yet been made by persons in Baltimore for the orchestra to play it here. Letters have been received by The American, however, demanding that it be included on the program. One Roland Park business man wrote: "Our people here should not permit the concerts here to begin until our national anthem is played as a prelude."

No such requests have been made at the ticket offices, and the sale of seats for the concert is exceptionally heavy.

Dr. Muck's popularity with the American public has never been very large. He did not hold American taste and appreciation in high esteem.

There were some Baltimore musicians who predicted last night that Dr. Muck would be deposed as a leader or that the orchestra—concededly the greatest in America—would be disbanded.

FOUNDER IS INDIGNANT.

A Dispatch to The American last night from Boston stated:

"Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and one of New England's wealthiest men, today declared that the National Anthem has no place in an 'art concert" and waxed indignant that so many people are demanding the removal of Dr. Karl Muck, its German leader, because he refused to play The Star-spangled Banner at a Providence concert where Geraldine Farrar was soloist.

"Freida Hempel, soloist at next Saturday's concert, was notified that unless she gives an enthusiastic rendition of The Star-spangled Banner she need not appear. She has agreed to sing it with enthusiasm.

"Dr. Muck said tonight that "The Star-spangled Banner will not be played when the orchestra goes to New York. From this it is assumed it will not be played in Baltimore.

"'The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business," said Dr. Muck. 'Art is greater than any national considerations. I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America.'

"Major Higginson said:

"'For several decades I have given my time so that Boston might have this orchestra, but when Dr. Muck goes the orchestra will go, and Symphony Hall, which it costs me $13,000 to $18,000 a year to maintain, may be sold.

PLAYED AT POP CONCERTS.

"'Now as to The tSar-spangled Banner, why should they play it? It has no place in an art concert. If it did it would be played. Last summer, with the two-thirds orchestra, we played that and America every night, and those who went there knew it. Another man was leading the orchestra, but there was no dodging it, and because our contracts have arranged for Dr. Muck to conduct at the winter concerts.

"'Those were popular concerts. These are not—they are art concerts and The Star-spangled Banner has no place at them. They think they will test the loyalty of these men by making them play that anthem. Supposing you were in Germany and got up and cheered for the Kaiser. Do you suppose they'd believe any the more that you were for him? No. They'd say: "Put that man in the guardhouse and watch him."

"'These people may think that playing the anthem will assist the spirit of patriotism.

"'I have received assurances from three sources of our government that there are no imputations against any of our musicians.

"'I am under contract with public and musicians for concerts of a certain kind, arranged for long ago. I have never meddled with the art side. I owe the public something as to the kind of concerts and these men something as to employment. There is nothing against them now—they are earning their bread. If I dismiss them where have they to go? Straight to the enemy's camp and into mischief.'"

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md. NOV 2 - 1917

CENTER OF NATIONAL ANTHEM FIGHT.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has refused to play The Star-spangled Banner at his concerts.

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

METROPOLITAN DROPS GERMAN OPERAS

New York Directors Think Presentation Would Be Misconstrued By Berlin.

GORITZ AND MME. GADSKI BARRED FROM ITS CASTS

Walter Damrosch Approves Dr. Muck's Action, Latter Being "Loyal Prussian Citizen."

New York, Nov. 2.—German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and in fact the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera here might have a bad political effect and be used in Germany as evidence and the United States is divided in sentiment regarding the war.

Patriotic motives induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Decision Not Recent One.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to allow "The Star-Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan's singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

Damrosch Supports Dr. Muck.

Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra, is lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia," Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation."

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV

The Boston Or The Berlin Symphony Orchestra?

If the musical Dr. Muck had been ordered to play "Die Wacht Am Rhein" at the close of the performance of the Boston Symphony concert, we suspect his delicate musical ear would not have been offended in the least. We imagine also that "The Star-Spangled Banner" following Beethoven is not quite so great an offense to his artistic ear as to his loyalty to his Fatherland.

The claim of the conductor and backers of the Boston Orchestra that to play a few bars of the national anthem at the close of a concert would destroy the effect of the German music given before is too ridiculous to argue about. Whether such a thing were or were not done is not in itself of great importance. What "riles" Americans is that a German conductor who, it is rumored, has not been free of suspicion as a German agent should flatly refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" as music unworthy of reproduction with the kind he plays and that a so-called American backer should agree with him and support his stand.

Walter Damrosch did not find the national anthem of too poor a quality to be played by his orchestra. Why should the German Dr. Karl Muck?

Loyal Americans ought to prevent officially the performance of any such organization as Muck's, and, failing that, they should refuse to attend it under any circumstances. Let the Huns and the "shadow Huns" support their own.

m EVENING SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 1

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S STAND CAUSES STIR

Patriotic Societies May Take Formal Action Upon Refusal To Play National Anthem.

SHOULD HAVE ACQUIESCED, GEN. A. C. TRIPPE SAYS

Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, State Regent Of The D. A. R., Would Have It On Every Program.

In view of the opening in this city next Wednesday of the season of five monthly concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the action of the orchestra's managemnet in declining the request of persons in Providence, R. I., to include "The Star-Spangled Banner" in its program there Tuesday night, has aroused widespread interest among Baltimore music patrons and much indignation among local leaders of patriotic societies.

Members of these societies characterized the refusal as indefensible, and it is expected to lead to formal condemnation.

The governing body of the Society of Colonial Wars may be the first to make such a move. It will have a meeting at the Hotel Belvedere this evening and, according to some of the members, the attitude taken by Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who subsidizes the orchestra and makes its existence possible, and Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the orchestra, probably will come up for consideration and action.

Gen. A. C. Trippe's Opinion.

Gen. Andrew Cross Trippe, governor of the Society of Colonial Wars, would not comment on the probable outcome of this evening's meeting; but, speaking for himself, he said that "under the circumstances he thought the orchestra should have played the tune."

Dr. Murray Peabody Brush, another member of the society's governing body, said that he could see no reason why any musical organization should refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" and that, in his opinion, there was no excuse for the Boston Symphony refusing to give it at the close of each of its concerts.

Play It Everywhere, She Says.

"No matter what the concert is, no matter who the musicians are, no matter what the program is, there seems to me to be no sane reason why 'The Star-Spangled Banner' should not be played at every musical event in this country as long as the war lasts."

This is the opinion of Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, given this morning.

"If it is necessary, I think a law should be passed making the playing of the national anthem an obligatory thing on every program. If Dr. Muck considered the anthem out of harmony with his program, he could easily have given it after the conclusion of the program, when everyone present would have recognized it as a tribute to the nation and not part of his musical offering.

"No matter what musical critics may think of 'The Star-Spangled Banner' as a piece of music, nevertheless the fact remains that it is our national anthem and the only one we've got. The object in singing or playing it is to show our love and loyalty for our country. Surely in time of war this cannot be done too often."

Music Patrons Say Nothing.

While these views were expressed by prominent members of the patriotic societies, leading musicians and musical patrons of the city said they "would not be drawn into any public controversy."

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Institute, and, as such, the leader of the musical element in Baltimore, was among those who were asked to express an opinion from the standpoint of the musician and music patron.

"The matter is one of such far-reaching consequences," Mr. Randolph said, "that I must ask to be excused from saying anything for publication."

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.
OV 3 - 1917

In the controversy as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play "The Star-Spangled Banner," some persons may seek to analyze the name of its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck. One of the standard dictionaries defines the word "muck" as "an obnoxious mess."

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.
V 3 - 1917

Editorial Comment

Where Our Soldiers Want To Fight.

(From the New York Sun.)

While Congress was in session owl-eyed Senators were continually harping on the cruelty of sending American soldiers to France against their will. Hardwick proposed a law prohibiting compulsory military service abroad. Other statesmen would have had a referendum on the subject. All were obsessed by the idea that the American soldier would greatly prefer to await the invasion of his own land rather than to fight the Boches in France or in the outskirts of Berlin, where the fighting will ultimately be done.

According to the Secretary of War, the soldiers have made their preferences in this matter very clear. "In the camps," he says, "each man is asked: 'What do you want to do?' I have had reports from five or six of the largest camps, and they show the majority answered in effect, 'I don't care what I do just so I get to France among the first.'"

The Boston Teapot Tempest.

(From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems to deserve the hauling over the coals—or it might be called the Muck-raking—he is getting for his pertinacious refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, wherein he was requested to introduce the air by a number of organizations.

The issue need not have arisen if a sincere desire to pay "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind" had existed in the mind of the conductor of the orchestra instead of a ridiculous obstinacy which adheres to its original intention merely to save the face of a false pride and to defend a fantastic and inflated egotism.

Does Dr. Muck care to place himself of a parity with the Mexicans who refused to salute our flag?

The War At Sea.

(From the New York Times.)

The submarine war has not been mastered. That is plain from Sir Eric Geddes' statement to the Commons yesterday. The Germans are building submarines faster than ever before. But the destruction is increasing as well as the construction. The Germans are building them faster, but the Allies are sinking them faster. That is plain from Sir Eric's statement that "during the last quarter the Germans lost as many submarines as they lost in 1916."

The increasing destructive power of the Allied navies, then, is not a fiction nor an exaggeration. They are dealing much more efficiently than ever before with the submarines. But Germany is doubtless building at least as fast as the Allies can destroy, and there is no time in sight when the submarine terror will be really mastered, when the seas will be safe. Our ability to keep up a long war depends on the navies, especially on the British Navy. With the submarine terror loose and the navies weakened, we could not even transport American troops and supplies to Europe. Theorists who, in face of the fact, would risk the supremacy of the fleets on the toss of a coin by changing the present policy for a more "vigorous" one, by sending them to fight a doubtful battle against mines, would be risking the whole war if their advice were followed.

MAY RUFFLE DR. MUCK

Department Of Justice Investigating Of Conductor's Conduct.

(Special Washington Dispatch in the New York World.)

The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally, the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer he could be dealt with under the espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, yet remain to be developed by the Government's agents.

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md. NOV 2 - 1917

CENTER OF NATIONAL ANTHEM FIGHT.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has refused to play The Star-spangled Banner at his concerts.

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

METROPOLITAN DROPS GERMAN OPERAS

New York Directors Think Presentation Would Be Misconstrued By Berlin.

GORITZ AND MME. GADSKI BARRED FROM ITS CASTS

Walter Damrosch Approves Dr. Muck's Action, Latter Being "Loyal Prussian Citizen."

New York, Nov. 2.—German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter. While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and in fact the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera here might have a bad political effect and be used in Germany as evidence and the United States is divided in sentiment regarding the war.

Patriotic motives induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Decision Not Recent One.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to allow "The Star-Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan's singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

Damrosch Supports Dr. Muck.

Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra, is lined up with the supporters of Dr. Muck, whom he characterizes as a "loyal citizen of Prussia," Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire but at the request of Major Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation."

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.

The Boston Or The Berlin Symphony Orchestra?

If the musical Dr. Muck had been ordered to play "Die Wacht Am Rhein" at the close of the performance of the Boston Symphony concert, we suspect his delicate musical ear would not have been offended in the least. We imagine also that "The Star-Spangled Banner" following Beethoven is not quite so great an offense to his artistic ear as to his loyalty to his Fatherland.

The claim of the conductor and backers of the Boston Orchestra that to play a few bars of the national anthem at the close of a concert would destroy the effect of the German music given before is too ridiculous to argue about. Whether such a thing were or were not done is not in itself of great importance. What "riles" Americans is that a German conductor who, it is rumored, has not been free of suspicion as a German agent should flatly refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" as music unworthy of reproduction with the kind he plays and that a so-called American backer should agree with him and support his stand.

Walter Damrosch did not find the national anthem of too poor a quality to be played by his orchestra. Why should the German Dr. Karl Muck?

Loyal Americans ought to prevent officially the performance of any such organization as Muck's, and, failing that, they should refuse to attend it under any circumstances. Let the Huns and the "shadow Huns" support their own.

m EVENING SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 1 -

BOSTON ORCHESTRA'S STAND CAUSES STIR

Patriotic Societies May Take Formal Action Upon Refusal To Play National Anthem.

SHOULD HAVE ACQUIESCED, GEN. A. C. TRIPPE SAYS

Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, State Regent Of The D. A. R., Would Have It On Every Program.

In view of the opening in this city next Wednesday of the season of five monthly concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the action of the orchestra's managemnet in declining the request of persons in Providence, R. I., to include "The Star-Spangled Banner" in its program there Tuesday night, has aroused widespread interest among Baltimore music patrons and much indignation among local leaders of patriotic societies.

Members of these societies characterized the refusal as indefensible, and it is expected to lead to formal condemnation.

The governing body of the Society of Colonial Wars may be the first to make such a move. It will have a meeting at the Hotel Belvedere this evening and, according to some of the members, the attitude taken by Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who subsidizes the orchestra and makes its existence possible, and Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the orchestra, probably will come up for consideration and action.

Gen. A. C. Trippe's Opinion.

Gen. Andrew Cross Trippe, governor of the Society of Colonial Wars, would not comment on the probable outcome of this evening's meeting; but, speaking for himself, he said that "under the circumstances he thought the orchestra should have played the tune."

Dr. Murray Peabody Brush, another member of the society's governing body, said that he could see no reason why any musical organization should refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" and that, in his opinion, there was no excuse for the Boston Symphony refusing to give it at the close of each of its concerts.

Play It Everywhere, She Says.

"No matter what the concert is, no matter who the musicians are, no matter what the program is, there seems to me to be no sane reason why 'The Star-Spangled Banner' should not be played at every musical event in this country as long as the war lasts."

This is the opinion of Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, given this morning.

"If it is necessary, I think a law should be passed making the playing of the national anthem an obligatory thing on every program. If Dr. Muck considered the anthem out of harmony with his program, he could easily have given it after the conclusion of the program, when everyone present would have recognized it as a tribute to the nation and not part of his musical offering.

"No matter what musical critics may think of 'The Star-Spangled Banner' as a piece of music, nevertheless the fact remains that it is our national anthem and the only one we've got. The object in singing or playing it is to show our love and loyalty for our country. Surely in time of war this cannot be done too often."

Music Patrons Say Nothing.

While these views were expressed by prominent members of the patriotic societies, leading musicians and musical patrons of the city said they "would not be drawn into any public controversy."

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Institute, and, as such, the leader of the musical element in Baltimore, was among those who were asked to express an opinion from the standpoint of the musician and music patron.

"The matter is one of such far-reaching consequences," Mr. Randolph said, "that I must ask to be excused from saying anything for publication."

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 3 - 1917

In the controversy as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra shall play "The Star-Spangled Banner," some persons may seek to analyze the name of its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck. One of the standard dictionaries defines the word "muck" as "an obnoxious mess."

NEWS
: Baltimore, Md.
V 2 - 1917

Editorial Comment

Where Our Soldiers Want To Fight.
(From the New York Sun.)

While Congress was in session owl-eyed Senators were continually harping on the cruelty of sending American soldiers to France against their will. Hardwick proposed a law prohibiting compulsory military service abroad. Other statesmen would have had a referendum on the subject. All were obsessed by the idea that the American soldier would greatly prefer to await the invasion of his own land rather than to fight the Boches in France or in the outskirts of Berlin, where the fighting will ultimately be done.

According to the Secretary of War, the soldiers have made their preferences in this matter very clear. "In the camps," he says, "each man is asked: 'What do you want to do?' I have had reports from five or six of the largest camps, and they show the majority answered in effect, 'I don't care what I do just so I get to France among the first.'"

The Boston Teapot Tempest.
(From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems to deserve the hauling over the coals—or it might be called the Muck-raking—he is getting for his pertinacious refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence, wherein he was requested to introduce the air by a number of organizations.

The issue need not have arisen if a sincere desire to pay "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind" had existed in the mind of the conductor of the orchestra instead of a ridiculous obstinacy which adheres to its original intention merely to save the face of a false pride and to defend a fantastic and inflated egotism.

Does Dr. Muck care to place himself of a parity with the Mexicans who refused to salute our flag?

The War At Sea.
(From the New York Times.)

The submarine war has not been mastered. That is plain from Sir Eric Geddes' statement to the Commons yesterday. The Germans are building submarines faster than ever before. But the destruction is increasing as well as the construction. The Germans are building them faster, but the Allies are sinking them faster. That is plain from Sir Eric's statement that "during the last quarter the Germans lost as many submarines as they lost in 1916."

The increasing destructive power of the Allied navies, then, is not a fiction nor an exaggeration. They are dealing much more efficiently than ever before with the submarines. But Germany is doubtless building at least as fast as the Allies can destroy, and there is no time in sight when the submarine terror will be really mastered, when the seas will be safe. Our ability to keep up a long war depends on the navies, especially on the British Navy. With the submarine terror loose and the navies weakened, we could not even transport American troops and supplies to Europe. Theorists who, in face of the fact, would risk the supremacy of the fleets on the toss of a coin by changing the present policy for a more "vigorous" one, by sending them to fight a doubtful battle against mines, would be risking the whole war if their advice were followed.

MAY RUFFLE DR. MUCK

Department Of Justice Investigating Of Conductor's Conduct.

(Special Washington Dispatch in the New York World.)

The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally, the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer he could be dealt with under the espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, yet remain to be developed by the Government's agents.

From EVENING SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 -
Date

DR. MUCK RESIGNS

Plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" At Boston Concert And Then Steps Out.

MUSIC LOVERS ALARMED

Fear Wrangle May Cause Break-Up Of Famous Boston Musical Organization.

A dispatch from Boston today says:

"Dr. Karl Muck, after leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in a concert in Symphony Hall here this afternoon, resigned immediately."

Music lovers who dread the possibility that the Boston Symphony Orchestra may become dissolved through the furor of public opinion which has been aroused by Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to include the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert given in Providence, R. I., came forward this morning in passionate appeals that this catastrophe to the music world be avoided.

"We are all now turning more and more eagerly toward music as the one respite from the torturing thoughts of war," said Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Conservatory of Music. "For God's sake, let us try to preserve to ourselves this haven of refuge or we shall go mad."

Suggests Dr. Muck Retire.

Mr. Randolph suggests the possible solution to the orchestra's difficulty that Dr. Muck, in view of his extreme pro-German sympathies, be discontinued as director of the wonderful orchestra, but that the orchestra itself be preserved.

"Dr. Muck's position has been quite unequivocal from the first," said Mr. Randolph, "and has been definitely understood. He is an ardent German patriot and therefore an 'alien enemy.' If it is maintained that in view of this he should not remain as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that at least is a logical argument with which few would disagree. Certainly if he should be guilty of any treasonable act, he should not only be put out of that position, but interned at once.

"As to 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' it may fairly be argued that it has no place in a Symphony Concert. Assuredly, it should not become an invariable feature of such programs. If at a symphony concert, why not at any and every concert and recital? I, for one, passionately patriotic as I am, would deeply deplore it being dragged into every musical affair."

Would Be Sad Blow.

Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs expressed himself not quite so warmly, but very sorrowfully, over the possible dissolution of the famous orchestra.

"Colonel Higginson has produced the most beautiful symphonic orchestra that perhaps exists in the world today," said Dr. Jacobs. "To destroy it, as will certainly be done if this public disapproval continues, will be in a small measure like destroying the Rheims Cathedral. After years and years of labor, this wonder monument of musical art has been achieved. Shall we in one moment of wrath destroy it?

"No one who knows Colonel Higginson can for a moment doubt his loyalty. He fought in the Civil War and has long stood for all that was best in America. His Americanism cannot be questioned. It was his very desire to build up the musical art of the country which has made him labor so long, and at his own financial loss, to produce the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It will mean no personal loss to him if the orchestra is dissolved. But is it not a most unappreciative way to treat his gift to the public?"

Seat Sale Closed.

Because the box office sale of seats for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore next week was closed early in the week, there is no way to tell definitely just how deeply Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem will be felt by the Baltimore public.

"The only way to tell," said Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, "is to wait and see how many attend the concert next week."

EVENING SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 1 - 1917

Who Will Attend Concerts At Which The Leader Refuses To Play The National Anthem?

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—It has been reported that Dr. Karl Muck refuses to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner," or to have it given a place at the Boston Symphony concerts.

The New York Symphony concerts conducted by Walter Damrosch opened with this and also a patriotic speech by Mr. Damrosch. Joseph Stransky, of the Philharmonic, followed the same procedure. Note in the following clipping how Providence, R. I., handled this matter in case of Mme. Frieda Hempel.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 30.—The police commission today withheld the granting of a license for a concert here Sunday by Frieda Hempel, pending a promise by the singer that she will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." While in this city last spring Mme. Hempel refused to include the national anthem in her program, claiming that she did not know it.

"If she does not know it she must learn it by Sunday if she hopes to appear then," the chairman of the commission stated when application was made for a license.

When the Boston Symphony concerts are given here Dr. Muck should be made to understand that the concerts will not be permitted to be given here unless the prelude to each program is the rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Roland Park.

Baltimore, Oct. 31.

NEWS
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 1 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAY BE "INTERNED"

Refusal To Play National Anthem Resented.

(By the Associated Press.)

Providence, R. I., Oct. 31.—Resolutions condemning the Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in failing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert here last night after being requested to do so by a number of women, were adopted today by the Rhode Island Council of Defense. The police commission was requested by the council to refuse further permission for concerts here during the war "when conducted by Dr. Muck."

Members of the commission declined to say what action would be taken. It was stated, however, that Thomas Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, would make a detailed report to Washington, with the recommendation that the orchestra be not permitted to play in other cities unless the national anthem is included in its program.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 3 - 1917

AROUSED OVER DR. MUCK

Ex-Gov. Warfield Seeks To Prevent Boston Symphony Concert.

MOVED TO CALL MASSMEETING

Feared Outbreak If Orchestra Refused To Play Anthem Here — Resignation Clears Situation.

The timely resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has in a measure cleared up a situation that threatened to assume serious proportions yesterday afternoon when former Gov. Edwin Warfield appeared before the Police Board with the request that withhold a permit to the organization which is to play at the Lyric next Wednesday, provided all goes well.

Governor Warfield also engaged the Lyric for a massmeeting next Tuesday afternoon to protest against allowing the orchestra to appear in Baltimore. When told last evening of the resignation of Dr. Muck he stated that he had no animus against the personnel of the orchestra and that unless the patriotic societies saw fit to pursue the matter further he was willing to let it drop, provided Dr. Muck was not upheld by Colonel Higginson, of Boston, the backer of the orchestra.

Ex-Governor Indignant.

When seen immediately after his appearance before the Police Board yesterday afternoon, Governor Warfield said the announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would appear in Baltimore following the refusal of its leader to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence had aroused his unmeasured indignation.

"When I read the remarks of this fellow Muck," he said, "I just couldn't contain myself. He said that the national anthem was not fit to be played on occasions of that kind. 'The Star-Spangled Banner' should have the right of way over every other tune. It is in honor of the flag we are encouraging our boys to fight for and die for if necessary. It is emblematic of the freedom and liberty our country stands for today. Dr. Muck says it isn't good music. It is good enough for our boys in camp, and should be good enough for us at home. I am amazed at the stand of Colonel Higginson. He should hang his head in shame.

Feared Outbreak Of People.

"When I heard that the orchestra would appear here next week," he continued, "I felt that it might be a very serious thing. After the recent outrage and the loss of life and property here in the great fire at Locust Point our people are in no temper to think calmly. In fact, I would have been one of those who would have felt it their duty to protest openly at the Lyric. Our national anthem is particularly dear to Baltimoreans and to Marylanders generally. It is the pride of Baltimore, for it was inspired, composed, printed and first sung here. Men like Muck, who do not realize their obligation to their adopted country, should be interned. Is he not making money here to support his government in fighting our soldiers?

"I was told by the Police Board this afternoon that it has no power to act with regard to issuing a permit, so I have engaged the Lyric for a massmeeting in order to see what are the sentiments of the public in this matter. The meeting will be on election day, a good time for a patriotic gathering, and I am hoping for the co-operation of all our patriotic societies."

At a late hour last evening no word had been received from Boston as to the probable action of Colonel Higginson on Dr. Muck's resignation, and it is therefore doubtful whether the proposed massmeeting will take place.

It was pointed out yesterday afternoon by a music lover, who keenly resented the stand of Dr. Muck, that the orchestra should not suffer from the fact that its leader is un-American.

"Dr. Muck," said this music lover, "has never taken any pains to conceal his open sympathy with his mother country, and it is typical of our American easy going attitude that we have tolerated him so long. A hasty canvass of the names in the orchestra will reveal the fact that at least 33 of them are entirely removed from any suspicion of German origin, and it would probably be found that a large number of those with German names are either naturalized or native born Americans. No doubt a vote taken among the members would be overwhelming in favor of playing the National Anthem whenever it is requested."

NEWS
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917

Where Beethoven Gets Off

Let us concede at once, with Major Henry L. Higginson, that "'The Star - Spangled Banner' has no place in a program of artistic symphony music." If a program of artistic symphony music, advertised as such, were to include "The Star-Spangled Banner," the framers would frankly stand convicted of not knowing what's what in their own field. By the same token we could not imagine Mr. Sothern interrupting the ghost scene in "Hamlet" to give "The Star-Spangled Banner" in recitation—as pertinent to and ostensibly part of the tragedy.

But we doubt whether Mr. Sothern would refuse, for the sake of his art, to recite "The Star-Spangled Banner" on a curtain call. The Boston Symphony Orchestra manifestly thought it could not play the anthem without misleading the public into believing it a symphonic composition. It failed to appreciate that the public was in search of expression of higher harmonies than any one class of music can afford.

Thereby it raised an issue that may work injury to symphonic music but which is certainly capable of only one decision. There is not a city in the United States where any orchestra with the power to sway men's souls as this Orchestra can sway them but which refuses to sway them in patriotic fervor for fear this might mar the artistic effect of symphony, or for any other foolish reason, could hold an orderly concert. Performers with such power, but who refuse to exercise it because their contract calls only for the production of the artistically sublime, are entitled to commiseration but not to indorsement or gate receipts.

For the time being, we can get along better without Beethoven than without the national anthem. If in that choice Beethoven gets bankrupt or disbanded beyond chance of rehabilitation, the more's the pity. It would indeed be a sorry thing if Boston's famous Symphony Hall had to be sold because those who hold forth there refused to let patriotism contaminate its sacred atmosphere of art. It would be a sorry thing because it would make Art's pretense ridiculous. It is not patriotism but Beethoven that the Boston Symphony Orchestra bids fair to hurt.

86

m SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 2 - 1917
e

BEFORE THE WAR.

The Hun always answers with deed The total property loss inflicted by th fire on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroa piers is estimated at $5,500,000. Tha is, it is equal to about one-tenth of the sum contributed by Maryland to the second Liberty Loan. And this blow is the Hun's reply to Maryland's Liberty Loan subscription and follows almost immediately after the close of our campaign.

How much more will it require to arouse in us a real war-mind? Do we yet realize that we are at war? Do we understand what this war means? Do we appreciate the fact that the Huns are not only at our national door, but that they are inside our national structure? Do we know what will happen next if we do not put ourselves on guard?

The old foolish sense of security, the old theory of safety, still lulls us into carelessness and indifference. We think the war is still 3,000 miles away. In a sense it still seems to many to be a European struggle which touches directly only a minority of us, and which does not touch at all our personal safety. We are still viewing things through the old mental media, through old prejudices and old ideas; we are still appealing to traditions and principles and practices that formed our standards in peaceful times, when we were a law unto ourselves.

In a word, millions of us are still living before the war. We have not reacted to the new law which rules the world outside of us, we are still dreaming the old dreams, and still talking as if we were arguing an abstract question before a debating society, instead of being engaged in a struggle for life.

Comparatively few people believe even now that we are engaged in a struggle for life. Most persons, even some of those heartily in favor of an energetic prosecution of the war, regard such a statement as an exaggeration. In their hearts they are inclined to think that even if Germany should succeed in making the war a draw we would not be in any special danger, that we would not stand to lose a great deal. They have not yet reached the point where they see that the supreme issue is life or death, and where they are ready to sacrifice everything temporarily in order to preserve existence.

It is only this failure to comprehend, this absence of a real war-mind, that explains why we continue to "take things so easy," why great incendiary conflagrations like that in this city and those in other cities are possible, why we remain comfortable and unafraid, and go about as if nothing serious menaced us.

That explains also why there should have been a moment's discussion over the propriety of the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Before the war that question might have been raised without suggesting lack of patriotism; four years ago an American citizen like Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, might have been heard with patience if he had said the national anthem "was out of place" in the concerts of this musical organization, because its program was purely of a "harmonic" character. But to talk now of violating "harmonies" and customs, when the guns of Prussian barbarism are roaring defiance to liberty from Jerusalem to the British coast and from the vicinity of Petrograd to the neighborhood of Paris, when death has already marked American soldiers in the French trenches as its future victims, and when thousands more over here are scheduled to lay down their lives for what the Star-Spangled Banner represents—we say when in the face of such facts a Bostonian can say the national anthem is out of place anywhere or at any time indicates a mental condition alarming and incomprehensible beyond the power of expression. We wonder that the stones in Bunker Hill monument do not cry out in protest against the talk of this Boston sleep-walker, that the spirits of the embattled farmers do not beat at the door of his mind to wake him up and tell him that a new and dreadful day has dawned, from which old things have passed away. Dr. Karl Muck may or may not be loyal, but we have a right to expect loyalty in a city which has always boasted of its patriotism, and from representative Americans like Major Higginson. That he talks about "The Star-Spangled Banner" being out of place is due, in all probability, to the fact that he, too, is still living before the war.

Another illustration of popular apathy, of popular unconsciousness of appalling realities, is furnished by the New York Mayoralty campaign. If hundreds of thousands of voters in that city were not willfully or thoughtlessly living before the war, the result [illegible] possibly be in doubt.

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 3 - 1917

BOSTONIANS WILL PLAY ANTHEM HERE

MR. KARL MUCK OF GERMANY, HAS CAPITULATED.

THE DIRECTOR HAS RESIGNED

After Leading the Famous Orchestra in Playing The Star-spangled Banner in Boston Symphony Hall Yesterday He Handed In His Resignation—This Has Not Yet Been Accepted—Governor Warfield Before Police Board.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play The Star-spangled Banner at its concert in the Lyric next Wednesday evening.

Dr. Karl Muck, of Germany, the director of the famous band, has resigned. He led his men in playing the national anthem in the Boston Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Then he stepped down. Major Higginson, the wealthy patron of the orchestra, is considering the resignation. In a speech he announced his opinion that if Dr. Muck left it would be a disaster.

This being so, it is not certain who will conduct the concert next Wednesday evening. Dr. Muck may do so, if Major Higginson can prevail upon him to stay, as he most assuredly will try to do. Otherwise the concert master of the orchestra, A. Wittike, may conduct.

The information that the anthem will be played here is based on a dispatch from Boston which stated that it would also be played at the concert in Philadelphia next Monday, and probably would be included on programs elsewhere.

Friends of the orchestra are hoping that this decision to bow to the outraged patriotism of the nation will end a most unhappy situation. There are others who feel resentment against Dr. Muck and believe he should be eliminated, despite Major Higginson's high opinion of him.

Dr. Muck's pro-Germanism is not denied. He is an enemy alien. He was born at Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and was educated at Heidelberg and Leipsig. He conducted the Kaiser's Opera in Berlin, the Wagner Festival at Bayreuth and other German cities. In 1908 the Kaiser conferred upon him the title, "King's Prussian General Musical Director."

The announcement of Dr. Muck's decision will be soothing news to many Baltimoreans who have been aroused at his attitude. Among these were many warm admirers of the orchestra. Former Governor Warfield yesterday afternoon appeared before the Board of Police Commissioners and demanded that no permit be granted the orchestra for next Wednesday's concert until it agreed to play the anthem. He told the commissioners serious trouble would result at the concert unless the anthem was played. The board declined to act unless it had positive assurance that the peace was menaced. Governor Warfield then called a patriotic public meeting for the Lyric next Tuesday afternoon.

A dispatch to The American last night from Boston stated:

The Star-spangled Banner was played at the conclusion of this afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, with Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader, conducting. He was given a tremendous ovation by the audience, which rose to its feet, applauding him.

Major Henry Lee Higginson appeared on the platform at the opening of the concert and announced that the national anthem would be played at every performance of the orchestra. He also said that Dr. Muck had given him his resignation, but that he would greatly regret accepting it. "It will have my earnest consideration," he said.

Major Higginson also announced that Dr. Muck had never actually refused to play the national anthem, but he did not fix the responsibility for the orchestra's recent refusals to include it in its program. When Dr. Muck stepped to the platform he was given a remarkable reception. The audience rose to its feet, giving him applause such as has been given only to musical stars of the first magnitude who have aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

"Dr. Muck lead the orchestra when it played the anthem.

"That the anthem seems likely to figure in the orchestra's future performances here and elsewhere is borne out by word from Philadelphia to the effect that it will be played at the symphony concert there on Monday.

"An 'underground plan' is said to be on foot there to have as many members of the audience as possible begin singing the anthem the instant Dr. Muck walks up the stage.

"Those who went to the concert here this afternoon saw that the United States flag has made its appearance on the front of Symphony Hall. Following the declaration of the Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management draped a large one over the main entrance. The business manager, Charles A. Ellis, said that the flag would remain there permanently. It is believed that the order to display the flag came from Major Higginson, founder and financial backer of the orchestra."

The former governor said:

My blood has been very much stirred by the refusal of this fellow Muck to play The Star-spangled Banner. We, as America n citizens, should arise in protest against the attitude of this orchestra leader who is spoken of by Director Damrosch as a loyal Prussian citizen.

General Riggs said the question has not been officially raised whether the orchestral program should contain The Star-spangled Banner.

Governor Warfield:

It is not a question whether the number appears on the program. It is a question whether recognition shall be given to the song, as is the case on all occasions.

THE GOVERNOR'S PROTEST.

"Dr. Muck's action and utterances are an insult to every Marylander and to the American people, and if this man and his associates, who entertain contempt for our national flag and our loved anthem, are allowed to carry out their program in this city they will, I believe, meet with resentment in no uncertain way by our patriotic people. You can rest assured that Marylanders will not tolerate the presence of Dr. Muck in this city and that serious trouble will ensue if he comes here with his orche stra.

"In the interest of good order and the quiet of our city I request that you use whatever power you have to prohibit this concert on Wednesday next. I am writing to you thus because I feel personally deeply outraged by what this man has said in regard to the flag and anthem which I love so dearly.

POWER OF THE POLICE.

General Rigs:

We have power to stop the concert if assured that there will be disorder. At the same time we know that the most loyal and patriotic citizens of Baltimore have subscribed to the concert. I have no doubt that there will be Germans in the audience. It seems to me that it is a question to be taken up with the orchestra or its business manager. The people who go to the symphony [illegible] do not create disorder.

Governor Warfield:

Could disorderly persons gain admission to the hall?

General Riggs:

I do not think so. It seems to me that Mr. Higginson has so dealt with the question as to add to its irritation.

Commissioner Burke, who appeared in the commissioners' room, said:

Governor, I agree with you.

Governor Warfield:

You will recall what happened in Annapolis when the Peggy Stewart brought tea against the protest of American citizens. I am a peaceful citizen. I think I am patriotic. We should not tolerate this temporizing. We must be either for the government or against it; for the flag or against it. My son and thousands of sons of other loyal Marylanders have gone into this war to protect the American flag which this fellow Muck would destroy.

Mr. Burke:

If the citizens of Baltimore want the concert, of course, they shall have it; however unwise it may be withhold the playing of The Star-spangled Banner. It would be bad enough in times of peace to refuse to play the anthem, let alone war time.

Governor Warfield:

It is treason and the sooner we recognize treason the better off we shall be.

MR. RANDOLPH'S STATEMENT.

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody, issued a statement yesterday in which he said:

"I am extremely sorry the question should ever have been forced to an issue, and do not quite see why it should have been."

One of these contentions was that the request which was made of the orchestra in Providence, R. I., on Tuesday was ignored because it was not made by subscribers.

Promptly challenging the management of the orchestra on this point, Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, a leading Baltimore barytone and dentist, has written a strong letter to C. A. Ellis, the manager, in which he says:

"As a long-time subscriber I make the request that you have The Star-spangled Banner played at the close of the concert next Wednesday night. If the men who compose the orchestra and its conductor refuse to do this it will be an easy matter to classify them; the organization should be disbanded and the money of the subscribers refunded."

Dr. Richard H. Peters, of Baltimore, founder and conductor of the South Atlantic States Music Festival about 25 years ago, as well as former head of the music department of Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., said:

"It always has been inexplicable to me why so much freedom was shown enemy aliens here with the country at war. If Americans were in Germany at the present time, do you suppose they would be allowed to do the same as the Germans do here? England made the same mistake of over-leniency at the beginning of the war. It led to revolt of her people and changed methods."

n EVENING STAR
ress: Washington, D. C.
NOV 1 191[illegible]

'SING AMERICA' CRUSADE MEETS WITH SUCCESS

Churches, Schools, Department Stores and Government Departments Taking Up Movement, Says Leader.

"Sing 'America,'" an organization formed to stir up enthusiasm and patriotism by having the people sing the national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America" every day, is meeting with marked success, it was said last night by Mrs. Harry William Streeter of 1301 K street northwest, president.

Churches, schools, department stores and government departments, she said, are taking up the matter, and already "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner" are being sung regularly.

"Sing 'America' and help make the world free for democracy is our slogan," said Mrs. Streeter. "The proprietors of the printing shops of Washington have promised to print for us a half million pamphlets containing the words of the two songs for distribution here. It is our plan to have the movement taken up throughout the country as well as in Washington. I think that the way in which the department stores are taking up the singing of these patriotic songs is a fitting answer to those who were willing to defend Dr. Carl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refused in [illegible] to play The Star-spangled Banner.

"The learning of the words of these songs will be one good result of these daily musical programs, and will be a real benefit in itself, for there are comparatively few persons who really know these words.

"When the employes of these stores assemble in the morning they will sing 'America,' and when the closing hour comes they will sing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

W. A. Greer of the customs division in the Treasury Department has written to Mrs. Streeter saying that since the war began the employes in his division have been singing daily "America," and will now begin singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

AMERICAN
ess: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 3 - 1917

ACT OR DESIGN?

Dr. Karl Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, showed wisdom by resigning and his resignation should be accepted. He had made himself a persona non grata to all true Americans, and there could be no reasonable excuse for his refusal to allow his orchestra to play the national anthem of this country. His orchestra played it yesterday in Boston and played it well.

If Director Muck were influenced merely by the lofty ideals of art, which he says has no associations with the ballads of the nation, he would even in that event have cast the apple of discord into the national arena. People would want to know whether it is really worth while to do homage to a classical musical organization that was careful to hold aside its skirts in passing the flag that flew at dawn upon the eventful bombardment of Fort McHenry. The strong probability is that the national anthem would be given precedence in the affections of the people over any music that the peerless Boston aggregation can dispense. The famous poser of former Attorney General Bonaparte of When is whisky not whisky? might be put up against this one of Dr. Muck of When is music not music? As a moot question it might be abstractly interesting; as a patriotic proposition in regard to the classification of The Star-spangled Banner most Americans are ready to affirm their belief that the national ode has become classic in the affections of the nation. Dr. Muck might very well have sanctioned the sentiment that underlies all other and displayed that quality so rare in cultivated Germans—instinctive courtesy.

One has but to reverse the viewpoint and to ask Dr. Muck whether he would refrain from playing in Berlin, at the most ultra classical of his performances, Deutchsland Uber Alles,' were this requested by the Kaiser, and whether, in fact, he would refrain from playing this or some other national air, whether demanded specifically by the Kaiser or not. Certainly no question of the classical nature of any German national melody would be brought into question. "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life," says the Good Book.

The fact that Dr. Muck is not an American does not diminish the force of the argument that he is in America and playing for Americans and taking American money. At this particular time, when all other musical organizations without hesitation see the propriety in so doing, it would appear as though Dr. Muck would have had tact enough to play the national ode without request, particularly as there is not the slightest reference in it to Germany, but in fact, in so far as it has such, its animus is directed against Germany's chief foe. Yet when the German mind adopts a thesis it cannot see outside this narrow fringe of persistent purpose and is beyond conviction. Now if Dr. Muck refrained from playing the national ode in deference to the expressed or known desires of his master, the question is not one of art, but design. Dr. Muck then would lose all claim for consideration and would be subject to treatment as an undesirable alien enemy. One is not disposed so to believe.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.
NOV 2 1917

LOVERS OF MUSIC STIRRED BY MUCK

Aroused by Refusal of Boston Symphony Director to Play National Anthem.

STRONG VIEWS ARE VOICED

Washington musical circles today were stirred over the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refused to permit the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., Tuesday night when the request was made, is to conduct the concert of that orchestra in this city next Tuesday.

The discussion centered about these questions—should a German citizen, as Dr. Muck is, who has refused to play the national anthem, be given support in the National Capital; or should the music lovers of the capital think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra.

House Has Been Sold Out.

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, which is to be held at the National Theater, according to a statement made today by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for eleven years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington.

She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year because Dr. Muck, the leader, is a German.

"There isn't a well known orchestra in the country, or an opera company which has not Germans in its ranks," said Mrs. Greene. "I am a patriotic American citizen, but I think that in an artistic matter of this kind we should not be led away from the right conception. It has not been the custom for the symphony orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' in the past, and I do not know why such a demand should be made now."

However, some of the subscribers to the orchestra seats did not take the view of Mrs. Greene today and were strong in their condemnation of Dr. Muck's stand.

They Demand the Anthem.

Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, today insisted that the national anthem had a right to a place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

"The national anthem," he said, "could in no sense detract from the beauty of any musical program, no matter how artistic the program might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Otto T. Simon, director of the Motet Choral Society and the Washington War Chorus, in regard to the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the national anthem, said today:

"There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the National Capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. He should be swept from the stage."

Backed by Maj. Higginson.

Mrs. Greene pointed out that Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron and founder of the orchestra, had supported Dr. Muck in the stand that the "Star Spangled Banner" was not in place in the program of the orchestra and said that no one had questioned Maj. Higginson's loyalty to his country.

Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, educated at Heidelberg and Leipzig universities and has always been markedly German in sympathies and preferences.

He is generally known as the kaiser's favorite conductor. In faot, the kaiser conferred on him in 1908 the honorary title of 'koeniglich Preussischer generalmusik direkdor"—the king's Prussian musical director.

The Department of Justice is quietly investigating Dr. Muck and his activities in this country, it was admitted today. The department's agents, however, are expected to direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Washington will hear no German grand opera this winter, it was announced today. Manager Taylor of the Belasco Theater said that grand opera would be produced, but that it would be French or Italian, and not German.

Boston Orchestra Director Firm in Refusal to Play "Star Spangled Banner"

BOSTON, November 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that the orchestra will not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York repertoire next week. A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Dr. Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The orchestra goes on tour next week and Dr. Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge from the position announced previously—that he would disband the orchestra rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. However, a mammoth flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

Talk of Barring Concert.

NEW YORK, November 2.—The disturbance, which began with the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the national anthem on Tuesday night at Providence, R. I., has by no means subsided. The apparent intention of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, to back up Dr. Muck and the purported e planations by Dr. Muck himself only heightened the indignation of all Americans.

"It has come to a pretty pass," they said, "when American audiences must be told by a German music master that they can't hear 'The Star Spangled Banner' at this critical time."

At the office of Carnegie Hall it was said that no orders had been received for cancellation of the concert here on Thursday of the Boston orchestra, led by Dr. Muck; that all seats for the season had been sold, and that Dr. Muck's orchestra would play at Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia before coming here. Many predicted that the mayors of those cities and perhaps of New York might follow the precedent set by Mayor James M. Curley of Boston in forbidding the orchestra to play in the city unless the program was opened with the national anthem.

Damrosch Defends Muck.

Walter Damrosch has taken issue with those musicians who have criticised Dr. Muck for refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire, but at the request of Maj. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty, and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation.

"I should think that the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play "The Star Spangled Banner" under the direction of an assistant conductor. I cannot see what purpose could be gained by endeavoring to force Dr. Muck to do so."

The New York Metropolitan Opera Company this year will not produce any German operas, it has been announced. Patriotic motives, it was said, have caused the directors of the opera to put a ban upon German music at this time.

St. Louis Orchestra Yields.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., November 2.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra have voted that "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

HERALD
Washington, D. C.
NOV 6 19

DR. MUCK MUST PLAY ANTHEM IN THIS CITY

Musicians' Protective Union Will Adopt Resolutions to This Effect.

Washington concertgoers' word will be law if they patronize any of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra scheduled to be held in this city today.

If they want to hear the "Star Spangled Banner" all they will have to do is to request it through the proper source, and Dr. Karl Muck, who has heaped the coals of America on himself by refusal to play this song, must immediately wield his baton and lead his musicians.

Adopt Resolution.

Anticipative of Dr. Muck's arrival today, the Musicians' Protective Union, of the American Federation of Musicians, last night passed the following resolution, it being signed by George W. Vail, W. F. Ruckert and W. M. Lynch:

"Whereas, During the past week there occurred the spectacle of a large musical organization, known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, refusing upon public demand to render the national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner;' and

"Whereas, The national condition of affairs at this time demands of all persons every public expression of utmost patriotism and loyalty to the United States government and its aims; therefore be it

Resolved by the Musicians' Protective Union, Local 161, American Federation of Musicians, in meeting assembled this 4th day of November, 1917, that every musical organization appearing in this city in concert or other musical production be required to render as a part of its performance the national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner;' and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Honorable Commissioners of the District of Columbia and a copy furnished the public press of Washington."

HERALD
Washington, D. C.
NOV 4 1917

88

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AGAIN

Boston Symphony Leader's Resignation Not Accepted; Will Appear Here.

Boston, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was again played tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Karl Muck, who resigned as leader of the orchestra, following the criticisms over his failure to play the national anthem, led the musicians. He will also do so at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York, and Brooklyn next week. His resignation has not been accepted. Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

Maj. Higginson in his decision will be guided by:

1—Whether there is a public demand for Dr. Muck's removal.

2—Whether there is a public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the progress of the Symphony Orchestra as the Metropolitan Opera House in New York has done.

Want Muck to Remain.

So far there has been no demand in Boston for any further change in the orchestra's plans. Even those who demanded that the orchestra play the national anthem want Dr. Muck to remain as leader.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week therefore will decide the question. Dr. Muck, it is said, will insist that his resignation be accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has stated that art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected his program.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 3.—Former Governor Warfield today called a people's meeting to frame a protest against the appearance here of Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REPUBLICAN
ss: Springfield, Ma
1917

The Flag Waves at Symphony Hall

The "Star Spangled Banner" is to wave henceforth on Symphony hall, Boston, and the tune which bears that name is to be played at regular concerts by the celebrated Boston orchestra. So much has resulted from the agitation which reached its climax on Friday afternoon, when Maj Higginson announced that the conductor, Dr Muck, was ready to resign if the good of the orchestra demanded that step. Dr Muck has been attacked for some time by persons who resented his continuing at the head of the Boston orchestra while our country is at war with his. The demand to have "The Star Spangled Banner" played at symphony concerts was not the beginning of the agitation. Foolish and false statements have been made regarding Dr Muck, but his conduct has been found blameless.

Dr Muck's resignation, in all probability, will not be accepted. The statement that Dr Muck refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence or anywhere else is false. The request of the committee of patriots never passed beyond the hands of the orchestra's management, which gave its own answer. "Will Boston deliberately destroy an institution of which it has long been proud?" asks the Boston Herald, which asserts that the eminent conductor has "borne himself with dignity" and "has busied himself only with music." M. A. DeWolfe Howe, who some years ago wrote the history of this greatest of orchestras, writes: "Must the Boston public be taught by bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?" And he adds these forcible words: "There are some of us, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another, there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music."

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.
NOV 2 1917

AMERICAN
ess: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 3 - 1917

ACT OR DESIGN?

Dr. Karl Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, showed wisdom by resigning and his resignation should be accepted. He had made himself a persona non grata to all true Americans, and there could be no reasonable excuse for his refusal to allow his orchestra to play the national anthem of this country. His orchestra played it yesterday in Boston and played it well.

If Director Muck were influenced merely by the lofty ideals of art, which he says has no associations with the ballads of the nation, he would even in that event have cast the apple of discord into the national arena. People would want to know whether it is really worth while to do homage to a classical musical organization that was careful to hold aside its skirts in passing the flag that flew at dawn upon the eventful bombardment of Fort McHenry. The strong probability is that the national anthem would be given precedence in the affections of the people over any music that the peerless Boston aggregation can dispense. The famous poser of former Attorney General Bonaparte of When is whisky not whisky? might be put up against this one of Dr. Muck of When is music not music? As a moot question it might be abstractly interesting; as a patriotic proposition in regard to the classification of The Star-spangled Banner most Americans are ready to affirm their belief that the national ode has become classic in the affections of the nation. Dr. Muck might very well have sanctioned the sentiment that underlies all other and displayed that quality so rare in cultivated Germans—instinctive courtesy.

One has but to reverse the viewpoint and to ask Dr. Muck whether he would refrain from playing in Berlin, at the most ultra classical of his performances, Deutchsland Uber Alles,' were this requested by the Kaiser, and whether, in fact, he would refrain from playing this or some other national air, whether demanded specifically by the Kaiser or not. Certainly no question of the classical nature of any German national melody would be brought into question. "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life," says the Good Book.

The fact that Dr. Muck is not an American does not diminish the force of the argument that he is in America and playing for Americans and taking American money. At this particular time, when all other musical organizations without hesitation see the propriety in so doing, it would appear as though Dr. Muck would have had tact enough to play the national ode without request, particularly as there is not the slightest reference in it to Germany, but in fact, in so far as it has such, its animus is directed against Germany's chief foe. Yet when the German mind adopts a thesis it cannot see outside this narrow fringe of persistent purpose and is beyond conviction. Now if Dr. Muck refrained from playing the national ode in deference to the expressed or known desires of his master, the question is not one of art, but design. Dr. Muck then would lose all claim for consideration and would be subject to treatment as an undesirable alien enemy. One is not disposed so to believe.

LOVERS OF MUSIC STIRRED BY MUCK

Aroused by Refusal of Boston Symphony Director to Play National Anthem.

STRONG VIEWS ARE VOICED

Washington musical circles today were stirred over the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refused to permit the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., Tuesday night when the request was made, is to conduct the concert of that orchestra in this city next Tuesday.

The discussion centered about these questions—should a German citizen, as Dr. Muck is, who has refused to play the national anthem, be given support in the National Capital; or should the music lovers of the capital think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra.

House Has Been Sold Out.

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, which is to be held at the National Theater, according to a statement made today by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for eleven years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington.

She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year because Dr. Muck, the leader, is a German.

"There isn't a well known orchestra in the country, or an opera company which has not Germans in its ranks," said Mrs. Greene. "I am a patriotic American citizen, but I think that in an artistic matter of this kind we should not be led away from the right conception. It has not been the custom for the symphony orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' in the past, and I do not know why such a demand should be made now."

However, some of the subscribers to the orchestra seats did not take the view of Mrs. Greene today and were strong in their condemnation of Dr. Muck's stand.

They Demand the Anthem.

Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, today insisted that the national anthem had a right to a place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

"The national anthem," he said, "could in no sense detract from the beauty of any musical program, no matter how artistic the program might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Otto T. Simon, director of the Motet Choral Society and the Washington War Chorus, in regard to the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the national anthem, said today:

"There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the National Capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. He should be swept from the stage."

Backed by Maj. Higginson.

Mrs. Greene pointed out that Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron and founder of the orchestra, had supported Dr. Muck in the stand that the "Star Spangled Banner" was not in place in the program of the orchestra and said that no one had questioned Maj. Higginson's loyalty to his country.

Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, educated at Heidelberg and Leipzig universities and has always been markedly German in sympathies and preferences.

He is generally known as the kaiser's favorite conductor. In fact, the kaiser conferred on him in 1908 the honorary title of 'koeniglich Preussischer generalmusik direktor"—the king's Prussian musical director.

The Department of Justice is quietly investigating Dr. Muck and his activities in this country, it was admitted today. The department's agents, however, are expected to direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Washington will hear no German grand opera this winter, it was announced today. Manager Taylor of the Belasco Theater said that grand opera would be produced, but that it would be French or Italian, and not German.

Boston Orchestra Director Firm in Refusal to Play "Star Spangled Banner"

BOSTON, November 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that the orchestra will not include "The Star Spangled Banner" in its New York repertoire next week. A letter written by a woman to a New York newspaper, saying New York would not tolerate the omission of the anthem, was shown to Dr. Muck. He said:

"Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program, and will not be played, so far as I or anybody else knows.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The orchestra goes on tour next week and Dr. Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge from the position announced previously—that he would disband the orchestra rather than yield to a demand for the anthem. However, a mammoth flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. It has been the only Boston public building without a flag.

Talk of Barring Concert.

NEW YORK, November 2.—The disturbance, which began with the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the national anthem on Tuesday night at Providence, R. I., has by no means subsided. The apparent intention of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, to back up Dr. Muck and the purported e planations by Dr. Muck himself only heightened the indignation of all Americans.

"It has come to a pretty pass," they said, "when American audiences must be told by a German music master that they can't hear 'The Star Spangled Banner' at this critical time."

At the office of Carnegie Hall it was said that no orders had been received for cancellation of the concert here on Thursday of the Boston orchestra, led by Dr. Muck; that all seats for the season had been sold, and that Dr. Muck's orchestra would play at Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia before coming here. Many predicted that the mayors of those cities and perhaps of New York might follow the precedent set by Mayor James M. Curley of Boston in forbidding the orchestra to play in the city unless the program was opened with the national anthem.

Damrosch Defends Muck.

Walter Damrosch has taken issue with those musicians who have criticised Dr. Muck for refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Mr. Damrosch said:

"It seems to me that it would be an injustice to Dr. Muck to expect him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this country at the present time. He is a loyal citizen of Prussia and is in this country not by his own desire, but at the request of Maj. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is an American of undoubted loyalty, and who certainly would not ask Dr. Muck to act as conductor of the orchestra if he were not absolutely sure of Dr. Muck's personal honor and discretion in this very trying situation.

"I should think that the issue that has been raised could be met easily if the orchestra would play "The Star Spangled Banner" under the direction of an assistant conductor. I cannot see what purpose could be gained by endeavoring to force Dr. Muck to do so."

The New York Metropolitan Opera Company this year will not produce any German operas, it has been announced. Patriotic motives, it was said, have caused the directors of the opera to put a ban upon German music at this time.

St. Louis Orchestra Yields.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., November 2.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra have voted that "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week during the orchestra season and also the popular concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Last spring the national anthem was played at the popular concerts, but it never has been played at symphony concerts.

Max Zach, director of the orchestra, opposed the playing of the anthem at symphony concerts on the ground that it was not artistically in harmony with the concert program, but he was willing that it be played at popular concerts.

HERALD
:: Washington, D. C.

DR. MUCK MUST PLAY ANTHEM IN THIS CITY

Musicians' Protective Union Will Adopt Resolutions to This Effect.

Washington concertgoers' word will be law if they patronize any of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra scheduled to be held in this city today.

If they want to hear the "Star Spangled Banner" all they will have to do is to request it through the proper source, and Dr. Karl Muck, who has heaped the coals of America on himself by refusal to play this song, must immediately wield his baton and lead his musicians.

Adopt Resolution.

Anticipative of Dr. Muck's arrival today, the Musicians' Protective Union, of the American Federation of Musicians, last night passed the following resolution, it being signed by George W. Vail, W. F. Ruckert and W. M. Lynch:

"Whereas, During the past week there occurred the spectacle of a large musical organization, known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, refusing upon public demand to render the national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner;' and

"Whereas, The national condition of affairs at this time demands of all persons every public expression of utmost patriotism and loyalty to the United States government and its aims; therefore be it

Resolved by the Musicians' Protective Union, Local 161, American Federation of Musicians, in meeting assembled this 4th day of November, 1917, that every musical organization appearing in this city in concert or other musical production be required to render as a part of its performance the national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner;' and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Honorable Commissioners of the District of Columbia and a copy furnished the public press of Washington."

HERALD
Washington, D. C.
NOV 4 1917

88

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AGAIN

Boston Symphony Leader's Resignation Not Accepted; Will Appear Here.

Boston, Nov. 3.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was again played tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Karl Muck, who resigned as leader of the orchestra, following the criticisms over his failure to play the national anthem, led the musicians. He will also do so at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York, and Brooklyn next week. His resignation has not been accepted. Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

Maj. Higginson in his decision will be guided by:

1—Whether there is a public demand for Dr. Muck's removal.

2—Whether there is a public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the progress of the Symphony Orchestra as the Metropolitan Opera House in New York has done.

Want Muck to Remain.

So far there has been no demand in Boston for any further change in the orchestra's plans. Even those who demanded that the orchestra play the national anthem want Dr. Muck to remain as leader.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week therefore will decide the question. Dr. Muck, it is said, will insist that his resignation be accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has stated that art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected his program.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 3.—Former Governor Warfield today called a people's meeting to frame a protest against the appearance here of Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REPUBLICAN
ss: Springfield, Ma

The Flag Waves at Symphony Hall

The "Star Spangled Banner" is to wave henceforth on Symphony hall, Boston, and the tune which bears that name is to be played at regular concerts by the celebrated Boston orchestra. So much has resulted from the agitation which reached its climax on Friday afternoon, when Maj Higginson announced that the conductor, Dr Muck, was ready to resign if the good of the orchestra demanded that step. Dr Muck has been attacked for some time by persons who resented his continuing at the head of the Boston orchestra while our country is at war with his. The demand to have "The Star Spangled Banner" played at symphony concerts was not the beginning of the agitation. Foolish and false statements have been made regarding Dr Muck, but his conduct has been found blameless.

Dr Muck's resignation, in all probability, will not be accepted. The statement that Dr Muck refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence or anywhere else is false. The request of the committee of patriots never passed beyond the hands of the orchestra's management, which gave its own answer. "Will Boston deliberately destroy an institution of which it has long been proud?" asks the Boston Herald, which asserts that the eminent conductor has "borne himself with dignity" and "has busied himself only with music." M. A. DeWolfe Howe, who some years ago wrote the history of this greatest of orchestras, writes: "Must the Boston public be taught by bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?" And he adds these forcible words: "There are some of us, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another, there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music."

REDUCTION RATIO 12x

2.5 mm
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

From JOURNAL

Address: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Date NOV - 1 1917

R. MUCK'S ACTION ROUNDLY ASSAILED

Symphony Orchestra Leader May be Barred Here.

GOVERNMENT AGENT ACTS

Tom Howick Will Make Report of Refusal of Musician to Play National Anthem at Concert at Infantry Hall. — Organizations Adopt Resolutions of Censure.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY PROVIDENCE ART CLUB

The Providence Art Club last evening passed the following resolution:

"Until the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for, they would better not appear in this city."

Failure of Dr. Karl Muck to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the national anthem at a concert in Infantry Hall Tuesday evening, as he was requested to do, has caused a storm of protest from people in all walks of life in this city. As a result of this failure to honor the request of the representatives of 10 organizations in Providence, events moved swiftly yesterday.

The Rhode Island Council of Defence, at a regular meeting, condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude," and requested the Police Commission to refuse further licenses for concerts during the war "when conducted by said Karl Muck."

Tom Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, said that he would make a full report of the episode to the officials at Washington and recommend that further concerts by the organization anywhere in the United States be forbidden unless the national anthem is made a part of each programme.

POLICE BOARD'S VIEW.

The Board of Police Commissioners, through Chairman Presbrey, announced yesterday morning that it was too early to anticipate how they would act on Dr. Muck's application for another concert.

"We have reason to believe," he said, "that there will be opposition to such a license, and, if a petition which we understand is being circulated is presented to us, protesting against such a license, we will give it most serious consideration."

Commissioner McCaffrey broke in then and said significantly: "And you might say that this board is made up of three full-fledged Americans."

At the 135th members' night of the Providence Art Club last evening the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Until the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for, they would better not appear in this city."

The resolution adopted by the Rhode Island Council of Defence reads as follows:

"Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, having refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall, Providence, during the evening of Oct. 30, although requested to do so by nine State organizations including the Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Council of Defence at a regularly called meeting held in the Governor's office of the State House, Providence, Oct. 31, unreservedly condemns the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude and respectfully urges the Police Commission of the city of Providence to refuse permission to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in the city of Providence during the present war when conducted by the said Karl Muck."

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

The board of directors of the Musicians' Association here adopted resolutions yesterday, condemning Dr. Muck and the orchestra. It voted to send the resolutions to the Police Commission and to Owen Miller, National Secretary, for publication in the national magazine.

Scores of prominent men and women who went to Infantry Hall Tuesday expecting to buy tickets at the door, were met with a blunt refusal on the part of the management to accommodate them, although there were several vacant rows at the back of the hall. Many of them appealed to Mr. Ellis, only to be met with the statement, "We have sold all the seats we care to sell."

Mr. Ellis repeated in Boston yesterday that he had received a telegram signed by a number of women asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at a concert here Tuesday night, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored.

Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, did not know such a telegram had been received, he added. "During our popular concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number, and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the num-

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAY BE OBLIGED TO DISBAND

Maj. H. L. Higginson Threatens to Discontinue His Support.

Special to the Journal.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 31.—Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day threatened to discontinue his support of the organization and cause it to disband if the demand that it play "The Star Spangled Banner" should continue.

In conversation with reporters he said: "If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support, which would mean the orchestra's disorganization. It might also mean that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is now losing $15,000 a year. I do not propose to have the public interfere with the programme."

Maj. Higginson said he was responsible for the order to sell no more tickets at the concert in Providence last night, although there were vacant seats. He had heard of trouble impending, he said, and felt that if there should be a riot with death and injury he would be personally responsible.

Maj. Higginson permitted to be published a letter he had written to a friend regarding criticisms of the Symphony by its patrons. This was previous to Sunday's protests over Geraldine Farrar's all-German programme. The letter follows

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract. The tickets were sold as usual, that is very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York, and more are asked for. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

"From the outstart the one object of the orchestra has been only art. Apparently this is satisfactory to the public.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters alleging this or that and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck, who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurance has come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra—this in reply to a question about the matter.

"At the beginning of the war I said to the orchestra members that the situation was difficult for them and that the life of the orchestra depended upon their good temper and patience with regard to each other. They have all behaved perfectly, and in this matter Dr. Muck has been of the greatest assistance. In short, all these men have fulfilled their part and the Government says their slate is clean. Shall I fail in my part?

"For 36 years the orchestra has given comfort and pleasure to many people. If it stops it will be for all time, for I can never build it up again.

"Supposing I dismissed all the men. How are they going to live. Somebody must employ them if they can find a place. To-day they are aiding the educational of the community through lessons and through concerts. Are they not doing more good than they can possibly do harm? They know very well that they are being watched. If we in this or any other position, throw out of employ Germans, where can they go and what can they do?

"Let me repeat. There are in the orchestra various nationalities: There are a considerable number who are American citizens and liable to draft; there are a certain number who are not American citizens.

"Once more. I have run down cruel accusations and simply say they are lies.

"Another point. The letter in the New York Times requires that the orchestra should play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Why should it? The programme is made in the summer as the conductor thinks best, for in many years I have never interfered with the programmes. Supposing that 'The Star Spangled Banner' were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any of the musicians? If you were living in Berlin or Vienna would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans and if you did do you suppose that anybody would believe you?

"Now you are welcome to repeat any of this to anybody. I do not write it as information for you or anybody else in particular, but because I know you as a gentleman of high standing and a member of a family which I have known since I was a boy. My own opinion is that if I backed out from this work now I would be a sneak."

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, had the following to say after to-day's private rehearsal:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band? Or a ballroom orchestra? No. The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperament and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives of 25 different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For many months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything which would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost im-

JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV - 1 1917

THE LETTER BOX

AN INDIGNANT CONCERT-GOER

To the Editor of the Journal:

On Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, at Infantry Hall, a large company of Rhode Island people witnessed a spectacle that cannot pass without vigorous protest from patriotic American citizens.

Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was courteously requested, by the heads of various musical clubs in this city, and by the chairman of the Liberty Bond committee, to play our national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner." This was an entirely reasonable request, one that should have been anticipated and arranged for before it was made.

This is a time when our national anthem should be played and sung at every public gathering. It is usually done spontaneously. But the German Dr. Muck had not yet played it at any of his concerts, so the patriotic women heading the musical clubs here asked to have our anthem played. The German refused to do it.

He defied his audience, he even endeavored to further insult it by presenting a programme almost entirely German. No one objects to a reasonable amount of German music. However, at this time it would seem in better taste to have music by composers from nations with which we are not at war.

Miss Farrar, an American-born woman, connected with the Boston Orchestra for this occasion, stood boldly up and sang song after song in German—this woman did not even have the excuse of being German-born, afflicted with the German tongue so she could not render the songs in good English, and there sat a Rhode Island audience listening to songs sung in German, a language whose every word is now hateful to our ears, with an orchestra conducted by a rabid German who refused to play the American National Anthem, while our own Rhode Island boys are in the service of our country, fighting against Germany!

It was an unthinkably shameful situation. While we sat there listening to a man play music who refused to play our National Anthem, and listened to a woman sing German songs, our own Rhode Island boys, in that very hour, were actually in the trenches of France, fighting for us! Facing German shot and shell and the hideous cruelties that these fiends will subject them to if possible!

In that audience I saw mothers and fathers, wives, brothers and sisters of American soldiers. Also, good women knitting for our soldiers—I was filled with aching indignation that these relatives and friends, who have given their dearest to their country's service, should be subjected to this infamous German insult.

I am an old citizen of Providence, I have gone to the Boston Symphony concerts for years. I love music. But no power could induce me to ever again sit in any audience where the German Muck, or the German-taught Farrar performed. Nor will any other patriotic Providence citizen.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN.

Providence, Oct. 31.

JOURNAL

ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV - 1 1917

The Case of Dr. Karl Muck

Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a creature of Germany and a dangerous alien enemy.

He was born in Darmstadt, graduated at the gymnasium in Würzburg, studied at Heidelburg and Leipzig, conducted at Zürich, Salzburg, Brünn, Graz and Prague, and received from the Kaiser the title of "Königlich preusserischer Generalmusikdirektor."

As Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he has grossly offended every patriotic American by his refusal to render our national anthem. His attitude toward his audience in Providence on Tuesday evening was one of studied contempt.

Mr. Ellis, his manager, moreover, put himself in the same category with Dr. Muck by his pitiful and damnable excuse that the programme had been fixed and could not be changed. What can any reasoning American think of a statement like this?

There is no room for a man like Muck on the concert stage of America. He has no business conducting the Boston Symphony. We are at war with his country and we cannot tolerate his defiance and outrage of American patriotism.

Dr. Muck should be withdrawn at once and forever from the American stage and placed where he belongs,—behind bars in an internment camp.

TRIBUNE

Providence, R. I.

OCT 31 1917

CONCERT SEASON OPENED HERE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Assisted by Geraldine Farrar.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 37th season in Infantry Hall last evening, playing an interesting program before an audience which nearly filled the auditorium. Dr. Muck, the leader of the orchestra, conducted with his usual skill, and the soloist was Geraldine Farrar, whose appearance lent unusual interest to the concert.

The program was given as follows:

Symphony No. 4, F-minor, Op. 36.... ..... Tschiakowsky
I. Andante sostenuto; moderato con anima in movimento di valse.
II. Andante in modo di canzona.
111. Scherzo; Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro.
IV. Finale; Allegro con fuoco.
Elisabeth's greeting, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser"...Wagner
"Prometheus," Symphonic Poem No. 5, ...Liszt
First time in Providence.
(a) Treibhaus .....
(b) Schmerzen .....
(c) Traume .....Wagner
Three Poems.
Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84 .....Beethoven

The chief number, the Tschaikowsky Symphony, a pathetic composition which deals chiefly with the tragic story of fate, was nobly read and played, the implicit obedience and response of the orchestra to Dr. Muck's leadership being a noticeable feature of the concert. The Liszt Symphonic poem was in strong contrast to the symphony and gave the players abundant opportunity to display their virtuosity. The Egmont overture, which ended the program, is always a favorite with Boston Symphony audiences, and it was superbly played.

Mme. Farrar sang her first number with breadth and dramatic power, and in the Wagner songs with the orchestra, she was happier still, the perfection of the accompaniments making each song, notably "Traume," a gem of its kind. The songs were rendered by the singer as only an imaginative artist could sing them, and that Mme. Farrar is a gifted interpreter of the lyric muse none will deny. She received prolonged applause, and was recalled four times after her final number.

From JOURNAL
Address: PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Date NOV - 1 1917

R. MUCK'S ACTION ROUNDLY ASSAILED

Symphony Orchestra Leader May be Barred Here.

GOVERNMENT AGENT ACTS

Tom Howick Will Make Report of Refusal of Musician to Play National Anthem at Concert at Infantry Hall. — Organizations Adopt Resolutions of Censure.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY PROVIDENCE ART CLUB

The Providence Art Club last evening passed the following resolution:

"Until the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for, they would better not appear in this city."

Failure of Dr. Karl Muck to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the national anthem at a concert in Infantry Hall Tuesday evening, as he was requested to do, has caused a storm of protest from people in all walks of life in this city. As a result of this failure to honor the request of the representatives of 10 organizations in Providence, events moved swiftly yesterday.

The Rhode Island Council of Defence, at a regular meeting, condemned "the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude," and requested the Police Commission to refuse further licenses for concerts during the war "when conducted by said Karl Muck."

Tom Howick, agent of the Department of Justice, said that he would make a full report of the episode to the officials at Washington and recommend that further concerts by the organization anywhere in the United States be forbidden unless the national anthem is made a part of each programme.

POLICE BOARD'S VIEW.

The Board of Police Commissioners, through Chairman Presbrey, announced yesterday morning that it was too early to anticipate how they would act on Dr. Muck's application for another concert.

"We have reason to believe," he said, "that there will be opposition to such a license, and, if a petition which we understand is being circulated is presented to us, protesting against such a license, we will give it most serious consideration."

Commissioner McCaffrey broke in then and said significantly: "And you might say that this board is made up of three full-fledged Americans."

At the 135th members' night of the Providence Art Club last evening the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Until the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for, they would better not appear in this city."

The resolution adopted by the Rhode Island Council of Defence reads as follows:

"Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, having refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall, Providence, during the evening of Oct. 30, although requested to do so by nine State organizations including the Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island Council of Defence at a regularly called meeting held in the Governor's office of the State House, Providence, Oct. 31, unreservedly condemns the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for his deliberately insulting attitude and respectfully urges the Police Commission of the city of Providence to refuse permission to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concerts in the city of Providence during the present war when conducted by the said Karl Muck."

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

The board of directors of the Musicians' Association here adopted resolutions yesterday, condemning Dr. Muck and the orchestra. It voted to send the resolutions to the Police Commission and to Owen Miller, National Secretary, for publication in the national magazine.

Scores of prominent men and women who went to Infantry Hall Tuesday expecting to buy tickets at the door, were met with a blunt refusal on the part of the management to accommodate them, although there were several vacant rows at the back of the hall. Many of them appealed to Mr. Ellis, only to be met with the statement, "We have sold all the seats we care to sell."

Mr. Ellis repeated in Boston yesterday that he had received a telegram signed by a number of women asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at a concert here Tuesday night, but that as they were not subscribers to the concert the request was ignored.

Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, did not know such a telegram had been received, he added. "During our popular concerts in Boston we always played 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Ellis, "but in a classical concert we have never interpolated any numbers, no matter whether it was 'The Star Spangled Banner' or any other number, and we could not make any exception for Providence. For these two reasons the num-

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MAY BE OBLIGED TO DISBAND

Maj. H. L. Higginson Threatens to Discontinue His Support.

Special to the Journal.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 31.—Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day threatened to discontinue his support of the organization and cause it to disband if the demand that it play "The Star Spangled Banner" should continue.

In conversation with reporters he said: "If the public goes too far in this thing I will withdraw my support, which would mean the orchestra's disorganization. It might also mean that Symphony Hall would be sold. It is now losing $15,000 a year. I do not propose to have the public interfere with the programme."

Maj. Higginson said he was responsible for the order to sell no more tickets at the concert in Providence last night, although there were vacant seats. He had heard of trouble impending, he said, and felt that if there should be a riot with death and injury he would be personally responsible.

Maj. Higginson permitted to be published a letter he had written to a friend regarding criticisms of the Symphony by its patrons. This was previous to Sunday's protests over Geraldine Farrar's all-German programme. The letter follows

"Let us consider the case. I have contracted with a band of musicians for one year and they depend on me for their daily bread. I have contracted with many audiences throughout the country to give them many concerts of a certain quality, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members and its conductor being well known. That is the contract. The tickets were sold as usual, that is very well. Not a seat is to be had in New York, and more are asked for. The orchestra, including Dr. Muck, has been greeted heartily as usual. There are my obligations.

"From the outstart the one object of the orchestra has been only art. Apparently this is satisfactory to the public.

"A very few friends have said some gentle words to me about the orchestra and have stayed away. Sundry brave (?) people have written to me unsigned letters alleging this or that and telling me to dismiss Dr. Muck, who is an integral part of the orchestra.

"From three high sources the assurance has come to me that nothing disloyal can be truly alleged against any member of the orchestra, which is composed of a dozen nationalities. One high and excellent United States civil officer told me personally that on no account should I dismiss the orchestra—this in reply to a question about the matter.

"At the beginning of the war I said to the orchestra members that the situation was difficult for them and that the life of the orchestra depended upon their good temper and patience with regard to each other. They have all behaved perfectly, and in this matter Dr. Muck has been of the greatest assistance. In short, all these men have fulfilled their part and the Government says their slate is clean. Shall I fail in my part?

"For 36 years the orchestra has given comfort and pleasure to many people. If it stops it will be for all time, for I can never build it up again.

"Supposing I dismissed all the men. How are they going to live. Somebody must employ them if they can find a place. To-day they are aiding the educational of the community through lessons and through concerts. Are they not doing more good than they can possibly do harm? They know very well that they are being watched. If we in this or any other position, throw out of employ Germans, where can they go and what can they do?

"Let me repeat. There are in the orchestra various nationalities: There are a considerable number who are American citizens and liable to draft; there are a certain number who are not American citizens.

"Once more. I have run down cruel accusations and simply say they are lies.

"Another point. The letter in the New York Times requires that the orchestra should play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Why should it? The programme is made in the summer as the conductor thinks best, for in many years I have never interfered with the programmes. Supposing that 'The Star Spangled Banner' were played, would it make any difference in the attitude of any of the musicians? If you were living in Berlin or Vienna would you publicly state that you favored the cause of the Germans and if you did do you suppose that anybody would believe you?

"Now you are welcome to repeat any of this to anybody. I do not write it as information for you or anybody else in particular, but because I know you as a gentleman of high standing and a member of a family which I have known since I was a boy. My own opinion is that if I backed out from this work now I would be a sneak."

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra, had the following to say after to-day's private rehearsal:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band? Or a ballroom orchestra? No. The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperament and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives of 25 different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For many months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything which would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost im-

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV - 1 1917

THE LETTER BOX

AN INDIGNANT CONCERT-GOER

To the Editor of the Journal:

On Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, at Infantry Hall, a large company of Rhode Island people witnessed a spectacle that cannot pass without vigorous protest from patriotic American citizens.

Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was courteously requested, by the heads of various musical clubs in this city, and by the chairman of the Liberty Bond committee, to play our national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner." This was an entirely reasonable request, one that should have been anticipated and arranged for before it was made.

This is a time when our national anthem should be played and sung at every public gathering. It is usually done spontaneously. But the German Dr. Muck had not yet played it at any of his concerts, so the patriotic women heading the musical clubs here asked to have our anthem played. The German refused to do it.

He defied his audience, he even endeavored to further insult it by presenting a programme almost entirely German. No one objects to a reasonable amount of German music. However, at this time it would seem in better taste to have music by composers from nations with which we are not at war.

Miss Farrar, an American-born woman, connected with the Boston Orchestra for this occasion, stood boldly up and sang song after song in German—this woman did not even have the excuse of being German-born, afflicted with the German tongue so she could not render the songs in good English, and there sat a Rhode Island audience listening to songs sung in German, a language whose every word is now hateful to our ears, with an orchestra conducted by a rabid German who refused to play the American National Anthem, while our own Rhode Island boys are in the service of our country, fighting against Germany!

It was an unthinkably shameful situation. While we sat there listening to a man play music who refused to play our National Anthem, and listened to a woman sing German songs, our own Rhode Island boys, in that very hour, were actually in the trenches of France, fighting for us! Facing German shot and shell and the hideous cruelties that these fiends will subject them to if possible!

In that audience I saw mothers and fathers, wives, brothers and sisters of American soldiers. Also, good women knitting for our soldiers—I was filled with aching indignation that these relatives and friends, who have given their dearest to their country's service, should be subjected to this infamous German insult.

I am an old citizen of Providence, I have gone to the Boston Symphony concerts for years. I love music. But no power could induce me to ever again sit in any audience where the German Muck, or the German-taught Farrar performed. Nor will any other patriotic Providence citizen.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN.

Providence, Oct. 31.

JOURNAL
ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV - 1 1917

The Case of Dr. Karl Muck

Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a creature of Germany and a dangerous alien enemy.

He was born in Darmstadt, graduated at the gymnasium in Würzburg, studied at Heidelburg and Leipzig, conducted at Zürich, Salzburg, Brünn, Graz and Prague, and received from the Kaiser the title of "Königlich preusserischer Generalmusikdirektor."

As Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he has grossly offended every patriotic American by his refusal to render our national anthem. His attitude toward his audience in Providence on Tuesday evening was one of studied contempt.

Mr. Ellis, his manager, moreover, put himself in the same category with Dr. Muck by his pitiful and damnable excuse that the programme had been fixed and could not be changed. What can any reasoning American think of a statement like this?

There is no room for a man like Muck on the concert stage of America. He has no business conducting the Boston Symphony. We are at war with his country and we cannot tolerate his defiance and outrage of American patriotism.

Dr. Muck should be withdrawn at once and forever from the American stage and placed where he belongs,—behind bars in an internment camp.

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
OCT 31 1917

CONCERT SEASON OPENED HERE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Assisted by Geraldine Farrar.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 37th season in Infantry Hall last evening, playing an interesting program before an audience which nearly filled the auditorium. Dr. Muck, the leader of the orchestra, conducted with his usual skill, and the soloist was Geraldine Farrar, whose appearance lent unusual interest to the concert.

The program was given as follows:

Symphony No. 4, F-minor, Op. 36.... ..... Tschiakowsky
I. Andante sostenuto; moderato con anima in movimento di valse.
II. Andante in modo di canzona.
111. Scherzo; Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro.
IV. Finale; Allegro con fuoco.

Elisabeth's greeting, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser"...Wagner

"Prometheus," Symphonic Poem No. 5, ...Liszt

First time in Providence.

(a) Treibhaus .....
(b) Schmerzen .....
(c) Traume .....Wagner

Three Poems.

Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84 .....Beethoven

The chief number, the Tschaikowsky Symphony, a pathetic composition which deals chiefly with the tragic story of fate, was nobly read and played, the implicit obedience and response of the orchestra to Dr. Muck's leadership being a noticeable feature of the concert. The Liszt Symphonic poem was in strong contrast to the symphony and gave the players abundant opportunity to display their virtuosity. The Egmont overture, which ended the program, is always a favorite with Boston Symphony audiences, and it was superbly played.

Mme. Farrar sang her first number with breadth and dramatic power, and in the Wagner songs with the orchestra, she was happier still, the perfection of the accompaniments making each song, notably "Traume," a gem of its kind. The songs were rendered by the singer as only an imaginative artist could sing them, and that Mme. Farrar is a gifted interpreter of the lyric muse none will deny. She received prolonged applause, and was recalled four times after her final number.

JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

OCT 31 1917

AMERICAN ANTHEM ENTIRELY IGNORED

Symphony Orchestra Does Not Play "Star Spangled Banner"

TICKETS REFUSED TO MANY

Request Made of Manager of Ellis Concerts by Nine Providence Societies is Not Granted.—Hungarian, Russian and German Selections Are Played.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra did not play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert here last evening.

Despite the request of representatives of nine local societies and the Rhode Island Liberty Loan committee, telegraphed to C. A. Ellis, manager of the organization, in Boston, earlier in the day, Dr. Karl Muck conducted his musicians in a programme of Russian, Hungarian and German selections, ignoring the American anthem entirely.

Moreover, scores of prominent men and women who went to Infantry Hall, expecting to buy tickets at the door, were met with a blunt refusal on the part of the management to accommodate them, although there were several vacant rows at the back of the hall. Many of them appealed to Mr. Ellis, only to be met with the statement, "We have sold all the seats we care to sell."

At the Billy Sunday preliminary banquet in the Narragansett Hotel last evening, Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church, Boston, in speaking of the work the church had to do in making our army invincible with the spirit of God, said he was glad to see that so many representative societies had petitioned that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at the Symphony concert. He read the names from a copy of the Evening Bulletin he held in his hand.

"Any man who wields a baton under the Stars and Stripes," he said, "and isn't willing to play it, shouldn't be allowed to live under them. In Boston, Symphony Hall is the only public hall where the Stars and Stripes are not displayed, because Dr. Karl Muck will not permit it."

The orchestra expected trouble last evening. Col. Henry L. Higginson of Lee, Higginson & Co., the patron of the organization, made the trip here with the musicians and returned with them to Boston. Mr. Ellis said that this was "because of the editorial in the Journal and the telegram sent by the women."

Assistant Manager Brennan was in charge at the hall before the concert began. Men and women appealed to him for modification of the "No tickets" rule, but to all requests he said, "You'll have to see Mr. Ellis, he'll he here soon."

Col. Higginson arrived first and Mr. Ellis, with Geraldine Farrar, the soloist, came soon after. This was just as the concert was about to begin, and both went at once to the upper dressing room with Miss Farrar and her party. All attempts to get at them before the concert began were unsuccessful, the doorman refusing to disturb them.

MANAGER INTERVIEWED.

Just as the first notes of the orchestra became audible in the corridor Mr. Ellis appeared at the doorway to the dressing room. A Journal representative immediately asked him for the privilege of purchasing a ticket for the concert, but was refused. He was told that all seats were sold, and, when he suggested that he would willingly pay admission for the privilege of sitting in the dressing room just off the stage, where he could hear what was going on he was told that this was an impossible request.

"Will the orchestra play 'The Star Spangled Banner'?" he asked Mr. Ellis.

"I think not," Mr. Ellis replied. "The Boston Symphony Orchestra played it every night for 10 weeks during the pop concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, where it was appropriate. We have announced our programme for to-night and people have purchased their tickets to hear this programme, and I think it will be well worth hearing.

"I received the telegrams requesting 'The Star Spangled Banner' this afternoon, signed by Mrs. Emma Winslow Childs, Mrs. Harold J. Gross, Mrs. George S. Mathews, Miss Mary S. Winsor, Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, Mrs. George Hail, Mrs. James E. McConnell, Mrs. Gilbert C. Carpenter, Dr. Jules Jordan and Thomas H. West, Jr. Not one of these names appears on our list of subscribers for the season."

"You say the orchestra played the national anthem in the pop concerts," the Journal representative continued. "Did Dr. Muck lead that?"

"He does not lead the pop concerts," was the answer.

"Has he ever led 'The Star Spangled Banner'?"

"I do not know."

REFUSED TICKETS.

Mrs. James E. McConnell, President of the Chaminade Club, said that she went to the hall to attend the concert but was met with a refusal to her request for tickets, although there were vacant seats at the back of the hall. She understood that C. A. Ellis, the manager had declared that the women who signed the joint request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played last evening were not subscribers to the symphony concert course.

"While it is true that we did not subscribe this year," she said, "because of the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, we have been subscribers for 10 or 12 years. We refrained from subscribing this year support until proper recognition for American patriotic spirit should be shown by this organization.

Continued from Page 1, Col. 5.

"In the Chaminade Club I can state positively that Mrs. Gilbert C. Carpenter and Mrs. George Hail, Vice Presidents, and Mrs. Beers, secretary, have been regular subscribers to the course up to this time when it seemed necessary for us to insist that if we were to continue to give active support to the Symphony Orchestra that organization should show a proper American spirit.

"Mrs. Harold J. Gross, representing the Monday Morning Club, stated to me that she had been a regular subscriber until a year ago, when she withheld her subscription for no other reason than the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck on this issue which has now been brought to a head. The women of the organizations represented in the joint request that the orchestra should play "The Star Spangled Banner" feel that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should not return to Providence until ready to show a more American spirit."

A joint telegram from nine local societies, many of them prominent in musical circles, and a similar wire from Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the State Liberty Loan committee, were sent yesterday morning to Manager Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the orchestra last evening at Infantry Hall.

The joint message was as follows:

"The undersigned earnestly request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening, Oct. 30, at Infantry Hall:

"MRS. EMMA WINSLOW CHILDS, President Chopin Club.

"MRS. HAROLD J. GROSS, President Monday Morning Club.

"MRS. GEORGE S. MATHEWS, Vice President MacDowell Club, and chairman of the music committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.

"MISS MARY S. WINSOR, President Schubert Club.

MISS VIRGINIA BOYD ANDERSON, presiding officer, Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. GEORGE HAIL, President Northeastern District National Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. JAMES E. McCONNELL, President the Chaminade Club.

"MRS. GILBERT C. CARPENTER, First Vice President the Chaminade Club."

Mr. West's telegram read: "The Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island requests that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert to be given in Providence to-night."

CITIZEN

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

OCT 4 1917

MUSICAL TREAT FOR BROOKLYN

Dr. Karl Muck Arranges a Popular Programme.

The first of the series of five concerts given annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn will take place in the Academy of Music, Friday evening, at 8:15. It is a matter of satisfaction to everybody concerned that the Brooklyn subscription to the Boston Symphony Concerts is even larger than it was last year, and very few seats are left for single sale. The orchestra returns after its seven months' absence, with exactly the same personnel which appeared here at its concert in March. Dr. Muck, naturally, is the conductor and no changes whatever have been made in the ranks of the orchestra itself. This is the first time in the history of the orchestra that the same personnel has been carried over from one season to another.

Dr. Muck has arranged for this first concert a programme essentially popular. The symphony will be the "Pathetic" of Tschaikowsky. Dr. Muck has never played this work here—in fact, it seldom appears on the regular symphony programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but every two years is played in Boston at one of the Pension Fund concerts of the orchestra. It is to-day, as it has been for twenty years, the most popular symphonic work of modern times.

The works which appear in the second part of the programme are the stirring symphonic poem, "Finlandia," of Sibelius; the Fifth Symphonic poem of Liszt, entitled "Prometheus," and the greatest of all overtures, Beethoven's "Leonora" No. 3. The "Prometheus" of Liszt is the least known of the symphonic poems with which he may be said to have revolutionized modern orchestral music. It has all the qualities peculiar to Liszt, and its revival by Dr. Muck has been warmly appreciated by the admirers of the great Hungarian composer.

Recital by Mme. Fatigh

CITIZEN

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

OCT 4 1917

ORGANIZE AMERICAN BAND.

Women Start Movement for National Musical Association.

The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck from the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, as a result of his refusal to assent to the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by that organization, and the storm of resentment which has been aroused over the incident, has led a number of women, prominent in New York society, to plan for the creation of a truly national American musical organization.

The announcement was made last night by Miss Elizabeth Marbury and Mrs. Oliver Harriman that the nucleus for a representative American musical organization had already been formed and that one of the principal reasons for speeding the project was the attitude of Dr. Muck toward the playing of the national anthem at the concerts of that society.

"We must have in this country at this time a musical organization which not only will not refuse to play the national anthem, but will, at all times, place it first in its programme," said Mrs. Oliver Harriman last night. "The ridiculous and puerile attitude of Dr. Muck in ascribing to esthetic musical considerations his failure to include 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in the programme of the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra has proven conclusively to us the immediate and pressing need of an American musical organization from which shall be created innumerable bands for military and other patriotic

CITIZEN

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

OCT 4 191

MUSIC AND THE WAR.

The question of the relation of music to the war, which agitated the belligerent countries of Europe, has now reached this country. In France and England it was settled by the elimination of German music and German singers and artists. The refusal of Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an alien German, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" brought the question, which has been agitated since the war started, to a head. There was never any doubt in the minds of Americans who saw clearly, and whose patriotism was not vitiated by the rarefied air of art, that Dr. Muck had greatly offended the national sensibilities. His rich patron, Colonel Higginson, even went so far as to make apologies for him. But the Colonel and Dr. Muck soon discovered their mistake, for on Friday Dr. Muck permitted his orchestra to play the national hymn, although as a protest handing in his resignation immediately afterward.

In this city the directors of the Metropolitan Opera House, after careful consideration, have decided to prohibit the singing of German operas and have dismissed Madame Gadski and Herr Goritz. No one in his senses questions the high standing of German music and the contributions Germans and Austrians have made to music from Haydn and Handel to Beethoven and Wagner, but to correctly appreciate the hostility to everything German which pervades the allied world, one must consider the offenses of which the German soldiery have been guilty in this war. Germany has made her name infamous by the wanton destruction which marked the track of her armies in Belgium and France.

The world has been shocked by the cruelties of her sailors and aviators in the killing of defenseless men, women and children. It is these things which account for the indignation of the people in the allied countries and their determination to eliminate the fruits of German culture from the repertories of their theatres and opera houses. The German people must be made to realize the evil that their rulers have done them in waging war in the Twentieth Century after the style of Attila and his

EAGLE

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUCK LEADS PLAYING OF NATION'S ANTHEM; "VERY HARD," HE SAYS

"Throw Stones at Me, and Leave Muck Alone," Declares Higginson.

MANY PERSONS INDIGNANT

(Special to The Eagle.)

Boston, November 3—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of the National Anthem at the usual Saturday night concert in Symphony Hall tonight. Before the concert he said: "I hardly know what to think. It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing. I have done my best during my year's connection with the orchestra. I did my best last night."

Major Higginson made a plea for the termination of criticism about Dr. Muck.

"If the public wants to throw any stones, let them throw them at me," he said. "I don't care how many they throw at me, but don't throw them at the orchestra or the leader. And now I hope this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play the National Anthem. Above all things, I want him exonerated of that false charge."

Dr. Muck will continue to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it goes on tour next week and will lead it when it plays the American National Anthem at its concerts at Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia and Washington, it was announced.

His resignation is still in Major Higginson's hands, but its acceptance or rejection will depend upon the reception accorded Dr. Muck and the orchestra by the public during the tour. If the present difficulty blows over without further ado, Dr. Muck will, in all probability, be retained. But if it is evident that the public generally will not forget or overlook the incident Major Higginson is likely to accept the leader's resignation.

One of the important factors in determining the issue of the present controversy will be the public's attitude toward the inclusion of German compositions in the program of the orchestra. It is generally believed that if the public insists on barring these compositions, Dr. Muck will insist on severing his relations with the orchestra. Dr. Muck's status as a subject of Germany may also have an important bearing on the issue. It has been charged that Dr. Muck is a Prussian reserve officer, and that under international law an officer in an enemy country without uniform in time of war is a spy. No action has yet been taken on the demand for Dr. Muck's internment as an alien enemy.

The present solution of the Dr. Muck-"Star-Spangled Banner" incident, for the time being at least, clears up the situation as far as Brooklyn is concerned. Dr. Muck will conduct the orchestra when it plays its first concert here, and "The Star-Spangled Banner" will have a place on the program. No action by the trustees of the Brooklyn Instiute will be necessary, therefore, to secure the playing of the anthem by the orchestra.

GLAD MUCK RESIGNED, HE HATES AMERICANS, SAYS BROOKLYN WOMAN

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

As a loyal Brooklyn woman, I am pleased by the news that Dr. Karl Muck has resigned from the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will not conduct this organization when it plays in Brooklyn next week. I hope his place will be taken by an American, and, if this should be the case, I shall expect to enjoy the performance more than I did the last time the Boston Symphony was here, with Professor Muck as conductor.

On that occasion I had a seat from which I could see Professor Muck's face during the special numbers in which American artists took part. I was struck by the fact that the Prussian musician was making fun of the American artists. He exchanged glances with members of his orchestra, presumably also loyal Prussians, which clearly told me that he had either contempt or hatred for the American soloists. He did not take the trouble to conceal his feelings and, in fact, his sneers were so open that they forced themselves on my attention.

COLUMBIA HEIGHTS.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

What are we coming to! A German leader, Muck by name, making a fortune out of this country, should dare to refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" for an American audience because they are at war with his country. An editorial in this morning's Times gives concisely what might happen to him in his own country under such a provocation—certain imprisonment and possible death—which would be a good suggestion for this long-suffering country to adopt.

We are to have our first concert here on Friday next; let us see to it, as patriotic Americans, that we have it—the house rising.

A PATRIOTIC SUBSCRIBER.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

What in peaceful days might pass as petty pedantry in days like these becomes dangerous. We should accept no substitutes, but insist upon Dr. Cassius Muck himself, in person, directing the anthem.

Yon Cassius has a lean and hungry look.
Seldom he smiles, etc.

A truly pathetic Prussian lack of grace and tact—a great musician, but a small man.

HERMAN ADOLPH FISCHER.

2419 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, November 2, 1917.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

OCT 5 1917

MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM.

Director Who Created Storm in Boston Here Friday.

Despite the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was unwilling and at first refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in the Hub City, the orchestra will play the National anthem in this borough Friday when it appears in the Academy of Music.

There was such a storm of criticism raised over the neglect of the director to play the anthem on the grounds that it was "inartistic" that Director Muck sent in his resignation. Colonel Roosevelt, when he learned of the incident, said that he was shocked and that Dr. Muck should be interned. Dr. Muck's resignation has not yet been accepted by the founders of the orchestra, and it may be that he will lead the orchestra when the National anthem is played here.

Before sending in his resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck played the National anthem to the delight of a large crowd of music-lovers.

PUBLIC Ledger

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NOV 5 - 1917

BALTIMORE FEARS TROUBLE OVER MUCK

Talk in Monumental City of Calling Off Orchestra Concert Wednesday

TO PLAY HERE TODAY

Opposed Leader Scheduled to Direct Playing of National Anthem

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 4.—If Dr. Karl Muck is retained as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra there is a possibility that the concert he is scheduled to direct here next Wednesday night will not be allowed to take place.

General Lawrason Riggs, president of the police board, said that it will be the duty of the board to see that no gathering tending to disturb the peace will be permitted.

"At present," he added, "it does not appear that there will be any call for action in regard to the concert, but the board will be guided by developments of the next few days.

"The matter has now grown out of the realm of academic discussion," General Riggs continued. "It has become a question of an aroused public feeling. The presence of Doctor Muck necessarily would destroy any pleasure in the music. Personally, I would not care to attend the concert if he were to conduct."

Police Marshal Robert D. Carter said he is absolutely opposed to the concert if Doctor Muck is going to lead it here. The marshal said he has received during the last few days many anonymous letters making threats against Doctor Muck, the orchestra and the Lyric Theatre, and he added that if the sentiment expressed at the patriotic mass-meeting on Tuesday indicates that there is going to be trouble at the Lyric on Wednesday steps will have to be taken to stop the concert.

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck directing. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, the "Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every concert, the question is whether there will be general objection to Doctor Muck such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the program.

As to the objections against Doctor Muck because he is a German, it is pointed out that in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the Department of Justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are forty-one Germans, including Doctor Muck, of whom nineteen are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized.

Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, thirteen of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, twelve of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 6 1917

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

By striking at Italy in the "weak" spot, which Germany has discovered with the aid of her omnipresent spies, she may have thought that by hitting the trail made for her through the Carnic Alps by the Italians in their great drive into the Bainsizza plain—thus proving the Alps to be, no longer, the traditional barrier they had been supposed to be—she would be able to make a thrust at some vulnerable spot—the heel within the "boot" of Europe—and the Entente, for instance.

And possibly Germany hopes to be able to step out of the back door of Italy into the common back-yard, and sneak through the back door of France to deal her dearest enemy a blow. That would be very pretty, but it is not very likely to happen.

"Is the pun dead?" Not when such a notoriety—as he has made of himself—Dr. Carl Muck runs amuck of the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the way he has. In refusing to sing or play the National Anthem at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, "his deliberately insulting attitude" has aroused the hottest indignation.

Dr. Muck, interviewed in Boston, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

So? When has it ever been that the National Anthem was a part of a programme, as understod by Dr. Carl Muck. The National Anthem is never a "part" of a programme—it is always a thing apart, in itself, a patriotic prologue, interlude, or epilogue, fitting the occasion and the spirit of the people assembled. It has always the right of way, that none, not even an alien can deny.

But Dr. Muck quickly reconsidered his ultimatum, even though he is leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussicher General Musik Direktor, and consented to play it. In this he completely stultified himself, even though he sent in his resignation. There should be no squeamish sympathy for Dr. Muck. What he said may as well be "made part of the record" as above. This is the sort of thing to which it is painful to revert, but it is proper that some notice should be given to it.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, put the matter right when he says:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude."

Col. Roosevelt expressed the spontaneous thought of all upon reading about it—by declaring that he—Muck—ought to be "interned promptly." The incident has shocked the Colonel—and all America.

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date.....

DR. MUCK COMING TO BROOKLYN; WILL PLAY NATIONAL AIR

Concerts at the Academy Will Be Given According to Schedule.

NO GERMAN OPERA HERE

(Special to The Eagle.)

Boston, November 3—Dr. Karl Muck, at present, plans to tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week and lead it in the playing of the National anthem and the classical programs arranged for Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia and Washington.

His resignation, which was tendered yesterday when Major Henry L. Higginson decided that the orchestra which he maintains, should yield to the public demand for the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," is merely tentative. Whether he really will cease to conduct the orchestra, for whose merit he is given great credit by Major Higginson and musical critics, depends on his reception on tour and the way his programs are received.

If there should be attempts, for instance, to prevent the orchestra from playing German masterpieces, undoubtedly the doctor will press his resignation. Already German opera has been barred from the Metropolitan, yet it is certain that should any further attempt be made to interfere with Muck's selection of programs, he will cease to conduct and possibly Major Higginson will carry out his threat to disband the orchestra.

Dr. Muck's status as an enemy alien may also have something to do with his connection with the orchestra. Major Higginson said his status is approved by the Department of Justice, but there is a demand by the Providence Journal that he be interned, and there are reports that he is a German reserve officer. Under international law an officer in an enemy country without uniform in time of war is a spy.

No Change in Concerts Here.

Dr. Muck's resignation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, if it be accepted, will cause no change in the Brooklyn engagements with that organization. Director Charles D. Atkins of the Brooklyn Institute said today that whether Dr. Muck led the orchestra or not, the series of concerts would be given according to schedule.

If Major Higginson disbands the orchestra rather than ask it to play the national anthem, the Brooklyn dates, with all others, will of course be cancelled.

Mr. Atkins took an optimistic view of the situation this morning, and said that things seemed to be smoothing themselves out "quite nicely."

No alterations in Brooklyn's grand opera plans will be caused by the determination of the Metropolitan Opera Company to ban German opera for the season. There will, of course, be no German opera given by the company on its weekly visits to the Academy of Music, but there is not, and never has been, any stipulation that part of the operas given should be German. According to Manager Edsall, the arrangement is only for so many performances of opera from the regular repertory, to be selected by the management of the company.

"We never know ahead what we are going to get. Our information comes to us from week to week," he said.

Anthem "Good Music."

Professor William Starr Myers, speaking at the Academy today, said of Dr. Muck's refusal to play the "Star-Spangled Banner":

"His excuse is that it is not up to the same standard of art as the other music. To my sense of things the "Star-Spangled Banner" is good music, it expresses one of the noblest of the human emotions, patriotism, and I feel that that is a higher emotion than any that may be expressed in the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven."

In conclusion, he urged his audience to be keenly awake and to prove they are real Americans by not helping to make it possible for a man "who is an American citizen but not an American" to be elected mayor of this city.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York

NOV 7 - 1917

Muck Opens Program with U. S. Anthem

Washington, Nov. 7.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his musicians in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." More, he led them twice, once in the afternoon and once in the evening performance, opening the programme with the national anthem at each appearance.

At least one holder of tickets, however, resented Dr. Muck's appearance after he had offered his resignation and refused to play the anthem. This ticketholder advertised his tickets for sale, and sold them rather than attend the concert.

CALL

New York City

NOV 6 - 1917

NO MUCK NOR MUSIC, SAYS BALT. GRAND JURY

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The grand jury of Baltimore this morning decided not only against Dr. Karl Muck leading a concert here Wednesday, but also against the holding of the concert itself. This official body's protest was delivered to the board of police commissioners.

From HERALD

Address: New York City

Date.....

THE DR. MUCK CASE.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

Dr. Muck says:—"Art is greater than mere national compositions and considerations. I live only for my art."

Yes, in Prussia art is greater than the American national anthem, and there, of course, Conductor Muck is still greater than his exquisite art. But here in America, with his manly art of self-defence, Professor Mike Donovan is worth more than a million Mucks. Professor Donovan is training men to fight for the flag, while Dr. Karl Muck sneers at it and refuses to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Why, then, should this exquisite Muck be allowed to play anything in this country? Although he didn't deride "The Star Spangled Banner," that poor Australian boy, the late Les Darcy, was not permitted to fight here. And now are you going to let this insolent Prussian run amuck?

JOSEPH L. HODGINS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1917.

EVENING GLOBE

ess: New York City

1917 - 1917

BALTIMORE PROTESTS HEARING DR. MUCK CONCERT

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Wednesday night was filed with the Police Board by the grand jury to-day, after that body has discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence last week.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

OCT 5 1917

MUCK TO PLAY ANTHEM.

Director Who Created Storm in Boston Here Friday.

Despite the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was unwilling and at first refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in the Hub City, the orchestra will play the National anthem in this borough Friday when it appears in the Academy of Music.

There was such a storm of criticism raised over the neglect of the director to play the anthem on the grounds that it was "inartistic" that Director Muck sent in his resignation. Colonel Roosevelt, when he learned of the incident, said that he was shocked and that Dr. Muck should be interned. Dr. Muck's resignation has not yet been accepted by the founders of the orchestra, and it may be that he will lead the orchestra when the National anthem is played here.

Before sending in his resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck played the National anthem to the delight of a large crowd of music-lovers.

PUBLIC Ledger

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Nov 5 - 1917

BALTIMORE FEARS TROUBLE OVER MUCK

Talk in Monumental City of Calling Off Orchestra Concert Wednesday

TO PLAY HERE TODAY

Opposed Leader Scheduled to Direct Playing of National Anthem

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 4.—If Dr. Karl Muck is retained as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra there is a possibility that the concert he is scheduled to direct here next Wednesday night will not be allowed to take place.

General Lawrason Riggs, president of the police board, said that it will be the duty of the board to see that no gathering tending to disturb the peace will be permitted.

"At present," he added, "it does not appear that there will be any call for action in regard to the concert, but the board will be guided by developments of the next few days.

"The matter has now grown out of the realm of academic discussion," General Riggs continued. "It has become a question of an aroused public feeling. The presence of Doctor Muck necessarily would destroy any pleasure in the music. Personally, I would not care to attend the concert if he were to conduct."

Police Marshal Robert D. Carter said he is absolutely opposed to the concert if Doctor Muck is going to lead it here. The marshal said he has received during the last few days many anonymous letters making threats against Doctor Muck, the orchestra and the Lyric Theatre, and he added that if the sentiment expressed at the patriotic mass-meeting on Tuesday indicates that there is going to be trouble at the Lyric on Wednesday steps will have to be taken to stop the concert.

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck directing. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, the "Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every concert, the question is whether there will be general objection to Doctor Muck such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the program.

As to the objections against Doctor Muck because he is a German, it is pointed out that in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the Department of Justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are forty-one Germans, including Doctor Muck, of whom nineteen are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized.

Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, thirteen of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, twelve of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 6 1917

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

By striking at Italy in the "weak" spot, which Germany has discovered with the aid of her omnipresent spies, she may have thought that by hitting the trail made for her through the Carnic Alps by the Italians in their great drive into the Bainsizza plain—thus proving the Alps to be, no longer, the traditional barrier they had been supposed to be—she would be able to make a thrust at some vulnerable spot—the heel within the "boot" of Europe—and the Entente, for instance.

And possibly Germany hopes to be able to step out of the back door of Italy into the common back-yard, and sneak through the back door of France to deal her dearest enemy a blow. That would be very pretty, but it is not very likely to happen.

"Is the pun dead?" Not when such a notoriety—as he has made of himself—Dr. Carl Muck runs amuck of the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the way he has. In refusing to sing or play the National Anthem at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, "his deliberately insulting attitude" has aroused the hottest indignation.

Dr. Muck, interviewed in Boston, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs."

So? When has it ever been that the National Anthem was a part of a programme, as understod by Dr. Carl Muck. The National Anthem is never a "part" of a programme—it is always a thing apart, in itself, a patriotic prologue, interlude, or epilogue, fitting the occasion and the spirit of the people assembled. It has always the right of way, that none, not even an alien can deny.

But Dr. Muck quickly reconsidered his ultimatum, even though he is leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussicher General Musik Direktor, and consented to play it. In this he completely stultified himself, even though he sent in his resignation. There should be no squeamish sympathy for Dr. Muck. What he said may as well be "made part of the record" as above. This is the sort of thing to which it is painful to revert, but it is proper that some notice should be given to it.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, put the matter right when he says:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair minded Americans would have accepted his attitude."

Col. Roosevelt expressed the spontaneous thought of all upon reading about it—by declaring that he—Muck—ought to be "interned promptly." The incident has shocked the Colonel—and all America.

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date.....

DR. MUCK COMING TO BROOKLYN; WILL PLAY NATIONAL AIR

Concerts at the Academy Will Be Given According to Schedule.

NO GERMAN OPERA HERE

(Special to The Eagle.)

Boston, November 3—Dr. Karl Muck, at present, plans to tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week and lead it in the playing of the National anthem and the classical programs arranged for Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia and Washington.

His resignation, which was tendered yesterday when Major Henry L. Higginson decided that the orchestra which he maintains, should yield to the public demand for the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," is merely tentative. Whether he really will cease to conduct the orchestra, for whose merit he is given great credit by Major Higginson and musical critics, depends on his reception on tour and the way his programs are received.

If there should be attempts, for instance, to prevent the orchestra from playing German masterpieces, undoubtedly the doctor will press his resignation. Already German opera has been barred from the Metropolitan, yet it is certain that should any further attempt be made to interfere with Muck's selection of programs, he will cease to conduct and possibly Major Higginson will carry out his threat to disband the orchestra.

Dr. Muck's status as an enemy alien may also have something to do with his connection with the orchestra. Major Higginson said his status is approved by the Department of Justice, but there is a demand by the Providence Journal that he be interned, and there are reports that he is a German reserve officer. Under international law an officer in an enemy country without uniform in time of war is a spy.

No Change in Concerts Here.

Dr. Muck's resignation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, if it be accepted, will cause no change in the Brooklyn engagements with that organization. Director Charles D. Atkins of the Brooklyn Institute said today that whether Dr. Muck led the orchestra or not, the series of concerts would be given according to schedule.

If Major Higginson disbands the orchestra rather than ask it to play the national anthem, the Brooklyn dates, with all others, will of course be cancelled.

Mr. Atkins took an optimistic view of the situation this morning, and said that things seemed to be smoothing themselves out "quite nicely."

No alterations in Brooklyn's grand opera plans will be caused by the determination of the Metropolitan Opera Company to ban German opera for the season. There will, of course, be no German opera given by the company on its weekly visits to the Academy of Music, but there is not, and never has been, any stipulation that part of the operas given should be German. According to Manager Edsall, the arrangement is only for so many performances of opera from the regular repertory, to be selected by the management of the company.

"We never know ahead what we are going to get. Our information comes to us from week to week," he said.

Anthem "Good Music."

Professor William Starr Myers, speaking at the Academy today, said of Dr. Muck's refusal to play the "Star-Spangled Banner":

"His excuse is that it is not up to the same standard of art as the other music. To my sense of things the "Star-Spangled Banner" is good music, it expresses one of the noblest of the human emotions, patriotism, and I feel that that is a higher emotion than any that may be expressed in the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven."

In conclusion, he urged his audience to be keenly awake and to prove they are real Americans by not helping to make it possible for a man "who is an American citizen but not an American" to be elected mayor of this city.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

1917

Muck Opens Program with U. S. Anthem

Washington, Nov. 7.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his musicians in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." More, he led them twice, once in the afternoon and once in the evening performance, opening the programme with the national anthem at each appearance.

At least one holder of tickets, however, resented Dr. Muck's appearance after he had offered his resignation and refused to play the anthem. This ticketholder advertised his tickets for sale, and sold them rather than attend the concert.

CALL

New York City

NOV 6 - 1917

NO MUCK NOR MUSIC, SAYS BALT. GRAND JURY

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The grand jury of Baltimore this morning decided not only against Dr. Karl Muck leading a concert here Wednesday, but also against the holding of the concert itself. This official body's protest was delivered to the board of police commissioners.

From HERALD

Address: New York City

Date.....

THE DR. MUCK CASE.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

Dr. Muck says:—"Art is greater than mere national compositions and considerations. I live only for my art."

Yes, in Prussia art is greater than the American national anthem, and there, of course, Conductor Muck is still greater than his exquisite art. But here in America, with his manly art of self-defence, Professor Mike Donovan is worth more than a million Mucks. Professor Donovan is training men to fight for the flag, while Dr. Karl Muck sneers at it and refuses to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Why, then, should this exquisite Muck be allowed to play anything in this country? Although he didn't deride "The Star Spangled Banner," that poor Australian boy, the late Les Darcy, was not permitted to fight here. And now are you going to let this insolent Prussian run amuck?

JOSEPH L. HODGINS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1917.

EVENING GLOBE

ess: New York City

1917

BALTIMORE PROTESTS HEARING DR. MUCK CONCERT

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Wednesday night was filed with the Police Board by the grand jury to-day, after that body has discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence last week.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
NOV - 7 1917

MUCK PLAYS AT CAPITAL; DENOUNCED IN BALTIMORE

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Nov. 6.

Led by Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" before a large audience in the New National Theatre as a prelude to its concert in Washington this afternoon.

There had been some apprehension of a sensational scene owing to the intense feeling in this city, crowded as it is with officers and officials who are devoting all their time and energy to helping this country in the war with Germany. Ample police precautions had therefor been taken. But they proved entirely unnecessary.

When Dr. Muck stepped on the platform he was greeted by applause. Some one in the audience cried out, "Don't applaud him," but the effect was the very reverse. Dr. Muck acknowledged the applause, then turned to his orchestra and the musicians arose, as did the entire audience, while the national anthem was played with splendid feeling and effect. The house applauded vigorously and the tension was over.

Major Higginson was not in Washington, but his representatives refused to make any comment whatever on the action of the Baltimore authorities in forbidding the symphony orchestra to play there to-morrow. The orchestra will remain in Washington to-morrow and not play in Baltimore. The program to-day, which included Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4, closed with the overture to Tannhauser, which was well applauded.

Mrs. Wilson, wife of the president, was absent from Washington and consequently did not attend the concert, but the cabinet was represented by Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, wife of the Secretary of the Interior.

BALTIMORE CROWD DENOUNCES MUCK

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.

Dr. Karl Muck was bitterly denounced and "The Star Spangled Banner" eloquently extolled at the most remarkable patriotic mass meeting ever held in Baltimore this afternoon. Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric Theatre. They cheered former Governor Warfield, Judge Henry Stockbridge of the Maryland Court of Appeals, Secretary of State Simmons, Captain Hughes of the National Army and other prominent men, and they hissed and yelled every time Dr. Karl Muck's name was mentioned.

One woman prominent in society, and a leading member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, shouted "Kill him!" when Governor Warfield mentioned Muck's name.

Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and reaffirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

Captain Hughes in his speech said Muck's action was enough to cause Francis Scott Key to turn over in his grave, and he hoped he would rise from his grave and haunt Dr. Muck for the rest of his life.

Alfred J. Carr, a leading lawyer, advocated the shooting of Dr. Muck and all other German aliens and naturalized citizens who criticized the President and the conduct of the war. "That's the way George Washington did," he said.

At the close of the meeting the entire audience stood with bowed heads for one minute in honor of the Americans killed by the Germans two days ago. The meeting ended with the entire audience singing lustily "The Star Spangled Banner."

It was stated by the management of the Lyric to-day that it was not known whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play the other concerts of its projected season here. The money paid for tickets for to-morrow night's concert will be returned at the box office to-morrow.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
Date NOV 6 1917

RESPECT FOR THE ANTHEM AND THE FLAG.

The preparations in Baltimore for a patriotic protest on the occasion of the Boston Symphony concert there to-morrow night indicate that the orchestra's fall tour of Eastern cities will serve as the incentive for a popular outburst of American sentiment over "The Star-Spangled Banner." Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! Dr. Muck's lack of tact with regard to playing the national anthem has inspired a new demand for it and made its performance by orchestras the musical equivalent of a pledge of loyalty.

When the excitement subsides it is to be hoped that something may be done to enforce a more general respect for the American flag. Most people rise when "The Star-Spangled Banner" is played at a public assemblage, but what proportion of the crowd in the street salutes the flag when it is borne past in procession? Some reverently uncover, but for the most part people stare stolidly at the national colors with no more outward expression of respect than if a sandwichman were passing. Whether the neglect is due only to thoughtlessness, as it mainly is, it is offensive to the instincts of patriotism.

There is too much of this slovenly Americanism, too little frank and open respect on the part of various elements of the population for the symbols of national unity in time of war. If no distinguished alien, preferably of Prussian birth, feels inspired to fill Dr. Muck's rôle and start the movement, some patriotic society should start it, for the dignity of the country and the greater veneration of its colors.

om WORLD
ldress: New York City
ate NOV 7 1917

BALTIMORE RISES AGAINST DR. MUCK

Great Indignation Meeting in Theatre That Barred His Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—Former Gov. Warfield denounced Dr. Karl Muck to a big assemblage at a patriotic meeting at the Lyric Theatre this afternoon. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to be held to-morrow night. Just before the meeting began Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of the posters announcing the concert.

The band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with rifles and fixed bayonets, marched down the aisle soon after 2 o'clock. After a selection by the National Army band from Camp Meade the audience sang patriotic songs.

In the course of his address Gov. Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which he said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore; secondly, it is the national song of the Republic; thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Capt. Hughes, representing Gen. Kuhn and Gen. Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his Generals of the army here and the army over there.

He concluded: "Muck's reference to 'The Star Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave, and he hoped that Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck.

Deafening applause greeted the remarks.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Dr. Muck for having refused to play the national anthem, thereby showing his contempt.

"We consider he has publicly insulted every patriotic citizen, and especially every citizen of Maryland, the State in which the national anthem had its birth," they say.

Washington Encores Muck for "Star Spangled Banner"

(Special to The World.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was played at the end of the programme, and the audience refused to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary Lane of the Interior Department and party occupied the

m TIMES
dress: New York City
NOV 6 - 1917

BALTIMORE FORBIDS DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Boston Symphony Is Barred for Leader's Antipathy to Our National Anthem.

GRAND JURY WARNS POLICE

Public Demonstration Against the Orchestra Feared—Patriotic Protest Today.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore Wednesday night. As a result of threats of mob violence and indignant protests in which agitation former Governor Edwin Warfield, descendant of a distinguished Revolutionary family, took a leading part, the Grand Jury today notified the Police Commissioners that, owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, the Prussian conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore, and that the concert should be called off. The Police Commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert's being given by the Orchestra, whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

On learning the action of the Police Commissioner former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for tomorrow, said:

"The action of the Commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star-Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic program.

"The Grand Jury's protest and the Police Commissioner's action will be read from the stage at the meeting tomorrow, and resolutions will be passed for the playing of the anthem in the future."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

om AMERICAN
ldress: New York City.
ate AUG 7 1917

Muck Twice Plays National Anthem

By International News Service.

Washington, Nov. 6.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his musicians today in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." More, he led them twice, once this afternoon, and once to-night, opening the programme with the national anthem at each appearance.

At least one holder of tickets, however, resented Dr. Muck's appearance after he had offered his resignation and refused to play the anthem. This ticket holder advertised his tickets for sale, and sold them rather than attend the concert.

TIMES
ss: New York City
NOV 7 - 1917

The Providence Protest.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a statement made yesterday and published in the papers this morning Major Higginson is reported to have said that he "received a request from some Providence women, unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts, to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts." Similar statements have been made by others during the past week, referring to "those women from Providence," as if we were unworthy of notice by the Symphony management and never had been interested in the concerts given by the orchestra.

As the one who asked the officers of the different musical organizations to unite in sending the telegram I desire to state, first of all, that our request was sent to Mr. Ellis as manager of the orchestra and not to Major Higginson.

Concerning the statement that we were unknown "and not subscribers," I submit the following facts: We have all been enthusiastic admirers and supporters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and seven of the eight women who signed the telegram have been subscribers; one of our number is a subscriber for the current year and has been a subscriber for fifteen years or more; one has attended the Symphony concerts here and elsewhere for twenty years, having been a subscriber most of the time until the present season; one has the programs from 1887 to 1916, having attended as a subscriber during most of these years; one has been a subscriber (until the present year) since 1906; two were subscribers up to three years ago and have since attended many of the concerts; and I myself have been a subscriber for nine or ten years out of the past thirteen, having decided to give up my seats for the present year because I was not satisfied with the program offered.

As officers of the different musical organizations for the women of Providence, we represent a large number of present as well as past subscribers to the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We believe that we have a right to be known as those patriotic, music-loving women of Providence who made a reasonable request when they asked that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played at the Symphony concert on the evening of Oct. 30. We are lovers of art in the best sense, but we put loyalty to our country first.

MARION E. McCONNELL,
(Mrs. James Eli McConnell,)
President of the Chaminade Club.
Providence, R. I., Nov. 5, 1917.

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
dress: New York City
NOV - 6 1917

WON'T LET MUCK'S ORCHESTRA PLAY

Baltimore Police Board, on Grand Jury's Recommendation, Cancels Boston Symphony Concert.

SAY THEY FEARED A RIOT

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.

Following the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston, and the subsequent outburst of indignation here, the orchestra will not be permitted to play here on Wednesday night.

Upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury to-day, the police board decided that inasmuch as a riot might be precipitated, it would be unwise to permit the concert to be held. This opposition has been championed by former Governor Edwin Warfield, who had planned to hold an indignation meeting to-morrow, to be attended, among others, by drafted men at Camp Meade and the camp band. This meeting will be held, notwithstanding the action of the police board. Musical devotees to-night are criticizing the police board, asserting that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

When Dr. Muck reached Philadelphia this afternoon he was carefully guarded by his friends, who conducted him to the Ritz-Carlton, where he remained until 8 P. M., reaching the Academy of Music at 8.05, when the concert started. Muck had a feeble reception and the applause following the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" lasted exactly one second.

"The action of the commissioners follows a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said: 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our star spangled banner was not fit to be included in an artistic program," said a member of the Police Board.

om AMERICAN
ldress: New York City.
ate 1917

Baltimore Forbids Dr. Muck's Concert

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners at Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night. They acted on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the Grand Jury, after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting to-morrow at which leading men of the State were to denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
NOV - 7 1917

MUCK PLAYS AT CAPITAL; DENOUNCED IN BALTIMORE

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Nov. 6.

Led by Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" before a large audience in the New National Theatre as a prelude to its concert in Washington this afternoon.

There had been some apprehension of a sensational scene owing to the intense feeling in this city, crowded as it is with officers and officials who are devoting all their time and energy to helping this country in the war with Germany. Ample police precautions had therefor been taken. But they proved entirely unnecessary.

When Dr. Muck stepped on the platform he was greeted by applause. Some one in the audience cried out, "Don't applaud him," but the effect was the very reverse. Dr. Muck acknowledged the applause, then turned to his orchestra and the musicians arose, as did the entire audience, while the national anthem was played with splendid feeling and effect. The house applauded vigorously and the tension was over.

Major Higginson was not in Washington, but his representatives refused to make any comment whatever on the action of the Baltimore authorities in forbidding the symphony orchestra to play there to-morrow. The orchestra will remain in Washington to-morrow and not play in Baltimore. The program to-day, which included Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4, closed with the overture to Tannhauser, which was well applauded.

Mrs. Wilson, wife of the president, was absent from Washington and consequently did not attend the concert, but the cabinet was represented by Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, wife of the Secretary of the Interior.

BALTIMORE CROWD DENOUNCES MUCK

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.

Dr. Karl Muck was bitterly denounced and "The Star Spangled Banner" eloquently extolled at the most remarkable patriotic mass meeting ever held in Baltimore this afternoon. Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric Theatre. They cheered former Governor Warfield, Judge Henry Stockbridge of the Maryland Court of Appeals, Secretary of State Simmons, Captain Hughes of the National Army and other prominent men, and they hissed and yelled every time Dr. Karl Muck's name was mentioned.

One woman prominent in society, and a leading member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, shouted "Kill him!" when Governor Warfield mentioned Muck's name.

Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and reaffirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

Captain Hughes in his speech said Muck's action was enough to cause Francis Scott Key to turn over in his grave, and he hoped he would rise from his grave and haunt Dr. Muck for the rest of his life.

Alfred J. Carr, a leading lawyer, advocated the shooting of Dr. Muck and all other German aliens and naturalized citizens who criticized the President and the conduct of the war. "That's the way George Washington did," he said.

At the close of the meeting the entire audience stood with bowed heads for one minute in honor of the Americans killed by the Germans two days ago. The meeting ended with the entire audience singing lustily "The Star Spangled Banner."

It was stated by the management of the Lyric to-day that it was not known whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play the other concerts of its projected season here. The money paid for tickets for to-morrow night's concert will be returned at the box office to-morrow.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
Date NOV 6 1917

RESPECT FOR THE ANTHEM AND THE FLAG.

The preparations in Baltimore for a patriotic protest on the occasion of the Boston Symphony concert there to-morrow night indicate that the orchestra's fall tour of Eastern cities will serve as the incentive for a popular outburst of American sentiment over "The Star-Spangled Banner." Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! Dr. Muck's lack of tact with regard to playing the national anthem has inspired a new demand for it and made its performance by orchestras the musical equivalent of a pledge of loyalty.

When the excitement subsides it is to be hoped that something may be done to enforce a more general respect for the American flag. Most people rise when "The Star-Spangled Banner" is played at a public assemblage, but what proportion of the crowd in the street salutes the flag when it is borne past in procession? Some reverently uncover, but for the most part people stare stolidly at the national colors with no more outward expression of respect than if a sandwichman were passing. Whether the neglect is due only to thoughtlessness, as it mainly is, it is offensive to the instincts of patriotism.

There is too much of this slovenly Americanism, too little frank and open respect on the part of various elements of the population for the symbols of national unity in time of war. If no distinguished alien, preferably of Prussian birth, feels inspired to fill Dr. Muck's rôle and start the movement, some patriotic society should start it, for the dignity of the country and the greater veneration of its colors.

om WORLD
ldress: New York City
ate

BALTIMORE RISES AGAINST DR. MUCK

Great Indignation Meeting in Theatre That Barred His Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—Former Gov. Warfield denounced Dr. Karl Muck to a big assemblage at a patriotic meeting at the Lyric Theatre this afternoon. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to be held to-morrow night. Just before the meeting began Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of the posters announcing the concert.

The band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with rifles and fixed bayonets, marched down the aisle soon after 2 o'clock. After a selection by the National Army band from Camp Meade the audience sang patriotic songs.

In the course of his address Gov. Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which he said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore; secondly, it is the national song of the Republic; thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Capt. Hughes, representing Gen. Kuhn and Gen. Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his Generals of the army here and the army over there.

He concluded: "Muck's reference to 'The Star Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave, and he hoped that Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck.

Deafening applause greeted the remarks.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Dr. Muck for having refused to play the national anthem, thereby showing his contempt.

"We consider he has publicly insulted every patriotic citizen, and especially every citizen of Maryland, the State in which the national anthem had its birth," they say.

Washington Encores Muck for "Star Spangled Banner"

(Special to The World.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was played at the end of the programme, and the audience refused to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary Lane of the Interior Department and party occupied the

m TIMES
ldress: New York City
e NOV 6 - 191

BALTIMORE FORBIDS DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Boston Symphony Is Barred for Leader's Antipathy to Our National Anthem.

GRAND JURY WARNS POLICE

Public Demonstration Against the Orchestra Feared—Patriotic Protest Today.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore Wednesday night. As a result of threats of mob violence and indignant protests in which agitation former Governor Edwin Warfield, descendant of a distinguished Revolutionary family, took a leading part, the Grand Jury today notified the Police Commissioners that, owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, the Prussian conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore, and that the concert should be called off. The Police Commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert's being given by the Orchestra, whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

On learning the action of the Police Commissioner former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for tomorrow, said:

"The action of the Commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star-Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic program.

"The Grand Jury's protest and the Police Commissioner's action will be read from the stage at the meeting to-morrow, and resolutions will be passed for the playing of the anthem in the future."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

om AMERICAN
ldress: New York City.
ate

Muck Twice Plays National Anthem

By International News Service.

Washington, Nov. 6.—Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his musicians today in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." More, he led them twice, once this afternoon, and once to-night, opening the programme with the national anthem at each appearance.

At least one holder of tickets, however, resented Dr. Muck's appearance after he had offered his resignation and refused to play the anthem. This ticket holder advertised his tickets for sale, and sold them rather than attend the concert.

om AMERICAN
ldress: New York City.
ate

Baltimore Forbids Dr. Muck's Concert

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners at Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night. They acted on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the Grand Jury, after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting to-morrow at which leading men of the State were to denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

TIMES
ss: New York City

The Providence Protest.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a statement made yesterday and published in the papers this morning Major Higginson is reported to have said that he "received a request from some Providence women, unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts, to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts." Similar statements have been made by others during the past week, referring to "those women from Providence," as if we were unworthy of notice by the Symphony management and never had been interested in the concerts given by the orchestra.

As the one who asked the officers of the different musical organizations to unite in sending the telegram I desire to state, first of all, that our request was sent to Mr. Ellis as manager of the orchestra and not to Major Higginson.

Concerning the statement that we were unknown "and not subscribers," I submit the following facts: We have all been enthusiastic admirers and supporters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and seven of the eight women who signed the telegram have been subscribers; one of our number is a subscriber for the current year and has been a subscriber for fifteen years or more; one has attended the Symphony concerts here and elsewhere for twenty years, having been a subscriber most of the time until the present season; one has the programs from 1887 to 1916, having attended as a subscriber during most of these years; one has been a subscriber (until the present year) since 1906; two were subscribers up to three years ago and have since attended many of the concerts; and I myself have been a subscriber for nine or ten years out of the past thirteen, having decided to give up my seats for the present year because I was not satisfied with the program offered.

As officers of the different musical organizations for the women of Providence, we represent a large number of present as well as past subscribers to the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We believe that we have a right to be known as those patriotic, music-loving women of Providence who made a reasonable request when they asked that "The Star-Spangled Banner" be played at the Symphony concert on the evening of Oct. 30. We are lovers of art in the best sense, but we put loyalty to our country first.

MARION E. McCONNELL,
(Mrs. James Ell McConnell,)
President of the Chaminade Club.
Providence, R. I., Nov. 5, 1917.

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ldress: New York City
NOV - 6 1917

WON'T LET MUCK'S ORCHESTRA PLAY

Baltimore Police Board, on Grand Jury's Recommendation, Cancels Boston Symphony Concert.

SAY THEY FEARED A RIOT

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.

Following the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston, and the subsequent outburst of indignation here, the orchestra will not be permitted to play here on Wednesday night.

Upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury to-day, the police board decided that inasmuch as a riot might be precipitated, it would be unwise to permit the concert to be held. This opposition has been championed by former Governor Edwin Warfield, who had planned to hold an indignation meeting to-morrow, to be attended, among others, by drafted men at Camp Meade and the camp band. This meeting will be held, notwithstanding the action of the police board. Musical devotees to-night are criticizing the police board, asserting that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

When Dr. Muck reached Philadelphia this afternoon he was carefully guarded by his friends, who conducted him to the Ritz-Carlton, where he remained until 8 P. M., reaching the Academy of Music at 8.05, when the concert started. Muck had a feeble reception and the applause following the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" lasted exactly one second.

"The action of the commissioners follows a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said: 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our star spangled banner was not fit to be included in an artistic program," said a member of the Police Board.

EVENING SUN

s: New York City

317

NO MUCK FOR BALTIMORE.

Decides Key and Wagner Don't Mix Well.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—Baltimore likes music as well as oysters, and German opera was its hobby before President Wilson laid down the pen and picked up the sword for future dealings with the Kaiser. The city has no set objections against German opera now, although it has become provincial in its taste for American tunes. "The Star Spangled Banner' is its favorite. Consequently, when it foresaw an attempt to mix Wagner with Key by an orchestra leader with a Teuton name and self-professed pro-Prussian sympathies, it rose in a wrath.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was known in Baltimore. The city had heard of his refusal last week to play the national anthem and his aspersive remarks of its musical qualities. The townspeople were righteously indignant and there was a rumbling in certain circles that portended little good for Dr. Muck when it was learned he was to appear here to-morrow night.

The agitation against Dr. Muck took such force that the Grand Jury, fearing disorder, yesterday told police commissioners that it would be better to call off the concert. The commissioners in turn notified the management of the Lyric, where Dr. Muck was to have appeared, that the concert would not be permitted.

Commenting on the action of the Grand Jury, ex-Gov. Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic demonstration for to-night, declared: "We never had any objection to the orchestra or German opera. We would have been willing to have the concert take place if some one other than Dr. Muck would have conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.'"

STAATSZEITUNG

New York City.

NOV 4 - 1917

Musikalische Genüsse für Musikfreunde.

Drei hervorragende Orchester konzertieren in der Academy.

Im Mittelpunkt der diesjährigen musikalischen Saison in Brooklyn stehen die Konzerte von drei der bedeutendsten Künstler-Orchester, die in regelmäßigen Abständen die Kirchenstadt besuchen. Es sind das Boston Symphonie Orchester, die New Yorker Symphonie Gesellschaft und die New Yorker Philharmonische Gesellschaft. Eingeleitet wurde die musikalische Saison in der Academy of Music mit dem gestrigen Nachmittagskonzert der New Yorker Symphonie Gesellschaft unter der Leitung von Herrn Walter Damrosch und unter Mitwirkung des Geigenvirtuosen Mischa Elman. Die weitern Konzerte dieser Vereinigung sind für 8. Dezember mit Louise Homer als Solistin, 26. Januar mit der Pianistin Leginska, für den 16. Februar mit einem Wagner-Programm und für 16. März mit der Tänzerin Roshanara gebucht.

Das Boston Symphonie Orchester konzertiert am nächsten Freitag zum erstenmale in Brooklyn und zwar werden die Künstler neben anderen Tonstücken mit Tschaikowskys „Pathetic", der 5. Symphonie von Liszt, der Ouvertüre zu Beethovens „Leonore" und dem symphonischen Poem „Finlandia" von Sibelius aufwarten. Am 6. Dezember spielt das Orchester unter Mitwirkung der Sopranistin Melba, am 11. Januar ist Fritz Kreisler der gefeierte Solist, am 15. Februar spielt mit den Künstlern der Pianist Winifred Christie. Am 15. März findet das letzte Konzert der Bostoner statt.

Fünf Konzerte veranstaltet die Philharmonische Gesellschaft von New York unter Herrn Josef Stransky. Die Konzerte finden am 18. November, 9. Dezember, 13. Januar, 10. Februar, und 10. März statt. Als Solisten wirken bei den einzelnen Veranstaltungen die Sopranistin Julia Culp, der Cellist Pablo Casals, der Bariton Louis Graveure, die Pianistin Guiomar und der russische Geigenvirtuose Jascha Heifetz mit.

Neuer Justizdempel im Bau.

om STAATSZEITUNG

dress: New York City.

NOV 4 - 191

te

In einem Artikel über Dr. Karl Muck erklärt die hiesige „Times", daß der Genannte sich zwar für einen Preußen ausgebe, von rechtswegen aber Bayer sei, da er in Darmstadt das Licht der Welt erblickt habe. Also doch! Die Bayern haben nicht nur den Kanzlerposten annektiert, sondern das ganze Großherzogtum Hessen mitsamt der Hauptstadt Darmstadt verschluckt.

*

NEW YORKER

ess: New York City. HERALD

NOV 4 - 1917

Bleibt Dr. Muck oder geht er?

Die nächsten Tage werden über die Krisis im Boston Symphonie-Orchester Klarheit bringen.

Boston, 3. November. Dr. Muck wird mit dem Boston Symphonie-Orchester eine Konzerttour in der nächsten Woche unternehmen und Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia und Washington besuchen, wo das vorbereitete Programm mit der Nationalhymne als Einleitung gespielt werden soll. Die von Dr. Muck unterbreitete Resignation als Dirigent schwebt vorläufig noch, da die Aufnahme, die er und das Orchester auf ihrer Konzertreise finden werden, schließlich auch in dieser Hinsicht ausschlaggebend sein wird. Sollten jedoch Versuche gemacht werden, Dr. Muck zu zwingen, deutsche Meisterwerke von seinem vorbereiteten Programm zu streichen, so dürfte er wahrscheinlich auf seiner Resignation bestehen, und Major Higginson wird dann vermutlich das Orchester auflösen. Dr. Mucks Status als feindlicher Ausländer dürfte wahrscheinlich bei der Konzerttour in Frage kommen, wiewohl das Justiz-Departement nichts dagegen einzuwenden hat. Das „Providence Journal" fordert jedoch seine Internierung als feindlicher Ausländer.

Später: Beim Konzert heute abend dirigierte Dr. Muck wieder das „Star Spangled Banner" und wird dies auch nächste Woche in den Konzerten von New York, Brooklyn und Washington tun.

Auch wenn Dr. Muck resignieren sollte, so wird in dem Brooklyner Konzertplan keine Aenderung eintreten, wie Direktor Charles D. Atkin vom Brooklyn Institute gestern erklärte. Nur durch eine Auflösung des Orchesters würden die Pläne natürlich über den Haufen geworfen werden.

om WORLD

dress: New York City

ate NOV

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Symphony Music and National Anthems.

To the Editor of The World:

Is it not surprising that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the best organizations in the world, founded and supported by an American, patronized to a large extent by music-loving Americans, when honored at a time like this by a request to play our national hymn should object on the ground that it does not constitute the highest form of art?

It was not beneath a musical creator like Anton Dvorak to write a symphon founded on American negro melodies and to go a step further, Brahms has written a symphony from German college tunes, a very admirable work. Josef Haydn wrote the Austrian national hymn.

If great creators like these have turned out such wonderful work from the expression of the people, is it not unreasonable for a man who is supported and honored in every way to refuse a request which should be deemed an honor at this time? It certainly is a pity to make an issue of such a trivial thing and cause its founder and the music-loving people the anxiety of losing one of the highest organizations of its kind in existence.

Should not the present conductor consider the old adage, "The bread I eat, the song I sing"?

JOSEPH GOLDSTEIN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 3.

n STAATSZEITUNG

ess: New York City.

NOV 4 - 191

Symphonie-Orchester.

Die Mitglieder des Philharmonischen Orchesters haben, wie die Leitung der Gesellschaft uns mitteilt, obgleich die Musiker gewöhnlich nicht zu den begüterten Menschenklassen gerechnet werden können, zur Freiheits-Anleihe nicht weniger als $12,000 gezeichnet. Entgegen der allgemeinen Annahme, daß die amerikanischen Symphonie-Orchester größtenteils aus deutschen Musikern bestehen, konstatiert die Gesellschaft, daß das gegenwärtige Philharmonische Orchester durchweg aus amerikanischen Bürgern besteht, von denen 42 hier geboren sind. Von den naturalisierten Bürgern, welche 11 Nationen umfassen, Rußland, Italien, Holland, Ungarn, Böhmen, Oesterreich-Ungarn, Frankreich, Polen, Norwegen, Deutschland und Belgien, kamen nur 14 aus Deutschland oder Oesterreich hierher, und deren Beiträge-Anmeldungen zur Freiheits-Anleihe kann als genügender Beweis ihres unbedingten Amerikanismus gelten.

Im Konzert des Damrosch'schen Orchesters am kommenden Samstag abend in Carnegie Hall bildet die „Symphonie Française" von Dubois, dem französischen Meister, der vor Kurzem sein 80. Lebensjahr vollendet hat, die Hauptdarbietung. Das Werk ist typisch französisch im Charakter und seinen emotionellen Eigenschaften. Im dritten Satze, einem Allegro con fuoco, wird die Marseillaise jedoch in drei Viertel statt im originalen vier Viertel-Takt zu einer martialischen Klimax emporgearbeitet. Eine weitere Novität ist ein Lied „The Red Cross Spirit Speaks" von Horatio Parker, Worte von John M. Finley, welches Frau Louise Homer, die Solistin, nebst der berühmten Alt-Arie aus Gluck's „Orfeo" und César Franck's „The Procession" vortragen wird. Ein „Adagio" für Streicher von Lekau und Mackenzie's „Britannia", welches „Eine nautische Ouverture" genannt wird, vervollständigen das Programm.

Dieses Programm wird mit Ausnahme der „Symphonie Française", an deren Stelle die Zweite Symphonie von Brahms gesetzt wurde, in Aeolian Hall am nächsten Sonntag nachmittag wiederholt.

Die „Symphonie-Konzerte für Kinder", die neueste Gründung von Herrn Walter Damrosch, beginnen am nächsten Samstag vormittag 11 Uhr in Aeolian Hall, welchem Konzert drei weitere am 1. Dezember, 12. Januar und 16. Februar folgen werden. Hrrr Damrosch wird in diesen vier Vorführungen seinem jugendlichen Auditorium das Wesen der verschiedenen Instrumentgruppen des Orchesters in Wort und Ton vorführen. Das Programm des kommenden Samstag-Konzertes, welches den Kleinen die Streichinstrumente erläutern soll, lautet wie folgt: Weber, „Oberon"-Ouverture; Händel, „Largo"; Beethoven, Allegretto aus der Achten Symphonie und „Der Tanz der Sylphiden" und „Rakoczy-Marsch" aus Berlioz' „Faust's Verdammnis".

Diese vier Konzerte sind wohl zu unterscheiden von den Damrosch'schen sechs „Symphoniekonzerten für junge Leute", welche in Carnegie Hall nunmehr in ihrer zwanzigsten Saison stehen.

Am kommenden Donnerstag abend, resp. Samstag nachmittag finden die zwei ersten hiesigen Konzerte des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters in Carnegie Hall unter Leitung von Dr. Carl Muck statt. Das Donnerstag-Programm lautet: Brahms' Vierte Symphonie in E-Moll; Berlioz' Ouvertüre zu „König Lear", Liszt, symphonisches Poem „Prometheus" und Wagner, Vorspiel zum „Parsifal". Die Dauer des Konzertes wird 1 Stunde und 50 Minuten betragen.

Für den Samstag nachmittag hat Dr. Muck das folgende Programm zusammengestellt: Beethoven, Fünfte Symphonie; Sibelius, „Finlandia", Rachmanninoff, symphonisches Poem „Die Toteninsel", und Enesco, „Rumänische Rhapsodie" in A-Dur. Das Konzert wird 1 Stunde und 40 Minuten in Anspruch nehmen.

Herr Modest Altschuler kündigt fünf Symphoniekonzerte seines Russischen Symphonie-Orchesters für folgende Samstagnachmittage an: 17. November, 19. Januar, 16. Februar, 2. und 23. März. Näheres über das Programm und die Solisten wird in Bälde mitgeteilt werden.

Im ersten dieser Konzerte wird Herr Altschuler dem Publikum eine neue russische Pianistin, Frl. Tamara Lubimova, vorführen, welche ein neues Pianokonzert in E-Moll von Liapunoff vortragen wird.

Das Programm wird mehrere Novitäten enthalten, darunter „The Dance of the Goat-footed Sylvans" von Ilya Satz, „Hyrcus Nocturnus" von Vassilenko und Paraphrase über die Alliierten-Hymnen von Glazounow.

n NEW YORKER

ress: New York City. HERALD

NOV 4 - 1917

Mucks Resignation.

Seine Resignation hat Dr. Muck, der verdienstvolle Leiter des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters eingereicht, nachdem er am Ende des Symphoniekonzertes in Boston — auf den Wunsch der dortigen Behörden — das „Star Spangled Banner" dirigiert hatte.

Eine häßliche Kontroverse war diesem Entschluß des berühmten Musikers vorhergegangen. Er hatte sich nämlich zuerst geweigert, als loyaler Deutscher die amerikanische Nationalhymne zu dirigieren. Und es verlautete auch aus Boston, daß Major Higginson, der Gründer und Finanzier des dortigen Symphonie-Orchesters, seinen Kapellmeister in jeder Weise unterstützen wolle.

Einen Ausweg hatte Walter Damrosch vorgeschlagen, der sich auf den Standpunkt gestellt hatte, daß es unrecht wäre, einen deutschen Staatsbürger zu zwingen, die amerikanische Nationalhymne zu dirigieren. Herr Damrosch hat geraten, das „Star Spangled Banner" von einem Hilfs-Dirigenten dirigieren zu lassen.

Es ist ungemein bedauerlich, daß Dr. Muck nicht diesen gewiß vernünftigen Ratschlag angenommen hat. Denn so wäre aufs leichteste ein heikles Problem aus der Welt geschafft und allen Parteien Rechnung getragen worden.

Die Resignation Dr. Mucks ist für das Bostoner Orchester und für die Musikwelt Amerikas ein schwerer Schlag.

Es steht zu hoffen, daß Major Higginson das Entlassungsgesuch Dr. Mucks nicht annehmen wird. Denn das Wirken des deutschen Kapellmeisters ist für die Bostoner Symphonie von großem Segen gewesen.

* * *

Das „Star Spangled Banner" ist aber auch für ein kommendes Konzert Frieda Hempel's in Providence, R. I., zu einer Lebensfrage geworden. Denn der dortige Polizei-Kommissär hat beschlossen, der Künstlerin keine Erlaubnis, ihr Konzert abzuhalten, gegeben, wenn sie nicht die National-Hymne zum Vortrage bringen würde. Sie hatte bei ihrem letzten Auftreten in Providence das „Star Spangled Banner" singen sollen, aber erklärt, daß sie den Text der Hymne noch nicht kenne. In der Zwischenzeit aber hat, so erzählt der Manager der deutschen Sängerin, Frl. Hempel das Versäumte nachgeholt. Und die guten Providencler werden also das „Star Spangled Banner" aus dem Munde der schönen Sängerin zu hören bekommen. Der Polizei-Kommissär wird keinen Grund zum behördlichen Einschreiten haben. Ueberhaupt Frl. Hempel: Wie lange wird sie noch deutscher Nationalität sein? Erzählt man sich doch in Künstlerkreisen, daß die prächtige Diva ihr Herz an einen Amerikaner verloren habe. Und schon in Bälde soll der Hochzeitsmarsch gespielt werden.

* * *

STAATSZEITUNG

ess: New York City.

*

Wie Major Higginson, der Gründer des Boston-Symphonie-Orchesters, erklärt, hat sich Dr. Muck keinen Augenblick geweigert, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen. „Wozu der Lärm, was steht den Herr'n zu Diensten?"

*

om EVENING SUN

dress: New York City

te

The Boston Symphony Squabble.

Dr. MUCK and Colonel HIGGINSON both seemed to be in the position of saying the right thing at the wrong time. Both are elderly men, somewhat "set" in their ideas, both inspired with a love of true art. But at this moment, even the obeisance due art should not be so profound as the reverence paid to the spirit of faithful devotion to country, to obedience and to the sense of responsibility which should fill the breasts of all good men whose reverence for right and liberty and the welfare of mankind outweigh every minor consideration whatever.

94

om TIMES

dress: New York City

NOV 5 -

e.....

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

All's Well That Ends Well.

It is a safe prophecy that the terrible tempest that has been raging around the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. MUCK as the pivot of cyclonic revolution, will now die away and that visitors to the scene of disturbance will find that it caused neither loss of life nor destruction of property.

The eminent conductor, having discovered many indications that the American nation faced with composure his warning that for him to order, or even to ask, his musicians to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" would cause the instant dissolution of the admirable organization built up by the toil of years, evidently came to the conclusion that the danger to the orchestra was as great from the outside as from the inside. Whether it was a request or a command that he issued to his aids is not for common folk to know, but—the anthem was played, with Dr. MUCK as leader, and nothing at all happened except that his auditors applauded with vigor. His Prussian heart did not break, the musicians did not revolt, and musical art, so far as has yet been reported, seems likely to survive for some time this granting by one group of its votaries of a slight concession to public sentiment as it exists in time of war.

That the doctor thus promptly and gracefully descended to earth from a horse of notable altitude is highly creditable to his common sense, and even if it was a little surprising in one of such iron rigidity as men of Prussian birth are supposed to be, we are all ready to accept as satisfactory his assurance that he loves us as much as—and no more than—he did before.

No great apprehensions will be excited by the news that coincidentally, or contemporaneously, with his coming down from the steed aforementioned Dr. MUCK placed his resignation in the hands of Major HIGGINSON. Everybody knows that between the action meant by that dear old phrase and the real resigning of anything there is a difference so large that between the two there is practically no relation at all.

As the end, if end it be, of an episode promising many agreeable excitements, this is a bit disappointing to sincere sportsmen, but there is enough of war going on elsewhere than in symphony orchestras to satisfy the demands of all except the morbidly militant, and about the best of advice that could be given to all concerned can be condensed into the inelegant but perspicuous locution, "Forget it!"

WORLD

s: New York City

NOV 6 1917

BALTIMORE FORBIDS DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Police Feared Riot if Boston Symphony Were Allowed to Play.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the Grand Jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass-meeting to-morrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

John S. Bridges, foreman of the Grand Jury, stated that the Grand Jury felt that the concert should not be held, as it was feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

om EVENING POST

ldress: New York City

ate.....

Courtesy at the Concert.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING POST:

SIR: It is seldom that we are called upon to teach manners to a sister city. If there is still to be a Boston Symphony concert here next Thursday, let us have enough humility to extend to the strangers within our gates the courtesy which our tried benefactor, Mr. Higginson, has wished to extend to them.

JOHN H. BENNETT.

New York, November 5.

EVENING SUN

New York City

BALTIMORE OUT AGAINST MUCK

City Threatens Trouble if German Leads at Concert.

EX-GOVERNOR GIVES WARNING

Warfield Promises Warm Reception to Prussian Conductor.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Despite a statement by Major H. L. Higginson, backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, exonerating Dr. Karl Muck of the charge of refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner," residents of this city are threatening serious disorder if the orchestra with the German as its leader attempts to give a scheduled concert here on Wednesday.

Some of Baltimore's most prominent citizens are determined that Dr. Muck shall not appear here. If he makes so bold as to appear, it was said to-day, there will be a riot instead of music. Ex-Gov. Edwin Warfield is one of those bitterly opposed to the German's appearance. He has notified the Police Board that there will be serious trouble if any attempt is made to give a concert. The former Governor said he would be willing to lead a mob in breaking up the concert.

Mass Meeting Arranged.

As a protest against what are regarded as insults to "The Star Spangled Banner," ex-Gov. Warfield has arranged a patriotic mass meeting to be held to-morrow afternoon. Soldiers from Camp Meade will attend the meeting and Baltimore's allegiance to the flag and the country will be reaffirmed. Resolutions are also to be passed, it was reported, denouncing "the Kaiser's own Muck."

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—Asserting that Dr. Karl Muck had never refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and exonerating all members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of any disloyal intent, Major Henry L. Higginson, in a statement, has taken upon himself the blame for the omission of the anthem from the orchestra's programme.

Major Higginson explains that some Providence women, who were unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts, requested that the anthem be made a part of the programme while the orchestra was in that city. Dr. Muck was never told of the request, Major Higginson says, and knew nothing of it until the orchestra returned to Boston. After criticism had been directed at the orchestra, the statement adds, "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal.

Says Request Wasn't Refused.

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused," said Major Higginson.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist: The orchestra under Dr. Muck has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

The Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Philadelphia to-day, and it is expected that Dr. Muck will lead in the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." It was pointed out to-day that there are forty-one Germans, including Dr. Muck, in the orchestra. Nineteen of that number are naturalized Americans. There are also subjects of Austria, Holland, Belgium, Russia, France and Great Britain in the organization.

SUN

ess: New York City.

NOV 19

HIGGINSON TAKES BLAME OFF MUCK

Major Says He Is Responsible for Failure to Play National Anthem.

DIRECTOR NEVER REFUSED

Request for "Star Spangled Banner" Ignored by Orchestra's Backer.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made to-night by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Major Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by criticism from citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence of the omission of the national anthem from the programme of the concert in that city last week.

Major Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, "as usual, quiet and well received."

Muck Never Refused.

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said to-night:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist: The orchestra under Dr. Muck has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

The Symphony Orchestra left to-day for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert to-morrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

All Nations Represented.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German it is pointed out that the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are forty-one Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom nineteen are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, thirteen of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, twelve of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

Muck was obtained for the Boston Symphony by Charles A. Ellis, the manager. He was then conducting the Royal Opera in Berlin, and had to get the Kaiser's permission to come here in 1906, when he made such a success that his leave was extended for the next season. In 1912 he resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin Opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the fatherland. But Representative Kopsch arose in the German House in his defence. He criticised "that despotic authority of Prussian militarism which extends even to the temples of the Muses," and accused Count von Huelsen-Haeslen, intendant of the Royal Opera House, for attaining "bureaucratic domination at the cost of artistic merit."

BALTIMORE PLANS RIOT.

Threats Made Against Muck by Irate Patriots.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 4.—There is every indication that if Karl Muck comes to Baltimore to lead the Boston Symphony on Wednesday night according to schedule there will be a riot instead of music.

Former Gov. Warfield, who notified the Police Board that there would be serious trouble if an attempt was made to give the concert, to-day said he would be willing to lead the mob in breaking up the concert, and said there would be several thousands behind him. The Police Board said they would take no action unless convinced there would be a breach of the peace.

Former Gov. Warfield has arranged for a patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric on Tuesday afternoon. It will be attended by a detachment of National Army men from Camp Meade and the music will be furnished by the Camp Meade band.

The objects of this meeting are to reaffirm the allegiance of the people of Baltimore to the country, its flag and anthem, and to protest against the insults to the Star Spangled Banner by Dr. Karl Muck of Germany.

As a climax, a resolution will be introduced expressing the outraged sentiments of Baltimore against the "Kaiser's own Muck."

Detective William A. Pinkerton said: "If I had my way he would be on his way back to Germany or somewhere else."

When asked where the "somewhere else" was, Mr. Pinkerton said: "If any American citizen had dared to do in Germany what Dr. Muck has done in this country the German Government would have ordered him shot. No American living would have dared to refuse to play the German national anthem when requested to do so in Germany and lived. That's all I have to say about Dr. Muck."

TRIBUNE

New York City

Baltimore Bars Boston Symphony And Dr. Muck

Police Order Issued to Prohibit Concert in Any Event

Violence Is Feared

City Angered Over the Issue Raised in Refusal to Play National Anthem

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Dr. Muck or no Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be prohibited from giving its scheduled concert at the Lyric here Wednesday night. An order to this effect was embodied this evening by the Board of Police Commissioners in a letter to Manager Wilbur Kinsey, of the Lyric, drafted after a protracted session.

The action was precipitated by a notification to the Police Board by the grand jury that the members of the inquest considered it "unwise, if not physically dangerous" to permit the concert.

Foreman John S. Bridges was sent to the Police Board early to-day as the representative of the jury to carry this message.

Mr. Kinsey received the letter tonight. He stated that he will get in touch with the managers of the orchestra to find out if they will give the concert here Wednesday and the concerts scheduled for the rest of the season without Dr. Muck. If they so agree, said Mr. Kinsey, this may change the situation and he will ask the Police Board to rescind their prohibitory order. However, it does not appear probable that the order will be rescinded for Wednesday's concert.

The grand jury and the police board seem to have taken the stand that the anger of the people of Baltimore is so unmistakable that, even if Dr. Muck is taken from the orchestra before Wednesday, it may be impos-

CALL

ss: New York City

NOV 5 - 1917

MUCK YIELDS ON ANTHEM ISSUE

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR WILL LEAD IN AMERICA'S HYMN AT PHILADELPHIA CONCERT

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, probably will be at the concert, if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every future concert, the question is whether there will be objections to Dr. Muck such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the program.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German it is pointed out that in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the department of justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the central powers. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, six of Great Britain, and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

Major Higginson pays Muck $8,000 a year, or $3,000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. He came to Boston on a five-year contract which expired last spring, and the major considered him so essential to the success of the symphony that he asked him to remain.

In 1912 Dr. Muck resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston.

HERALD

New York City

"Kill Dr. Muck!" Cries D.A.R. Member at Mass Meeting

Baltimore Gathering Hisses Name of German Musician and Cheers National Anthem.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BALTIMORE, Md., Tuesday.—Dr. Karl Muck was bitterly denounced and the "Star Spangled Banner" eloquently extolled at one of the most remarkable patriotic mass meetings ever held in Baltimore, this afternoon. Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric. They cheered for the one-time Governor, Mr. Warfield; Judge Henry Stockbridge, of the Maryland Court of Appeals; the Secretary of State, Mr. Simmons; Captain Hughes, of the National Army, and other prominent men, and they hissed and yelled every time Dr. Karl Muck's name was mentioned.

One prominent woman of society and a leader of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, yelled:—"Kill him," when Governor Warfield mentioned Muck's name. Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and re affirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem at Capital

HERALD BUREAU, No. 1,502 H STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted nationwide condemnation, appeared at two concerts this afternoon and to-night at the National Theatre. The audiences included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts.

TIMES

s: New York City

NOV 5 - 1917

MUCK BLAMELESS, HIGGINSON INSISTS

Sponsor Shoulders All Responsibility in Controversy Over National Anthem.

REQUEST NOT TRANSMITTED

Director and Boston Symphony Men Never Were Asked to Play Air, Major Says.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their programs was made tonight by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Major Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by statements of citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence, who criticised the omission of the national anthem from the program of the concert in that city last week.

Major Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence the "Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks, not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

EX-GOV. WARFIELD WOULD MOB MUCK

Volunteers to Lead Baltimore Citizens to Prevent Concert Conducted by German.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 4.—Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, President of the Fidelity Trust Company and one of Baltimore's foremost citizens and financiers, who has arranged for a big patriotic meeting at the Lyric Theatre Tuesday afternoon to protest against Dr. Karl Muck leading the Symphony Orchestra at its concert here Wednesday evening, said today:

"Karl Muck shall not lead an orchestra in Baltimore. I told the Police Board members that this man would not be allowed to insult the people of the birthplace of 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' I told them that mob violence would prevent it, if necessary, and that I would gladly lead the mob to prevent the insult to my country and my flag. I told them that I knew of a thousand others who would gladly aid in leading the throng.

"This is a time when our Government must stand indorsed. We should not and will not tolerate any dictation as to the patriotic feeling for our flag. Our people have only contempt for the man who utters a criticism of the demand to play our national anthem. We consider it a symphony incomparable at a time like this, greater than anything ever composed in Germany, more glorious and befitting the hearing of true Americans than the works of any composer living or dead. We deny that our anthem jars with any harmony or symphony to which the American people should listen. 'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be sung when the others are long forgotten."

A band from Camp Meade with a guard of honor composed of 150 drafted men from Baltimore will participate in the patriotic demonstration, which will take place in the same hall in which the Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play the following night.

concert gave them up at the last minute, and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr. Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather the inability of the holders to attend.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Old and Rare French Books

IMPORTATIONS JUST RECEIVED

Send for catalogue

E. P. DUTTON & CO., 681 Fifth Ave

TIMES

ss: New York City

NOV 7 - 1917

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AT CAPITOL

Boston Symphony Conductor Warmly Greeted Before Playing "Star-Spangled Banner."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra by official and social Washington this afternoon was only a little less gratifying than in former seasons, while the applause greeting the much-discussed leader, Dr. Carl Muck, as he stepped on the stage at the National Theatre was long and earnest, with special emphasis from the music-loving gallery.

Although not named on the program, "The Star-Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Dr. Muck leading and the entire orchestra standing.

This was followed by Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. The program closed with the overture to Tannhäuser, which received the applause of the entire house.

Only one box remained empty and less than fifty seats, although some former patrons of the orchestra have relinquished their tickets since the controversy arose over the inclusion of the National anthem in the performance.

The diplomatic attendance was smaller than usual, which, with the absence from town of President and Mrs. Wilson, robbed the opening performance of some of its interest. Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, General and Mrs. William Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Richard Townsend, and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box holders.

DENOUNCE MUCK AT RALLY.

Big Crowd at Baltimore Indorses Protest—Gibbons Sends Letter.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—A big crowd turned out this afternoon to attend the meeting called by ex-Governor Warfield to protest against Dr. Muck's being allowed to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A regimental band from Camp Meade was present and fifty men from Company I marched into the hall.

When the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played "The Star-Spangled Banner" willingly or unwillingly, the applause was deafening. When ex-Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said "he should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a minute. At its end a woman who had been waving a flag from a box near the stage shouted: "Muck should have been shot when he said that."

After the anthem was sung Mr. Warfield shouted: "The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art—what does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism?"

"This isn't Philadelphia," shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, no," shouted the ex-Governor.

Then Mr. Warfield read a few out of a sheaf of letters written to him, commending his stand. He read this communication from Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the Republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

PITTSBURGH MAY BAR MUCK.

Patriotic Societies Also Object to Kreisler's Appearance There.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 6.—Trouble is brewing for the promoters of the Ellis series of concerts here, patriotic societies objecting to the appearance of Fritz Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Kreisler is booked for Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and the Union Arcade Auditorium on Saturday afternoon.

Protests are pouring in to the Director of Public Safety asking him to cancel the license for the Kreisler concert, the latest one being from the Daughters of 1812, who call him an alien enemy. They also called on ticket buyers to stay away from the Kreisler concert if the Director of Public Safety did not stop it. Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, President of the Dolly Madison Chapter, Daughters of 1812, and Mrs. John B. Heron, President of the local chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution, are leading the fight.

EAGLE

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

PATRIOTISM VANQUISHES ART.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played at every concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this winter. It took Major Higginson about twenty-four hours to realize that patriotism is more vital and fundamental than art, and it took Dr. Muck just about as long to discover that his sensibilities are less important than his salary. For the Prussian director resigned first and then led the anthem of his enemies—which may be taken as an indication that the resignation might be withdrawn under pressure.

Both for the credit of Dr. Muck and the future of the orchestra the resignation should be accepted. If Dr. Muck should go home—it should be possible to permit that for an artist past the age of military service—and lead a military band on the firing line, as Toscanini has been doing, he would be entitled to the world's respect as a man who was doing his bit for his own country. If he stays here and leads the anthem of his enemies he will be under suspicion as a man whose loyalty to his Kaiser is not proof against the seduction of a good salary. To have our national anthem led by an alien enemy, who has sneered at it, will create an atmosphere of insincerity which will not act favorably on the future of the Boston orchestra. There are American conductors to be found, and although the beautiful finish of this orchestra might suffer under the change, none of these leaders could devise more stupid programs than Dr. Muck frequently contrived. That is not war criticism. It has been made many times in the notices of the concerts in The Eagle and other journals and by correspondents of this paper. Whatever the orchestra might suffer through the loss of Dr. Muck would be made up by a good program maker and by popular respect for a leader who played "The Star-Spangled Banner" from choice and not by compulsion.

Patriotism will play far greater havoc with the opera season than it need to do with the Boston Symphony concerts. No operas will be sung in the German language, which will bar Wagner, whose works have furnished about one-third of the repertory and at least half the enthusiasm of other seasons. That trouble might be obviated if the singers knew English texts for these works. Then Wagner could be given in New York in English just as Shakespeare is given in Berlin in German. It would be a toss up as to which master suffered the more by translation. There is a competent English text for "Tristan and Isolde" and there are hopes that Olive Fremstad may be able to learn that text in time to save that mighty work. Also, Mr. Savage gave "Parsifal" acceptably in English, and that ought to be possible at the Metropolitan. If war should drive us into a real respect and liking for our own tongue in opera, it would do more for art than any injury it inflicts through barring enemy aliens from our stages.

CALL

ss: New York City

NOV 5 - 1917

MUCK YIELDS ON ANTHEM ISSUE

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR WILL LEAD IN AMERICA'S HYMN AT PHILADELPHIA CONCERT

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, probably will be at the concert, if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every future concert, the question is whether there will be objections to Dr. Muck such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the program.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German it is pointed out that in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the department of justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the central powers. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, six of Great Britain, and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

Major Higginson pays Muck $8,000 a year, or $3,000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. He came to Boston on a five-year contract which expired last spring, and the major considered him so essential to the success of the symphony that he asked him to remain.

In 1912 Dr. Muck resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston.

HERALD

New York City

"Kill Dr. Muck!" Cries D.A.R. Member at Mass Meeting

Baltimore Gathering Hisses Name of German Musician and Cheers National Anthem.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BALTIMORE, Md., Tuesday.—Dr. Karl Muck was bitterly denounced and the "Star Spangled Banner" eloquently extolled at one of the most remarkable patriotic mass meetings ever held in Baltimore, this afternoon. Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric. They cheered for the one-time Governor, Mr. Warfield; Judge Henry Stockbridge, of the Maryland Court of Appeals; the Secretary of State, Mr. Simmons; Captain Hughes, of the National Army, and other prominent men, and they hissed and yelled every time Dr. Karl Muck's name was mentioned.

One prominent woman of society and a leader of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, yelled:—"Kill him," when Governor Warfield mentioned Muck's name. Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and re affirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem at Capital

HERALD BUREAU.
No. 1,502 H STREET, N. W.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted nationwide condemnation, appeared at two concerts this afternoon and to-night at the National Theatre. The audiences included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts. [illegible] applauded.

TIMES

s: New York City

NOV 5 - 1917

MUCK BLAMELESS, HIGGINSON INSISTS

Sponsor Shoulders All Responsibility in Controversy Over National Anthem.

REQUEST NOT TRANSMITTED

Director and Boston Symphony Men Never Were Asked to Play Air, Major Says.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their programs was made tonight by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Major Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by statements of citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence, who criticised the omission of the national anthem from the program of the concert in that city last week.

Major Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence the "Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks, not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

EX-GOV. WARFIELD WOULD MOB MUCK

Volunteers to Lead Baltimore Citizens to Prevent Concert Conducted by German.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 4.—Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, President of the Fidelity Trust Company and one of Baltimore's foremost citizens and financiers, who has arranged for a big patriotic meeting at the Lyric Theatre Tuesday afternoon to protest against Dr. Karl Muck leading the Symphony Orchestra at its concert here Wednesday evening, said today:

"Karl Muck shall not lead an orchestra in Baltimore. I told the Police Board members that this man would not be allowed to insult the people of the birthplace of 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' I told them that mob violence would prevent it, if necessary, and that I would gladly lead the mob to prevent the insult to my country and my flag. I told them that I knew of a thousand others who would gladly aid in leading the throng.

"This is a time when our Government must stand indorsed. We should not and will not tolerate any dictation as to the patriotic feeling for our flag. Our people have only contempt for the man who utters a criticism of the demand to play our national anthem. We consider it a symphony incomparable at a time like this, greater than anything ever composed in Germany, more glorious and befitting the hearing of true Americans than the works of any composer living or dead. We deny that our anthem jars with any harmony or symphony to which the American people should listen. 'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be sung when the others are long forgotten."

A band from Camp Meade with a guard of honor composed of 150 drafted men from Baltimore will participate in the patriotic demonstration, which will take place in the same hall in which the Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to play the following night.

TIMES

ss: New York City

NOV 7 - 1917

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AT CAPITOL

Boston Symphony Conductor Warmly Greeted Before Playing "Star-Spangled Banner."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra by official and social Washington this afternoon was only a little less gratifying than in former seasons, while the applause greeting the much-discussed leader, Dr. Carl Muck, as he stepped on the stage at the National Theatre was long and earnest, with special emphasis from the music-loving gallery.

Although not named on the program, "The Star-Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Dr. Muck leading and the entire orchestra standing.

This was followed by Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. The program closed with the overture to Tannhauser, which received the applause of the entire house.

Only one box remained empty and less than fifty seats, although some former patrons of the orchestra have relinquished their tickets since the controversy arose over the inclusion of the National anthem in the performance.

The diplomatic attendance was smaller than usual, which, with the absence from town of President and Mrs. Wilson, robbed the opening performance of some of its interest. Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, General and Mrs. William Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Richard Townsend, and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box holders.

DENOUNCE MUCK AT RALLY.

Big Crowd at Baltimore Indorses Protest—Gibbons Sends Letter.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—A big crowd turned out this afternoon to attend the meeting called by ex-Governor Warfield to protest against Dr. Muck's being allowed to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A regimental band from Camp Meade was present and fifty men from Company I marched into the hall.

When the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played "The Star-Spangled Banner" willingly or unwillingly, the applause was deafening. When ex-Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said "he should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a minute. At its end a woman who had been waving a flag from a box near the stage shouted: "Muck should have been shot when he said that."

After the anthem was sung Mr. Warfield shouted: "The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art—what does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism?"

"This isn't Philadelphia," shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, no," shouted the ex-Governor.

Then Mr. Warfield read a few out of a sheaf of letters written to him, commending his stand. He read this communication from Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the Republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

PITTSBURGH MAY BAR MUCK.

Patriotic Societies Also Object to Kreisler's Appearance There.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 6.—Trouble is brewing for the promoters of the Ellis series of concerts here, patriotic societies objecting to the appearance of Fritz Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Kreisler is booked for Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and the Union Arcade Auditorium on Saturday afternoon.

Protests are pouring in to the Director of Public Safety asking him to cancel the license for the Kreisler concert, the latest one being from the Daughters of 1812, who call him an alien enemy. They also called on ticket buyers to stay away from the Kreisler concert if the Director of Public Safety did not stop it. Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, President of the Dolly Madison Chapter, Daughters of 1812, and Mrs. John B. Heron, President of the local chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution, are leading the fight.

concert gave them up at the last minute, and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr. Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather the inability of the holders to attend.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Old and Rare French Books

IMPORTATIONS JUST RECEIVED

Send for catalogue

E. P. DUTTON & CO., 681 Fifth Ave

EAGLE

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

PATRIOTISM VANQUISHES ART.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played at every concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this winter. It took Major Higginson about twenty-four hours to realize that patriotism is more vital and fundamental than art, and it took Dr. Muck just about as long to discover that his sensibilities are less important than his salary. For the Prussian director resigned first and then led the anthem of his enemies—which may be taken as an indication that the resignation might be withdrawn under pressure.

Both for the credit of Dr. Muck and the future of the orchestra the resignation should be accepted. If Dr. Muck should go home—it should be possible to permit that for an artist past the age of military service—and lead a military band on the firing line, as Toscanini has been doing, he would be entitled to the world's respect as a man who was doing his bit for his own country. If he stays here and leads the anthem of his enemies he will be under suspicion as a man whose loyalty to his Kaiser is not proof against the seduction of a good salary. To have our national anthem led by an alien enemy, who has sneered at it, will create an atmosphere of insincerity which will not act favorably on the future of the Boston orchestra. There are American conductors to be found, and although the beautiful finish of this orchestra might suffer under the change, none of these leaders could devise more stupid programs than Dr. Muck frequently contrived. That is not war criticism. It has been made many times in the notices of the concerts in The Eagle and other journals and by correspondents of this paper. Whatever the orchestra might suffer through the loss of Dr. Muck would be made up by a good program maker and by popular respect for a leader who played "The Star-Spangled Banner" from choice and not by compulsion.

Patriotism will play far greater havoc with the opera season than it need to do with the Boston Symphony concerts. No operas will be sung in the German language, which will bar Wagner, whose works have furnished about one-third of the repertory and at least half the enthusiasm of other seasons. That trouble might be obviated if the singers knew English texts for these works. Then Wagner could be given in New York in English just as Shakespeare is given in Berlin in German. It would be a toss up as to which master suffered the more by translation. There is a competent English text for "Tristan and Isolde" and there are hopes that Olive Fremstad may be able to learn that text in time to save that mighty work. Also, Mr. Savage gave "Parsifal" acceptably in English, and that ought to be possible at the Metropolitan. If war should drive us into a real respect and liking for our own tongue in opera, it would do more for art than any injury it inflicts through barring enemy aliens from our stages.

HERALD
New York City

Baltimore Forbids Concert by Dr. Muck and Orchestra

Police Board Informs Theatre That Entertainment Will Not Be Permitted—Leader of Opposition Says German Director Would "Never Have Reached Playhouse."

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BALTIMORE, Md., Monday.—Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not be permitted to appear in a concert in Baltimore on Wednesday night. Following the wave of indignation in Baltimore as a result of Dr. Muck's failure to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Boston, the Police Board to-day, acting on the suggestion of the Grand Jury, decided not to permit the concert, and the manager of the Lyric was so informed.

Opposition to Dr. Muck was championed by Mr. Warfield, formerly Governor, who had arranged a big meeting for to-morrow afternoon to perfect arrangements for preventing Dr. Muck from conducting the orchestra. The meeting will be held despite the action of the Police Board. Mr. Warfield said to-night:—

"The action of the Police Board follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Dr. Muck and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the Board had acted or not Dr. Muck would never have conducted the concert in Baltimore. He never would have reached the theatre and he will never conduct another concert here.

"We never had any objection to the orchestra and we would have been willing for the concert to have taken place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said:—'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic programme."

Musical devotees are not in accord with the decision of the Police Board. They contend that some distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

At a meeting of the School Board this afternoon it was decided to eliminate German from the curriculum of the Polytechnic Institute and to substitute the teaching of French. There was a split vote, but when the decision was reached Colonel Clarence Deems, one of the commissioners, remarked:—

"Thank God, Americans are still in control of the Star Spangled Banner city, and not the Dutch."

German will be dropped in the first year classes at "Poly," but those in the higher grades will be permitted to continue the study in order to give them an opportunity to make passing marks as required by graduation.

Union Musicians Here Are Only Passively Interested.

Members of the musicians unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor are more than passively interested in the troubles of Dr. Karl Muck, who, they say, conducts one of the few non-union classical orchestras in the country. C. C. Halle, financial secretary of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, the musicians' local, said last night that probably no action would be taken by the union if Dr. Muck plays here Thursday.

Mr. Halle said that all of the New York operatic and concert orchestras were unionized, but that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had not been. He said several members of the local union had been expelled for joining it and that some had been fined when they returned to the union fold.

It was said yesterday at Carnegie Hall that no change had been made in the Boston Symphony engagements here. Dr. Muck and the orchestra are to play in Carnegie Hall Thursday night and Saturday afternoon.

Head of Federation of Musicians Criticises Dr. Muck.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—Dr. Karl Muck was criticised to-day in a letter by J. N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to Mayor Curley.

"The American Federaation of Musicians," says Mr. Weber, "feels it is its duty to take notice of your patriotic action in insisting that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The position taken by Dr. Muck is, in the opinion of the 85,000 musicians belonging to the American Federation, untenable, as the national anthem expresses love of country, respect for our flag, as well as true patriotism, and thereby gives to any programme a distinction far outweighing in nobility of sentiment and descriptive powers any number ever composed during all times by any composer, no atter homw illustrious he may be."

DENIES EXEMPTION CLAIM.

Judge Mayer Rules on Court's Limitations in Considering Such Matters.

Judge Julius M. Mayer, in the United States Court, yesterday made a decision which may affect other cases where exemption from military service is claimed because of alien citizenship. He dismissed a writ of habeas corpus obtained for Joseph Koopowitz or Jacob Koopowitz, a Russian, who made no exemption claim when drafted. In his opinion Judge Mayer said:—"Those who claim exemption shall affirmatively present their claim. It is quite plain that Congress had in mind that some of those exempted by the act might not claim exemption and might be willing to serve in accordance with the draft. It is, of course, not strange that some who would have been entitled to claim exemption have failed to claim exemption, but the remedy, if any, in such case, does not lie with the courts."

HERALD
New York City

Dr. Muck Again Leads Anthem

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday.—Led by Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra again played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the close of its concert to-night. Dr. Muck, who was applauded at the end of the anthem, turned to the audience, bowed and retired.

His resignation, which was placed in the hands of Major Henry L. Higginson yesterday, has not been accepted. Pending an investigation said to have been started by the federal authorities, no action will be taken by Major Higginson. He is satisfied that nothing will be discovered detrimental to Dr. Muck, and he hopes to keep the German leader at the head of the orchestra.

The orchestra will leave Boston to-morrow night for Philadelphia, where a concert will be given on Monday.

EVENING WORLD
ess: New York City.
NOV 6 1917.

CONCERT BY DR. MUCK FORBIDDEN IN BALTIMORE

Police Feared Riot if Boston Symphony Were Alowed to Play There.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore have sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the Grand Jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass-meeting to-night at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Higginson Too Busy to Comment on Baltimore's Action.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when informed today of the action of the Baltimore police, said he was too busy to comment on it.

EVENING JOURNAL
ddress: New York.
ate

Boston Symphony to Play in Philadelphia

Boston, Nov. 5.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to-day in Philadelphia, where it will give a concert this evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, probably will be at the concert.

SUN
New York City.
NOV 6 - 1917

BALTIMORE BANS DR. MUCK CONCERT

Grand Jury Fears Riot and Police Board Orders Lyric Theatre Closed.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action was taken on the recommendation of the Grand Jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting to-morrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck in relation to playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the Grand Jury to former Governor Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest which Mr. Warfield has organized for to-morrow.

PHILADELPHIA CORDIAL.

Audience of 3,000 Applauds Dr. Muck at Concert.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Dr. Karl Muck played the national anthem of the United States as the prelude to the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in the Academy of Music. When the conductor appeared he was greeted by the spontaneous applause of 3,000 persons who attended. Only one parquet box was vacant, and his reception following the playing of the Beethoven Fifth Symphony and remaining numbers was cordial in the extreme. The conductor after his recall at the close of the symphony had the musicians rise and acknowledge the handclapping.

Dr. Muck evaded interviews, remaining in his dressing room until late and leaving later with Dr. Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. There was no evidence of indignation here.

W. H. Brennan, assistant business manager, said the Baltimore concert had been cancelled, but declined to comment further on the stand taken by Major Henry L. Higginson or Dr. Muck on "The Star Spangled Banner" question. Mr. Brennan said they would probably return from the Washington engagement to-morrow night direct to New York to give concerts there.

om HERALD
ddress: New York City
ite

No German Opera.

With true Teutonic diplomacy, Dr. Karl Muck, of Darmstadt, Germany, erstwhile conductor of Boston's revered Symphony Orchestra, exclaimed:—"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult." Whereupon Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, said:—"Play it or lose the license of Symphony Hall." And Dr. Muck played it and then placed his resignation in the hands of Henry L. Higginson, the orchestra's backer, who says that to lose the Doctor would be a disaster.

Patriotic indignation over this incident seemed to crystallize the rapidly growing sentiment against German opera at the Metropolitan and no doubt led to the directors' decision to exclude German opera from the repertoire. That they acted wisely most persons will agree. Music by dead German masters now passes unchallenged on nearly every concert programme, but German words spoken or sung by Germans on the opera stage is another matter.

It is all right to talk about art having no country, but there are some millions of Americans who cannot forget what Germany did for the art of Louvain and Rheims and need no reminder from the Metropolitan Opera House.

PUBLIC Ledger
ress: PHILADELPHIA, PA.
te NOV 5 - 1917

96

COMMENT ON BOSTON INTELLECTUALS' VIEW OF DR. MUCK'S STAND

Writer Asks if Spirit of "Tea Party" Has Quite Disappeared

By SALLIE WISTAR

WHAT is the matter with intellectual Boston? Has the spirit that expressed itself in the "Boston Tea Party" quite disappeared, drowned in German music? Has love of harmony quite obliterated in its musical ranks all sense of national dignity and propriety?

Such were the questions which I asked myself on Saturday morning when I read in the daily papers that the intellectuals assembled at the Boston Symphony concert on Friday afternoon actually rose and stood on its feet and actually accorded an ovation to Doctor Muck, Koeniglicher Preussrischer general-musikdirektor, who—after pressure had been put upon him—had consented to play the "Star Spangled Banner"! Please remember that Doctor Muck, besides having demurred at playing our national anthem, is generally considered, rightly or wrongly—let us hope wrongly—to be suspiciously antagonistic to the land of his employment.

While one cannot wonder at a German being a German nor blame him for loving his Fatherland, it seems to me that a Germanizing German at such a time as this is scarcely the man whom decently intelligent Americans should select for the object of "a great ovation." One might accept his apology for having objected to playing the national anthem in time of war—although even this, to my mind, would be stretching a point, for it is not so much making the national feeling subsidiary to musical nicety—or patriotism secondary to art—but it is the bare fact that Doctor Muck has shown himself none of us. And in war times one does not care to harbor and support one's declared enemies in one's midst—let alone make heroes of them.

Try as I may, I cannot get out of my mind's eye that great audience of Bostonians—of descendants of the good patriots who helped to make this nation, of the grandchildren of the men who thought themselves the hub of the universe, and had cause for their consciousness of intellectual superiority, if ever any man can be said to have cause for foolish vanity—actually standing up before a musical director who had just revealed his lack of sympathy with what should be the most sacred feelings of our people.

I trust that his Philadelphia audience this evening will remember that it is the custodian for the American nation of Independence Hall, the cradle of the best Americanism, and of its voice, the old Liberty Bell, sadly cracked, I feel today; and that it will receive Doctor Muck with the decorous silence which alone is the possible way for Americans of good breeding to show their loyalty to their flag and their attitude toward those who would, in time of war, belittle its dignity by making it second to any consideration whatsoever.

VERILY, this is no time for the prettinesses of life. Important as they are in times of peace, today we need sterner values. Those whose soul cannot rise to the heroic sacrifices demanded of them should fall to the rear. They cumber the way and have no place in the front ranks of the nation in the hour of its supreme ordeal. The poet will not be read unless he strike the virile note of power. The painter will find no comprehension unless his brush can trace heroic deeds. The American spirit, sluggish though it has been, is now slowly awakening. When it thunders forth in its great flight to action it will brush aside all that is not real, noble and strong. It will scorn the men and the women who find it in their hearts to rise and crown with their highest emotional approval a man who, great artist as he undoubtedly is, represents a nation which seems to have lost its humanity at the moment when our boys, the very pick of our race, are about to grapple with it in mortal combat and die for their—our flag.

POST

ess: Washington, D. C.

NOV 1 1917

CONCERTS AND RECITALS

The first of the series of five concerts given annual by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington will take place in the New National Theater Tuesday afternoon, at 4:30. The orchestra returns after its seven months' absence, with exactly the same personnel as that which appeared here at its last concert in March. Dr. Muck, naturally, is the conductor. This is the first time in the history of the organization that the same personnel has been maintained from one season to another.

The program which Dr. Muck has arranged for the first concert is one of unusual attraction and brilliancy. The symphony which heads the list of works to be performed is Tschaikowsky's Fourth in F-minor. The other three numbers on the program will be the immortal "Egmont" overture of Beethoven; the brillian Roumanian rhapsody in A-minor of Enesco and the "Tannhauser" overture of Wagner.

TIMES

ss: Washington, D. C.

NOV 3 1917

BOSTON CONCERT HERE WILL GIVE NATIONAL HYMN

"The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in the National Theater here Tuesday afternoon.

Word was received from Boston today that the orchestra will play the national anthem at all of its concerts.

Announcement that "The Star-Spangled Banner" would be played by the orchestra here greatly relieved the minds of a number of prominent Washingtonians, who were much wrought up over the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the German conductor of the orchestra, to have anything to do with it.

From the best information available today, it is understood that Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who is sponsor for the orchestra, has not yet accepted the resignation of Dr. Muck as leader. Dr. Muck laid down his baton and resigned yesterday after playing the national anthem at athe Boston concert.

It is apparent that there is no intention to disband the famous organization, and that it will play out its scheduled winter tour.

Department of Justice agents are investigating the case of Dr. Muck. If he is found to be actually an enemy of the United States he will be interned, officials of the department said today. The fact that Dr. Muck directed the playing of the National Anthem yesterday has not halted the investigation. But if it proves that his action really was the result of artistic rather than disloyal motives, no further move will be made by the Department of Justice.

POST

ess: Washington, D. C.

NOV 3 1917

MUCK RENDERS ANTHEM

His Resignation Announced; Not Yet Accepted.

DEPORT HIM, SAYS ROOSEVELT

Col. Higginson Declares Retirment of Boston Symphony Director Would Be a Disaster—Steps Taken in New York to Halt Concert Unless Anthem Was on Program.

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star-Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concere here today.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

Demonstration Follows Anthem.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience today Maj. Higginson said that Mr. Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage, and when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was rendered at the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony Hall officials said the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

Steps Taken in New York.

New York, Nov. 2.—Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

Denounced by Roosevelt.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt this afternoon expressed himself concerning the refusal of Dr. Muck to permit the Boston Symphony orchestra toplay "The Star-Spangled Banner."

"Muck ought not be allowed at large in the country," the Colonel declared. "I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground that it is an artistic, not a patriotic work."

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

NOV 3 1917

Doctor Muck Resigns; Plays U. S. Anthem

German Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Quits Organization for Kaiser—May Be Interned as Enemy Alien.

Boston, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" this afternoon. Then he laid down his baton and resigned.

PROMINENT MUSICIAN.

The world-famous musician, former leader of the Royal Opera House at Berlin and successor of Nikisch as leader of America's greatest musical organization, laid aside his artistic scruples for a moment to play the national anthem of America. As a subject of the Kaiser his course had been predetermined.

Boston Is Aflame.

He would conduct the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" once, and then leave the orchestra forever. He would participate in the playing of an "enemy anthem," in recognition of the many honors he has received in the United States. That was the course he decided upon, and he carried it through.

Boston is aflame with excitement tonight, asking whether his resignation will be accepted. The aristocratic musical element of the city are firm for insisting that Dr. Muck remain as conductor and ridicule the idea he should be treated as an "enemy alien," possibly subject to internment.

At the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra in this city, Symphony Hall was filled with a huge audience. In each program was a printed sheet, reading: "The Star Spangled Banner will be played as the closing number."

KARL MUCK RESIGNS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE.

Asked Them to Play.

The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage and said:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled

POST

Washington, D. C.

NOV 4 1917

Denies Refusal to Play Anthem.

The following telegram was received yesterday by the manager of the Boston symphony concerts in this city in response to an inquiry:

"Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.

"Katie Wilson Greene, 2601 Connecticut avenue, Washington, D. C.:

"Dr. Muck and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were asked by Maj. Higginson to play the national anthem at the concert in Symphony Hall, Boston, yesterday.

"They performed it as the closing number of the program and will do the same in Washington and elsewhere. They never refused to play it, all newspaper statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

"C. A. ELLIS, Manager."

STAR

s: Baltimore, Md.

MUSIC AND PATRIOTISM

No matter how the musical world may feel on the question of just how artistically appropriate it might be for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, a German, to inject the Star-spangled Banner at a performance, there can be but one answer from patriotic America at a time like the present. The refusal of the orchestra to play the national anthem at request of a responsible group of persons, the declaration of Dr. Muck that it will not play the patriotic piece at its New York concert, and the declaration of its financial backer, Major Higginson, who received part of his musical education in four years' study in Vienna, that "if the public goes too far," the orchestra will be disorganized and the Boston Symphony Hall in Boston sold, is worthy of more than passing attention. Dr. Muck came to America "with the Kaiser's imperial consent," and remained here under a second and thifd such leaves of absence from Germany. In refusing to give the Star-spangled Banner on direct request, under such history, he is, in our opinion, playing with fire. A patriotic nation is being aroused to meet great sacrifices in order to defeat Kaiserdom, and when the casualty lists pour in the people will look at the red of their glorious banner as symbolic of the blood that is shed to bring it triumph. We have faith in the patriotism of Boston men and women in the face of the threat of the financial backer of the orchestra that he will withdraw financial support before he allows this German-directed group to play the national anthem under pressure. We believe that the spirit of Lexington still lives, that even artistic desires can be put behind the shadow of Bunker Hill, and that the people of Boston will tell Major Higginson that, if he "goes to far," they will gladly assist him in sending his Symphony Hall to Hades along with the spirit of Hohenzollernism.

m SUN

lress: Baltimore, Md.

- 101

One Whose Patriotism Is Not To Be Questioned Upholds Dr. Muck.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I beg to say a few words concerning Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem in connection with the concert of his orchestra at Providence. In the beginning, I assert that no one can doubt my individual attitude in this war; if any reader of THE SUN wishes the evidence I shall be glad to furnish what I regard as such.

I think Dr. Muck was right in his refusal and I regret that Mr. Higginson has yielded to what he must have felt was convincing argument. I see no reason why the national anthem should be played at the end of church services or of concerts. Surely, the anthem as such has no part either in worship or in the effect which music produces in us.

What is the purpose of insisting upon the public playing of this anthem in churches and elsewhere? I do not know. It cannot be to test the so-called patriotism of the priest, the organist or the orchestra; nor does it prove anything in regard to the congregation or audience. It must be, I suppose, in order to produce some effect upon the latter. I sincerely doubt if this desired end is accomplished. The spirit in which one goes to a church service, and the spirit with which he is prepared to leave at the end of the service, is not such as to be intensified by this anthem; rather the contrary. The same thing is true in regard to such concerts as those in question. I maintain that the spirit felt in church service and that felt in listening to a fine concert are infinitely more valuable to us all at this time than any effect produced by listening to the national anthem.

I earnestly suggest that those people who are insisting so strongly upon the floating of our flag and the playing of our anthem should recognize the fact that there are other sides to our minds —most important sides—which are not stimulated by the emotions stirred by seeing our flag and hearing our anthem.

JOSEPH S. AMES.

Baltimore, Nov. 3.

SUN
Baltimore, Md.
- 1917

SOLDIERS OPPOSE MUCK

Detachment From Meade To Attend Protest Meeting At Lyric.

CAMP BAND TO GIVE CONCERT

Patriotic Gathering Tomorrow To Attract Great Crowd — Threats Against Boston Orchestra Leader

The indignation of Baltimore citizens over the attempt to force Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the Baltimore public at the concert scheduled here for Wednesday night, has spread to the National Army boys from this city training at Camp Meade.

Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn, commander at the camp, has decided to give an outlet for this indignation by sending to Baltimore for the patriotic massmeeting to be held at the Lyric at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Camp Meade Band and half a hundred Baltimore boys who are getting ready to fight for the flag which Dr. Muck insulted by refusing to play the national anthem.

General Kuhn notified former Gov. Edwin Warfield, who is leading in Baltimore's protest, to this effect yesterday. The band, composed entirely of Baltimore and Maryland soldiers selected for the National Army, will give a patriotic concert on the plaza in front of the Lyric an hour before the meeting. The escort of honor, composed of Baltimore soldiers training at Camp Meade, may drill on the plaza to show Baltimoreans how quickly they are learning the war game under General Kuhn.

Other Responses Received.

The response from Camp Meade was only one of the many enthusiastic indorsements which Governor Warfield received yesterday. The meeting promises to attract an even bigger crowd than at first expected and an overflow gathering will probably have to be arranged. There will be other bands on hand—which won't refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," Governor Warfield remarked—and these will play both inside and outside of the theatre.

Marshal of Police Robert D. Carter stated yesterday afternoon that he is absolutely opposed to the concert if Dr. Muck is going to lead it here. The Marshal said he has received in the last two days several anonymous postal cards and letters making dire threats against Dr. Muck, the orchestra and the Lyric in the event Major Higginson doesn't see fit to withdraw the German director before Wednesday. The Marshal added that he is going to attend tomorrow's patriotic massmeeting, and if the sentiment expressed there indicates that there is going to be trouble at the Lyric Wednesday night in the event of Dr. Muck daring to appear steps to stop the concert will have to be taken.

No Police Permit Necessary.

Gen. Lawrason Riggs, president of the Police Board, pointed out that no permit for the concert is necessary, as the Lyric is a theatre licensed for such performances. The only thing the Police Board can do, said General Riggs, is to await developments, and if the board is convinced that public sentiment is such that public order would be jeopardized by the appearance of Muck the concert will have to be stopped.

With all of these developments there appeared but little chance that a concert will be given, or, if there is, that Dr. Muck will lead in Baltimore. But, whether there is a concert or not, and whether Dr. Muck's resignation is finally accepted by Major Higginson before Wednesday, Baltimore's patriotic massmeeting will be held just the same. As ex-Governor Warfield pointed out, it will afford an excellent chance for this city to place itself on record, not only against such insults as that offered by Muck, but against all of the Muck ilk who may attempt to follow his footsteps. It will be, too, a chance for the reaffirmation of allegiance to the flag and country by Baltimoreans—an opportunity to renew the vows of patriotism by which every American is bound to support the flag he loves.

Ample provision will be made for overflow meetings if the Lyric is overcrowded. There will be no reserved seats in the hall and no program of speechmaking. Everybody is going to say just what he or she thinks; there will undoubtedly be a lot of cheering; there will be music, and there is little doubt that Baltimoreans who leave the hall won't feel at all kindly toward Karl Muck or any other German who flaunts his Prussianism in the face of an American public.

Troops Great Feature.

The Camp Meade boys, of course, will be a great feature, and will form a supplement to the patriotic impulses of Baltimoreans as an attraction to the meeting of thousands of mothers and fathers of the Baltimore boys at camp who may see their own sons on parade in their home city. It will be the second official appearance of Camp Meade soldiers in Baltimore, the first having been in the Liberty Loan parade.

Practically every patriotic society in the city, entire memberships of some will be present and will be heard from on the platform. Governor Warfield will call the meeting to order and will introduce the speakers.

Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson has been asked by Governor Warfield to assist with the musical program, and is anxious for all Baltimore singers to report to him on the stage at 2 o'clock or earlier.

His Attitude To Be Denounced At Massmeeting

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.
ess:

WILL PROTEST AGAINST MUCK

ALL READY FOR THE BIG MASS-MEETING IN LYRIC.

GREAT CROWD IS EXPECTED

Plans for Demonstration Tomorrow Afternoon Have Practically Been Completed—Every Man, Woman and Child In Baltimore Is Invited. Resolution Condemning Muck Will Be Adopted—Conductor Engages Hotel Rooms.

"REMEMBER 1774!"--WARFIELD

Former Governor Warfield said last night:

"From over the hills of Anne Arundel county, Prince Georges county and others the Maryland patriots trooped to Annapolis in 1774. They were led by Dr. Charles Alexander Warfield. They were not content with an apology for the presence of the Peggy Stewart, laden with her tea, in Annapolis harbor. They burned the Peggy Stewart. Dr. Muck's tardy playing of The Star-spangled Banner does not satisfy us. Dr. Muck does not satisfy us. He must not lead an orchestra in Baltimore. Remember 1774!"

A band from Camp Meade, with a guard of honor composed of 150 of Baltimore drafted boys, will participate.

The objects of this meeting are clearly defined. They are to reaffirm the allegiance of the people of Baltimore to the country, its flag and anthem and to protest against the insults to The Star-spangled Banner by Dr. Karl Muck, of Germany.

Every man, woman and child in Baltimore is invited to the meeting. The exercises will be thoroughly interesting, first to last. Former Governor Warfield will call the meeting to order. Presidents of the various patriotic societies and others will be called upon for brief addresses. In their remarks it is certain the Kaiser's favorite musician, who permitted the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play The Star

om SUN
dress: Baltimore, Md.
te NOV 5 - 1917

98

Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson Says Muck Should Be Sent To Prussia Or Interned—And He Offers To Lead The Audience Next Wednesday Night In Singing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The indications, for the present moment, seem to point to the fact that if the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays in Baltimore on Wednesday next, with or without the man who has tendered his resignation, that our national anthem will be played. Would that all our victories might be achieved with as little bloodshed!

Karl Muck's disappearance from the conductor's desk will not be an occasion for sorrow. His programs for several years have left much to be desired, and it has been generally acknowledged that at least one orchestral conductor who visits the city each season is his superior from many points of view. I have continued to be an annual subscriber, under protest on the part of my family, more from reasons of sentiment than because of the one-time joy I received from the orchestra's performances.

So let the "loyal citizen of Prussia" return at once to his fatherland, or be placed in an alien zone, where he belongs.

It may not be generally known, indeed I am sure it is not, that the music used in connection with "The Star-Spangled Banner" is an old German college song. The range of the song is so great that it cannot be sung comfortably by the average singers. For this reason, and because of its origin, I propose to ask Congressman Linthicum to introduce a bill in the coming Congress appropriating a suitable sum of money for a competition among American-born composers to the end that we may have a suitable setting for our glorious, inspired national poem—and this to be one step further in divorcing ourselves from the unspeakable Hun!

Until we do get another appropriate and Americanized setting the present one should be sung at every public gathering of every description, at least during the term of the present war. I shall be glad to lead the audience next Wednesday night in singing "The Star-Spangled Banner," in the event of the concert being given, and I should hope the tone would be of sufficient volume to be readily heard in Berlin!

B. MERRILL HOPKINSON, M. D.
Baltimore, Nov. 3.

Let Us Hooverize On Hun Music.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: "The Star-Spangled Banner' has no place in a symphony" smacks of musical Kaiserism, of the sublimated egotism of musical kultur. The hymn of the nation is the nation's vocal flag: the flag is America, and if there is no place in the symphony for America there should be no place in America for the symphony.

Without music, sans patriotism, some one says "we should go mad." Men have gone to madness—to death—to no music at all, or to both with that song on their lips: the holy lyric of a soul timed to shot and shell, but sublimer than all the orchestrated mechanism of Muck & Co.

Everyone is expected to sacrifice something for the war, and if we cannot have music, except by aiding our enemies through the salaries of her loyal citizens, then let us Hooverize on music.

A LOVER OF AMERICA AND MUSIC.
Baltimore county, Maryland, Nov. 3.

STAR

ress: Baltimore, Md.

1917

HOPKINSON DEMANDS ANTHEM BE PLAYED

Boston Symphony Action Challenged By Baltimore Dentist and Singer.

CALLS THE BAND ENEMY ALIENS

Harold Randolph, of Peabody, Sorry Question Is Forced to Issue.

Wrath in this city against the powers that be of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not only growing, but in some quarters already has grown, because of the organization's refusal to play The Star-spangled Banner and of the contentions with which it is trying to uphold its position.

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody, issued a statement today in which he said:

"I am extremely sorry the question should ever have been forced to an issue, and do not quite see why it should have been."

One of these contentions was that the request which was made of the orchestra in Providence, R. I., on Tuesday was ignored because it was not made by subscribers.

Promptly challenging the management of the orchestra on this point, Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, a leading Baltimore barytone and dentist, has written a strong letter to C. A. Ellis, the manager, in which he says:

"As a long-time subscriber I make the request that you have The Star-spangled Banner played at the close of the concert next Wednesday night. If the men who compose the orchestra and its conductor refuse to do this it will be an easy matter to classify them; the organization should be disbanded and the money of the subscribers refunded."

Band of Enemy Aliens.

When The Star asked his further views today Dr. Hopkinson said:

"This letter was written in a dispassionate attitude, with the intention to indicate that the orchestra had missed an opportunity to do a decent and sensible thing.

"My feelings today, after reading Dr. Muck's statement in the newspapers (which I assume to be correct)— that "Art is greater than any national considerations"—are that there should be started at once in this city a movement to prohibit the appearance in this city of Dr. Muck—"a loyal citizen of Prussia"—and his band of enemy aliens.

"It has always been a mystery to me that they restrict the movements in this country of some Germans, some of whom are doubtless innocent and others of whom have not sufficient intelligence to do evil, and permit this band to travel through the country—the conductor and owner of which have, now, certainly proven themselves unfriendly, to say the least, by refusing to play our national anthem.

"Is there not some way by which the patriotic authorities of this city could combine and prohibit the appearance of this orchestra in the event of its continued refusal to comply with this request?

"I have talked with many of Baltimore's subscribers of the orchestra and they say they are sorry they bought their tickets and wish they had their money back.

"My real feelings when I wrote the letter to Mr. Ellis were that I would like to head a group of enthusiastic, patriotic citizens, who would either compel the 'loyal citizen of Prussia' and his band to play our national anthem or else drive them out of the country."

Randolph's Statement.

Mr. Randolph, in his prepared statement sent out today through the Peabody Publicity Bureau, which is directed by Frederick R. Huber, followed requests from some newspapers for interviews on the subject which were not granted at the time. The statement is as follows:

"I am extremely sorry the question should ever have been forced to an issue, and do not quite see why it need have been.

"Dr. Muck's position has been quite unequivocal from the first, and quite definitely understood. He is an ardent German patriot and, therefore, an 'adien enemy.' If it is maintained that, in view of this, he should not remain as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that, at least, is a logical argument with which few would disagree. Certainly, if he should be guilty of any treasonable act, he should not only be put out of that position, but interned at once. So long, however, as our government prefers no charge against him, we have only left the alternative of staying away from his con- if we wish to emphasize our

99

"As to The Star-spangled Banner, it may certainly be fairly argued that it has no place in a symphony concert. Assuredly, it should not become an invariable feature of such programs. If at a symphony concert, why not at any and every concert or recital? I for one, passionately patriotic as I am, would deeply deplore having it dragged into every musical affair.

"We are all now turning more and more eagerly toward music as the one respite from the torturing thoughts of war. For God's sake, let us try and preserve to ourselves this haven of refuge or we shall go mad!"

Aliens' Freedom Strange.

Dr. Richard H. Peters, of Baltimore, founder and conductor of the South Atlantic States Music Festival about 25 years ago, as well as former head of the music department of Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., said:

"It always has been inexplicable to me why so much freedom was shown enemy aliens here with the country at war. If Americans were in Germany at the present time, do you suppose they would be allowed to do the same as the Germans do here? England made the same mistake of over-leniency at the beginning of the war. It led to revolt of her people and changed methods."

rom SUN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 1 - 19

Date

TO RESENT MUCK'S SLUR

Patriots' Meeting To Protest Boston Orchestra Leader's Action.

CONSIDERED INSULT TO FLAG

Enemy-Alien Musician's Refusal To Play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Arouses Great Indignation.

DR. MUCK TO LEAD ORCHESTRA HERE WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things—first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and other German music from the programs of the symphony, as the Metropolitan has done.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck will insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music.

Whether Dr. Karl Muck or some other musician whose patriotism is less questionable holds the baton at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for the Lyric Wednesday night Baltimore is going to give no uncertain voice to her indignation over Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and his slurring of the American national anthem.

Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, who has taken the lead in giving voice to the protest of the city wherein the national anthem was given birth, announced yesterday that the patriotic massmeeting which he suggested before the German orchestra leader tendered his resignation is going to be held whether that resignation is accepted or not. The meeting will be held at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, at the Lyric. It is going to be an "afternoon of patriotism," said Governor Warfield, and every red-blooded American in Baltimore who feels the slur cast by an enemy alien on the song which honors the flag and which Americans honor, is invited to be present.

It is goir- to be a chance, said the former Governor, for Baltimoreans to reaffirm their patriotism, to renew their allegiance to the flag which inspired a Baltimorean to write America's national anthem at a time when the city was under fire from enemy guns. It is, too, he said, going to be a chance for the Baltimore men and women who have sons, husbands, br thers, preparing to give their lives for that flag "over there," to "send the word" that the folks back home aren't going to sit idly by while a German, no matter how great an artist, insults that flag by slurring the one song in which all Americans join to honor it. "'The Star-Spangled Banner' was born in B 'timore," said Governor Warfield, "and it is up to Baltimore to take the lead in a patriotic protest against any man who insults it and, through it, the flag."

(Sun continued)

No Set Speeches.

There are going to be no reserved seats, no special boxes or platform chairs at the Lyric meeting. The hall is going to be turned over to Americans who love their flag and their country. There are going to be no set speeches, for it is expected that those who talk will be inspired by the expression of patriotism and Americanism which the meeting will represent. Governor Warfield, as the leader in Baltimore's protest, will call the meeting to order. Representatives, in some instances almost entire memberships, of local patriotic societies have already indicated to the former Governor that they are going to be present and are going to let the people of the country and Dr. Muck and those who may stand with him know how they feel about it.

There is going to be little attempt to guide or give formal lines to the expression of patriotism and to the renewal of allegiance to the flag by American citizens. Governor Warfield remarked that true expression of patriotism knows no formal lines and needs no guide, and, as it is planned to make the Lyric meeting Tuesday afternoon one of the most rousing patriotic demonstrations ever held here, program makers will be "hands off."

In the event that the unexpected—and now highly improbable—happens, and Dr. Muck dares to stick to the schedule which provides for him to face a Baltimore audience Wednesday, and the police permit the concert, with Muck as the leader, the stand which the citizens of Baltimore are going to take Tuesday will certainly, it is felt, prove to Major Higginson and other backers of the orchestra that Americans aren't going to stand for Muck, and the concert will most probably be called off at the last minute.

Might Be Serious Thing.

Governor Warfield stated Friday, after he had appealed to the Board of Police Commissioners to deny a permit for the concert if Muck continued as leader, that after the Locust Point fire "the people of Baltimore are in no temper to think calmly," and he felt that a concert under an un-American leader "might be a very serious thing."

Governor Warfield reiterated yesterday that he, and those patriotic Baltimoreans with whom he has spoken on the matter, have no feeling or animosity against the individual musicians, all of whom may be highly patriotic. There has been no evidence, or even hint, that their sentiments are of the Muck variety and, until and unless such evidence is produced, there should be no criticism of the individual musicians. If, however, said Governor Warfield, the orchestra as an organization continues in an unpatriotic and really seditious stand, the people of America, and of Baltimore in particular, should voice their protest in no uncertain terms.

J. B. Noel Wyatt, the Baltimore architect, who has been a box holder at the Boston Symphony concerts for 10 years, but who withdrew his subscription early this year because he had heard of Muck's un-American sentiments, yesterday wrote a letter to C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Boston organization, stating that he could not even listen to a concert by the Bostonians now while Dr. Muck continued as leader.

Mr. Wyatt's Letter.

Mr. Wyatt's letter in part follows:

"Dear Sir: The writer has always been an ardent admirer of the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its national value to the musician, the student and the amateur public, and he has subscribed to a box at the Lyric for the last 10 or more seasons of the symphony concerts in Baltimore.

"Of late, however, the compilation of the programs has produced very general adverse comment and the frequent discourteous attitude of the leader also toward his audience has been noticeably unpleasant. In addition to this, having heard from very reliable authority of the discourteous and insulting attitude of the leader for sometime past and his openly expressed opinions in regard to America, the writer decided that he would no longer obtain the same benefit or pleasure from the concerts of the Boston orchestra and, therefore, declined to renew the subscription this year to his box as usual.

"He feels entirely justified in this action by the recent extraordinary conditions that have arisen in regard to the national anthem and the attitude of Dr. Muck and Mr. Higginson seems entirely unjustifiable and illogical, for under present circumstances it seems absurd to them to consider the patriotic introduction of the national anthem on such occasions as forming part of any musical program, artistic or otherwise.

BULLETIN

om

ddress: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

ate OCT 30 1917

ASK THAT ORCHESTRA PLAY "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

Ten Local Organizations Telegraph Symphony Manager.

A joint telegram from nine local societies, many of them prominent in musical circles, and a similar wire from Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the State Liberty Loan committee, were sent this morning to C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall.

The joint message was as follows:

"The undersigned earnestly request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening, Oct. 30, at Infantry Hall:

"MRS. EMMA WINSLOW CHILDS, President Chopin Club.

"MRS. HAROLD J. GROSS, President Monday Morning Club.

"MRS. GEORGE S. MATTHEWS, Vice President MacDowell Club, and chairman of the music committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.

"MISS MARY S. WINSOR, President Schubert Club.

MISS VIRGINIA BOYD ANDERSON presiding officer, Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. GEORGE HAIL, President Northeastern District National Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. JAMES E. McCONNELL, President the Chaminade Club.

"MRS. GILBERT C. CARPENTER First Vice President the Chaminade Club."

Mr. West's telegram read: "The Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island requests that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert to be given in Providence to-night."

NEWS.

Providence, R. I.

OCT 27 1917

GERALDINE FARRAR OPENS ELLIS CONCERT SERIES

Next Tuesday evening, October 30th, brings in Infantry Hall the first of the five subscription concerts arranged for Providence by Charles A. Ellis of Boston. This concert will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck and the soloist will be Geraldine Farrar, whose only appearance in Providence it will be, for the following Monday Miss Farrar begins her work with the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York and there she will be with the company until the end of the season in April.

The program arranged for this concert is one of unusual attractiveness. The Symphony will be the Fourth of Tschaikowsky. During the past few years there has been a gradual change of opinion regarding Tschaikowsky's symphonies. For a long time the sixth, or "Pathetic" was practically the only one played and its drawing power with the public was equal to that of Wagner's music. Gradually, however, as they became more familiar the fourth and fifth increased in popularity and today it seems to be the general opinion of connoisseurs that Tschaikowsky reached the highest point of his genius in the fourth Symphony in F-Minor. In spirit it is thoroughly Russian which cannot be said of the other symphonies, and, moreover, its scherze, in which the composer has turned the string sections of the Orchestra into, so-to-say, a huge mandolin, is one of the most brilliant pieces of writing in symphonic literature.

The other two orchestral numbers will be the comparatively unknown Symphonic Poem of Liszt entitled "Prometheus" and the ever wonderful "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven. The "Prometheus" is the fifth of the Symphonic Poems with which Liszt practically revolutonized writing for the modern orchestra. It has all the salient characteristcs of the composer. It has the brilliant orchestration, the pomp, circumstance and magniloquence found in all his poems, and, if critics are to be believed, has fewer weak and uninteresting moments than all other compositions of its class. It is one of the curious things in musical history that every now and then some great composition lies neglected for years. Until the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season it had never played the "Prometheus."

Miss Farrar will sing twice. Her first number will be the Entrance aria of Elizabeth in the second act of "Tannhauser," in which the heroine estatically sees her ancestral halls seen in a new light now that Tannhauser is released from the fatal spell of Horselberg.

For her second number she will sing three of the famous songs which Wagner wrote in the '50's while he was a resident of Zurich; the words by that remarkable woman Mathilde Wesendonck. These songs are "Im Treibhaus" (In a Greenhouse); "Schmerzen" (Griefs) and "Traume" (Dreams). The first and third may be regarded as preliminary studies for the third and second acts respectively of "Tristan and Isolde." These will be sung with orchestral accompaniment ress: Baltimore, Md.

STAR

1917

HOPKINSON DEMANDS ANTHEM BE PLAYED

Boston Symphony Action Challenged By Baltimore Dentist and Singer.

CALLS THE BAND ENEMY ALIENS

Harold Randolph, of Peabody, Sorry Question Is Forced to Issue.

Wrath in this city against the powers that be of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not only growing, but in some quarters already has grown, because of the organization's refusal to play The Star-spangled Banner and of the contentions with which it is trying to uphold its position.

Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody, issued a statement today in which he said:

"I am extremely sorry the question should ever have been forced to an issue, and do not quite see why it should have been."

One of these contentions was that the request which was made of the orchestra in Providence, R. I., on Tuesday was ignored because it was not made by subscribers.

Promptly challenging the management of the orchestra on this point, Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, a leading Baltimore barytone and dentist, has written a strong letter to C. A. Ellis, the manager, in which he says:

"As a long-time subscriber I make the request that you have The Star-spangled Banner played at the close of the concert next Wednesday night. If the men who compose the orchestra and its conductor refuse to do this it will be an easy matter to classify them; the organization should be disbanded and the money of the subscribers refunded."

Band of Enemy Aliens.

When The Star asked his further views today Dr. Hopkinson said:

"This letter was written in a dispassionate attitude, with the intention to indicate that the orchestra had missed an opportunity to do a decent and sensible thing.

"My feelings today, after reading Dr. Muck's statement in the newspapers (which I assume to be correct)— that "Art is greater than any national considerations"—are that there should be started at once in this city a movement to prohibit the appearance in this city of Dr. Muck—"a loyal citizen of Prussia"—and his band of enemy aliens.

"It has always been a mystery to me that they restrict the movements in this country of some Germans, some of whom are doubtless innocent and others of whom have not sufficient intelligence to do evil, and permit this band to travel through the country—the conductor and owner of which have, now, certainly proven themselves unfriendly, to say the least, by refusing to play our national anthem.

"Is there not some way by which the patriotic authorities of this city could combine and prohibit the appearance of this orchestra in the event of its continued refusal to comply with this request?

"I have talked with many of Baltimore's subscribers of the orchestra and they say they are sorry they bought their tickets and wish they had their money back.

"My real feelings when I wrote the letter to Mr. Ellis were that I would like to head a group of enthusiastic, patriotic citizens, who would either compel the 'loyal citizen of Prussia' and his band to play our national anthem or else drive them out of the country."

Randolph's Statement.

Mr. Randolph, in his prepared statement sent out today through the Peabody Publicity Bureau, which is directed by Frederick R. Huber, followed requests from some newspapers for interviews on the subject which were not granted at the time. The statement is as follows:

"I am extremely sorry the question should ever have been forced to an issue, and do not quite see why it need have been.

"Dr. Muck's position has been quite unequivocal from the first, and quite definitely understood. He is an ardent German patriot and, therefore, an 'adien enemy.' If it is maintained that, in view of this, he should not remain as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that, at least, is a logical argument with which few would disagree. Certainly, if he should be guilty of any treasonable act, he should not only be put out of that position, but interned at once. So long, however, as our government prefers no charge against him, we have only left the alternative of staying away from his con-

"As to The Star-spangled Banner, it may certainly be fairly argued that it has no place in a symphony concert. Assuredly, it should not become an invariable feature of such programs. If at a symphony concert, why not at any and every concert or recital? I for one, passionately patriotic as I am, would deeply deplore having it dragged into every musical affair.

"We are all now turning more and more eagerly toward music as the one respite from the torturing thoughts of war. For God's sake, let us try and preserve to ourselves this haven of refuge or we shall go mad!"

Aliens' Freedom Strange.

Dr. Richard H. Peters, of Baltimore, founder and conductor of the South Atlantic States Music Festival about 25 years ago, as well as former head of the music department of Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., said:

"It always has been inexplicable to me why so much freedom was shown enemy aliens here with the country at war. If Americans were in Germany at the present time, do you suppose they would be allowed to do the same as the Germans do here? England made the same mistake of over-leniency at the beginning of the war. It led to revolt of her people and changed methods."

rom SUN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

TO RESENT MUCK'S SLUR

Patriots' Meeting To Protest Boston Orchestra Leader's Action.

CONSIDERED INSULT TO FLAG

Enemy-Alien Musician's Refusal To Play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Arouses Great Indignation.

DR. MUCK TO LEAD ORCHESTRA HERE WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things—first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and other German music from the programs of the symphony, as the Metropolitan has done.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck will insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music.

Whether Dr. Karl Muck or some other musician whose patriotism is less questionable holds the baton at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for the Lyric Wednesday night Baltimore is going to give no uncertain voice to her indignation over Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and his slurring of the American national anthem.

Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, who has taken the lead in giving voice to the protest of the city wherein the national anthem was given birth, announced yesterday that the patriotic massmeeting which he suggested before the German orchestra leader tendered his resignation is going to be held whether that resignation is accepted or not. The meeting will be held at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, at the Lyric. It is going to be an "afternoon of patriotism," said Governor Warfield, and every red-blooded American in Baltimore who feels the slur cast by an enemy alien on the song which honors the flag and which Americans honor, is invited to be present.

It is goir- to be a chance, said the former Governor, for Baltimoreans to reaffirm their patriotism, to renew their allegiance to the flag which inspired a Baltimorean to write America's national anthem at a time when the city was under fire from enemy guns. It is, too, he said, going to be a chance for the Baltimore men and women who have sons, husbands, br thers, preparing to give their lives for that flag "over there," to "send the word" that the folks back home aren't going to sit idly by while a German, no matter how great an artist, insults that flag by slurring the one song in which all Americans join to honor it. "'The Star-Spangled Banner' was born in B. timore," said Governor Warfield, "and it is up to Baltimore to take the lead in a patriotic protest against any man who insults it and, through it, the flag."

(Sun continued)

No Set Speeches.

There are going to be no reserved seats, no special boxes or platform chairs at the Lyric meeting. The hall is going to be turned over to Americans who love their flag and their country. There are going to be no set speeches, for it is expected that those who talk will be inspired by the expression of patriotism and Americanism which the meeting will represent. Governor Warfield, as the leader in Baltimore's protest, will call the meeting to order. Representatives, in some instances almost entire memberships, of local patriotic societies have already indicated to the former Governor that they are going to be present and are going to let the people of the country and Dr. Muck and those who may stand with him know how they feel about it.

There is going to be little attempt to guide or give formal lines to the expression of patriotism and to the renewal of allegiance to the flag by American citizens. Governor Warfield remarked that true expression of patriotism knows no formal lines and needs no guide, and, as it is planned to make the Lyric meeting Tuesday afternoon one of the most rousing patriotic demonstrations ever held here, program makers will be "hands off."

In the event that the unexpected—and now highly improbable—happens, and Dr. Muck dares to stick to the schedule which provides for him to face a Baltimore audience Wednesday, and the police permit the concert, with Muck as the leader, the stand which the citizens of Baltimore are going to take Tuesday will certainly, it is felt, prove to Major Higginson and other backers of the orchestra that Americans aren't going to stand for Muck, and the concert will most probably be called off at the last minute.

Might Be Serious Thing.

Governor Warfield stated Friday, after he had appealed to the Board of Police Commissioners to deny a permit for the concert if Muck continued as leader, that after the Locust Point fire "the people of Baltimore are in no temper to think calmly," and he felt that a concert under an un-American leader "might be a very serious thing."

Governor Warfield reiterated yesterday that he, and those patriotic Baltimoreans with whom he has spoken on the matter, have no feeling or animosity against the individual musicians, all of whom may be highly patriotic. There has been no evidence, or even hint, that their sentiments are of the Muck variety and, until and unless such evidence is produced, there should be no criticism of the individual musicians. If, however, said Governor Warfield, the orchestra as an organization continues in an unpatriotic and really seditious stand, the people of America, and of Baltimore in particular, should voice their protest in no uncertain terms.

J. B. Noel Wyatt, the Baltimore architect, who has been a box holder at the Boston Symphony concerts for 10 years, but who withdrew his subscription early this year because he had heard of Muck's un-American sentiments, yesterday wrote a letter to C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Boston organization, stating that he could not even listen to a concert by the Bostonians now while Dr. Muck continued as leader.

Mr. Wyatt's Letter.

Mr. Wyatt's letter in part follows:

"Dear Sir: The writer has always been an ardent admirer of the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its national value to the musician, the student and the amateur public, and he has subscribed to a box at the Lyric for the last 10 or more seasons of the symphony concerts in Baltimore.

"Of late, however, the compilation of the programs has produced very general adverse comment and the frequent discourteous attitude of the leader also toward his audience has been noticeably unpleasant. In addition to this, having heard from very reliable authority of the discourteous and insulting attitude of the leader for sometime past and his openly expressed opinions in regard to America, the writer decided that he would no longer obtain the same benefit or pleasure from the concerts of the Boston orchestra and, therefore, declined to renew the subscription this year to his box as usual.

"He feels entirely justified in this action by the recent extraordinary conditions that have arisen in regard to the national anthem and the attitude of Dr. Muck and Mr. Higginson seems entirely unjustifiable and illogical, for under present circumstances it seems absurd to them to consider the patriotic introduction of the national anthem or such occasions as forming part of any musical program, artistic or otherwise.

BULLETIN

om

ddress: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

ate OCT 30 1917

ASK THAT ORCHESTRA PLAY "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"

Ten Local Organizations Telegraph Symphony Manager.

A joint telegram from nine local societies, many of them prominent in musical circles, and a similar wire from Thomas H. West, Jr., chairman of the State Liberty Loan committee, were sent this morning to C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, asking that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the orchestra this evening at Infantry Hall.

The joint message was as follows:

"The undersigned earnestly request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this evening, Oct. 30, at Infantry Hall:

"MRS. EMMA WINSLOW CHILDS, President Chopin Club.

"MRS. HAROLD J. GROSS, President Monday Morning Club.

"MRS. GEORGE S. MATTHEWS, Vice President MacDowell Club, and chairman of the music committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.

"MISS MARY S. WINSOR, President Schubert Club.

MISS VIRGINIA BOYD ANDERSON presiding officer, Rhode Island State Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. GEORGE HAIL, President Northeastern District National Federation of Musical Clubs.

"MRS. JAMES E. McCONNELL, President the Chaminade Club.

"MRS. GILBERT C. CARPENTER First Vice President the Chaminade Club."

Mr. West's telegram read: "The Liberty Loan committee of Rhode Island requests that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert to be given in Providence to-night."

NEWS.

Providence, R. I.

OCT 27 1917

GERALDINE FARRAR OPENS ELLIS CONCERT SERIES

Next Tuesday evening, October 30th, brings in Infantry Hall the first of the five subscription concerts arranged for Providence by Charles A. Ellis of Boston. This concert will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck and the soloist will be Geraldine Farrar, whose only appearance in Providence it will be, for the following Monday Miss Farrar begins her work with the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York and there she will be with the company until the end of the season in April.

The program arranged for this concert is one of unusual attractiveness. The Symphony will be the Fourth of Tschaikowsky. During the past few years there has been a gradual change of opinion regarding Tschaikowsky's symphonies. For a long time the sixth, or "Pathetic" was practically the only one played and its drawing power with the public was equal to that of Wagner's music. Gradually, however, as they became more familiar the fourth and fifth increased in popularity and today it seems to be the general opinion of connoisseurs that Tschaikowsky reached the highest point of his genius in the fourth Symphony in F-Minor. In spirit it is thoroughly Russian which cannot be said of the other symphonies, and, moreover, its scherze, in which the composer has turned the string sections of the Orchestra into, so-to-say, a huge mandolin, is one of the most brilliant pieces of writing in symphonic literature.

The other two orchestral numbers will be the comparatively unknown Symphonic Poem of Liszt entitled "Prometheus" and the ever wonderful "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven. The "Prometheus" is the fifth of the Symphonic Poems with which Liszt practically revolutonized writing for the modern orchestra. It has all the salient characteristcs of the composer. It has the brilliant orchestration, the pomp, circumstance and magniloquence found in all his poems, and, if critics are to be believed, has fewer weak and uninteresting moments than all other compositions of its class. It is one of the curious things in musical history that every now and then some great composition lies neglected for years. Until the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season it had never played the "Prometheus."

Miss Farrar will sing twice. Her first number will be the Entrance aria of Elizabeth in the second act of "Tannhauser," in which the heroine estatically greets her ancestral halls seen in a new light now that Tannhauser is released from the fatal spell of Horselberg.

For her second number she will sing three of the famous songs which Wagner wrote in the '50's while he was a resident of Zurich; the words by that remarkable woman Mathilde Wesendonck. These songs are "Im Treibhaus" (In a Greenhouse); "Schmerzen" (Griefs) and "Traume" (Dreams). The first and third may be regarded as preliminary studies for the third and second acts respectively of "Tristan and Isolde." These will be sung with orchestral accompaniment.

m EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

e

SHALL MUCK OR HIGGINSON GO?

Major Higginson, the proprietor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, insists that it was he, and not Dr. Muck, who refused to have "The Star-Spangled Banner" played in Providence, and insists that if stones are to be thrown they shall be thrown at him, and not at Dr. Muck.

Unfortunately, in spite of Major Higginson's long and eminent service to good music, stones will be thrown fast enough if he fails to accept Dr. Muck's resignation, which offers an easy way out of the distressing muddle. The question should never have been allowed to come up at all, and it would not have arisen if Major Higginson had announced that the national anthem would be played at all concerts before any request had been received. The New York conductors followed that course, the public is behind them and they will play as much German music as fits the schemes of their programs without question. But Major Higginson, in his tenderness for the sensibilities of his Prussian conductor, has allowed a hornet's nest to start buzzing about his superb orchestra. The buzzing has been made louder by some tactless comments from Dr. Muck and now apparently the question of Dr. Muck's retention is to be settled by his reception at his series of concerts this week.

That is practically an invitation for hostile demonstrations by those subscribers who do not relish hearing their national air led by a Prussian who ought to, and no doubt does, hate it. There is already gossip about "a silent treatment" to be given to the Prussian at the Academy on Friday night, and if the Germans in the audience undertake to acclaim him there is pretty certain to be a counter demonstration and a row. The way to avoid the risk of such an unseemly collision is to announce at once that Dr. Muck's resignation will be accepted as soon as a new conductor can be found. Then he will be allowed to lead the concerts immediately ahead in peace. Obviously, the orchestra must have a leader and reasonable time must be allowed to find one. But to invite good Americans to storm at Dr. Muck when he appears in order to get rid of him is simply an incitement to disorder, and that is what Major Higginson's present plan amounts to.

EAGLE

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

* * *

Caruso kisses the soil of the United States and waves a kiss to the Stars and Stripes. On his trip South he realized $200,000 at concerts for war charities, including the Red Cross and orphan funds. Caruso more than offsets Muck.

* * *

Freie Presse

Brooklyn, N Y.

NOV 2 1917

Heimathlos

Boston Symphonie - Kapelle wird Hallen-Licens verlieren.

Boston, 2. November. Durch das amtliche Eingreifen des Mayors Curley hat nunmehr die Kontroverse über die Weigerung des Dr. Karl Muck bei den Konzerten des Symphonie-Orchesters die Nationalhymne spielen zu lassen, ihren kritischen Höhepunkt erlangt und zur Stunde sieht es aus, als ob die einen Weltruf genießende bedeutendste Kapelle Amerikas aufgelöst werden wird. Mayor Curley verständigte Henry L. Higginson, den Bankier und Begründer des Orchesters, daß er die Licenz für die Symphonie-Hall, das Domizil der Kapelle, annullire, für den Fall, daß Dr. Muck bei seiner Weigerung verbleibe.

Higginson erklärte, daß die Programme für die diesjährigen Konzerte im Sommer fertiggestellt und darin keine Aenderung vorgenommen werden würde.

Er würde wahrscheinlich infolge der Lage seine finanzielle Unterstützung des Orchesters zurückziehen und die Kapelle auflösen.

Es bleibt abzuwarten, ob die Direktoren der Carnegie Hall und des Brooklyner Instituts für Künste und Wissenschaften, woselbst die Kapelle in nächster Woche spielt, in irgend einer Weise einschreiten werden, wenn Dr. Muck bei seiner Weigerung verharrt.

Das heute in Umlauf befindliche Gerücht, daß infolge der Kontroverse in diesem Winter keine deutsche Opern gegeben werden, dürfte nicht den Thatsachen entsprechen, zumal der General-Direktor Gatti Casazza eine gegentheilige Erklärung abgegeben hat.

Freie Presse

n

ress: Brooklyn, N Y

NOV 3 1917

Muck tritt zurück

Boston Symphonie - Orchester spielt Nationalhymne.

Bann über deutsche Oper

Boston, 3. Nov. Voll dramatischer Momente war das gestrige Nachmittags-Konzert des hiesigen Symphonie-Orchesters, ohne daß hierbei die Musik in Betracht kam. Infolge der Kontroverse betreffs der Weigerung des deutschen Kapellmeisters Dr. Carl Muck, die National-Hymne spielen zu lassen, war Symphony Hall bis zur Fassungskraft gefüllt und alles harrte gespannt der kommenden Ereignisse. Man blieb nicht lange im Ungewissen, denn Dr. Muck ließ das „Star Spangled Banner" spielen und darob erhob sich natürlich gewaltiger Applaus.

Nach diesem patriotischen Vorspiel trat Major Henry Lee Higginson, der Gründer und Patron des Orchesters, vor die Rampe und gab bekannt, daß Dr. Muck ihm seine Resignation unterbreitet hätte mit der Begründung, daß es sein Wunsch sei, daß das Orchester nicht unter einem gegen ihn persönlich bestehenden Vorurtheil leiden sollte. Dr. Muck zu verlieren, würde eine Kalamität sein. Die Angelegenheit läge in seinen Händen und würde von ihm in reifliche Erwägung gezogen werden.

Vom Direktorenrath des Metropolitan Opernhauses wurde gestern beschlossen, in der neuen Saison keine deutschen Opern zu geben und Wagner, Beethoven und Mozart werden daher nicht zu Gehör kommen. Schon vorher hatte man sich darauf geeinigt, daß Richard Strauß als lebender Komponist vom Repertoire zu verschwinden hätte. Die bestehenden Kontrakte mit Madame Ober, Selma Kurt, Johannes Sembach und Carl Braun werden gelöst werden, doch Frau Frieda Hempel und Frau Matzenauer, deren Repertoire viele italienische und französische Opern umfaßt, dürften im Ensemble bleiben.

EVENING PUBLIC Ledger

ess: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NOV 2 - 1917

DR. KARL MUCK AND U. S. ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Leader's Attitude Revives Question of Musical Prussianism

PLAIN, ordinary American citizens who rise reverently when "The Star Spangled Banner" is played have hitherto been innocent of the fact that they were suffering an embarrassment of their artistic sensibilities. Nationals of other countries who have stood during the playing of the anthem, paying courtesy to the land in which they were staying and following the conventional code of international amenities, were not aware that the performance was insulting to them. Musicians of whatever nationality in the personnel of bands or orchestras have played the American national hymn at concerts without the menacing consciousness that they were doing something destructive of musical art. Conductors have placed "The Star Spangled Banner" on their concert schedules minus the sense that they were ruining the harmonic contour and studied integral character of their programs.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has discovered—and uncovered—all these items. He refused to put "The Star Spangled Banner" on his program earlier in the week at Providence, R. I. He has indicated that he will not put it on his opening program for the New York season. His initial Philadelphia concert is too far in the future to make the performance of the American anthem on the program a momentous issue, although its inspiring strains would be highly appropriate in the city of the Declaration of Independence. The precedents of his refusals indicate that he will maintain the harmonic values and artistic unity of his program by a palpable omission—and a disregard of the legitimately patriotic feelings of the people among which he is a guest.

Doctor Muck's Standpoint

Here is Doctor Muck's standpoint—and his defense:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or groups. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band? Or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. All the nations at war are represented.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it."

In a Difficult Position

Doctor Muck's attitude and defense of it revive the question of Prussianism in music during the period of the war. He is alleged to be pronouncedly pro-German in his sympathy. His private views he has a right to have and hold. He is, however, a public character by virtue of his direction of one of the oldest and greatest American orchestras. His private views need not necessarily cleave to those of the country in which he is placed, but certainly his opinions as an individual should not contravene the public opinion of that nation, stubbornly and gratuitously. He owes both responsibility and courtesy to those who make possible both the existence of the orchestra which he heads and his own opportunity for artistic expression of his musical soul.

The Boston Symphony chief's position is a difficult one. Certain sedate Hub citizens awake each morning fearful that during the night he has blown up the Harvard bridge or twiddled his thumbs to his nose at the Sacred Codfish. At time of going to press the bridge still spanned the Charles River. But Doctor Muck is metaphorically in the position of twiddling his thumb. Even though his policy is countenanced by Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and Maecenas of the Boston Symphony, apparently it has not occurred to either that his refusal to comply with an established custom is insulting to the American audiences for which the band plays, that it is embarrassing to their patriotic sensibilities to patronize concerts in the consciousness that their national hymn is tabooed and that good manners and the sense of decency should surmount a personal objection, no matter how deep-seated, no matter though it is cloaked in the guise of art.

Good Breeding and Good Art

Art camouflages many abuses. In this case it apparently is the last defense for a pure antipathy and a Teutonic will to domineer. Doctor Muck rightly says that art is international. It really should be supernational. Did he so regard it broadly and widely his artistic sensibilities would not be outraged by inclusion of "The Star Spangled Banner" on any program, however symphonically perfected. Despite Doctor Muck, the public has a right to demand its performance. It has a right to dictate to its artistic servants, of whom Doctor Muck is one—with the choice of returning to Ber-n if he does not care to abide by its ...hes. There were conductors before Doc-Muck—both broad-minded and good-...ed, and Germans at that.

...now Mr. Damrosch, of the New ...phony Society; Mr. Stock, of the ...phony; Mr. Stransky, of the ...all Teutonic racially by birth ...anage to play the Ameri- ...t embarrassment to their ...or destruction of the ...ir program making. ...les by a venerable ...it nor substance ...paired by due ...public. ...quarrel with ...lessened ...of Bee- ...have

EVENING PUBLIC Ledger

rom

ddress: PHILADELPHIA, PA. 00

ate NOV 2 - 1917

MUCK'S ATTITUDE 'TEMPERAMENTAL'

Justice Department's View on His Refusal to Play National Anthem

NO DISLOYALTY CHARGE

Expected to Maintain His Stand on "Star Spangled Banner" in Philadelphia

BOSTON, Nov. 2.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared that the orchestra would not include the "Star Spangled Banner" in its New York concert repertoire next week. It is supposed the same attitude will be taken toward the program in Philadelphia on Monday night. In his statement Doctor Muck made the following remarks:

I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America.

A letter written by a woman and published in a New York newspaper says:

No doubt the Boston Orchestra is as loyal as our musicians, but it is persistently said that Doctor Muck refuses to conduct the national anthem. That sort of a thing may be accepted without question in other places, but not in New York.

Doctor Muck was shown this letter. He said:

Notwithstanding the attitude of this woman, our program for the New York concerts is all made up and is not liable to any changes. The American national anthem is not on the program and will not be played so far as I or anybody else knows.

Our manager, Mr. Ellis, has investigated this letter and finds that this woman is not even a subscriber to the New York concerts. I shall pay no more attention to her letter than if it was never written.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainment. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations.

Were we to fail to give the public the kind of music to which it has become accustomed we would be unworthy of their present gratitude and esteem. My aim as conductor will continue to be, as it has always been, to give the music-loving public the most exquisite artistic compositions in the best possible manner. Beyond that I do not think the Boston Symphony Orchestra has any excuse for being.

Doctor Muck then made the citizenship statement referred to.

The orchestra goes on tour next week, and Doctor Muck's assertion as to the omission of the anthem at New York applies also to the other cities the orchestra will visit. In a previous statement he has said it would be almost an "insult, embarrassing and impertinent" to insist that the anthem be played. To one inquirer he said, "It's not my affair."

Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, did not budge from the position announced Wednesday that he would disband the symphony rather than yield to a demand for the anthem—yet there are signs that he will bow to the inevitable and have the orchestra play the "Star Spangled Banner," even if he and Muck do consider that it has no place in an art concert. For instance, a mammoth flag has appeared over the portico of Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra.

EVENING TELEGRAPH NOV. 2, 1917

DEMAND DR. MUCK PLAY STAR SPANGLED BANNER OR CANCEL CONCERT HERE

Men and Women Protest Against Boston Symphony Director's Attitude.

MAYOR REFUSES TO GO

Declares He Cannot Force Patriotism on Part of Director of Organization.

RED CROSS ACTS

Bankers, Congressmen and Patriotic Women Urge Boycott.

MAYOR WOULD STAY AWAY FROM UNPATRIOTIC CONCERT

Mayor Thomas B. Smith, explaining that he could not stop Dr. Muck from giving his concert, said that it seemed to him that patriotic persons should show their disapproval by refusing to attend the concert. Such would be his attitude, he explained, toward any concert which did not include the national air on the program.

"So far as I am concerned, this director has a right to give a concert, but patriotic people will probably stay away from it," the Mayor said. "I would feel that I was unpatriotic if I attended a concert at which 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was not among the numbers on the program."

An uprising of protest against allowing Dr. Karl Muck to conduct the scheduled concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music next Monday night unless he includes the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the program was poured out from every quarter of the city today from men prominent in all walks of life.

The stubborn refusal of Dr. Muck, a German, to yield to the patriotic demands of his American audiences and render the national anthem at his concerts has aroused resentment here as well as in other cities.

Men of national prominence urged today that Dr. Muck be prohibited from appearing here unless he accedes to the popular clamor.

The question of police interference with the concern was put up to Director of Public Safety Wilson by a number of indignaont citizens.

For awile Director Wilson considered forbidding the concert, but decided that it was not within his province to do so unless he had reason to believe disorder would follow the refusal of Dr. Muck to render the Star Spangled Banner on Monday night.

In Baltimore threats of mob violence have been made against Dr. Muck if he refuses the Star Spangled Banner a place on the program the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to render there net week.

Mayor Smith has declined to take any official action. He has the authority to revoke the permit for the concert, but he said today that he did not deem it wise to interfere.

"Patriotic citizens will not attend," he said. "I for one think I would be lacking in patriotism if I attended a concert where the conductor of the orchestra refused to play the Star Spangled Banner."

Mayor Curley, of Boston, has taken steps to compel the orchestra to play the national anthem at any concert in that city. He has threatened to break up the organization if Dr. Muck persists in his stubbornness.

CONGRESSMAN EMPHATIC.

Congressman William S. Vare stated unqualifiedly that if he were Director of Public Safety he would not allow any orchestra to play in this city if its director refused to play the Star Spangled Banner on request.

Similar statements were given by many other prominent Philadelphians. Included in those who denounced Dr. Muck's refusal to play the Star Spangled Banner were a number of German-Americans.

Refuses to Play National Anthem

DR. KARL MUCK

Whose refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his symphony concerts has aroused indignation here. Many persons insist that he not be allowed to play in Philadelphia Monday night.

Gustav Meyer, proprietor of the German Gazette, and one of the most influential German-Americans in the city, said that in his opinion, Dr. Muck should not be allowed to play here at all unless consented to place the Star Spangled Banner on the programme.

"I most certainly do think that Dr. Muck should play the Star Spangled Banner," Mr. Meyer said. "There is no excuse in God's world why he shouldn't. He should play it here or not be allowed to play at all."

No steps will be taken by the officials of the Academy of Music to cancel the lease of the building for the concert next Monday night. Colonel Sylvester Bonifan, who has charge of the leasing of the Academy of Music, has taken the attitude that the controversy is one that does not affect the management of the Academy of Music, and has declined to take any part in it.

"All I have to say is that we expect the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Monday night," Mr. Bonifan said. "We have no thought of cancelling the lease and have no intention of interfering in any manner with Dr. Muck's program."

MUCK'S ATTITUDE.

While Dr. Muck has not definitely committed himself to a refusal to include the Star Spangled Banner in his Philadelphia program he has intimated that he will refuse to do so.

In musical circles in this city, where Dr. Muck's attainments are recognized and admired, there was a disposition to believe that his refusal to play the Star Spangled Banner in his orchestra may have been due to an artistic dislike to have a purely patriotic air on a classical program.

RED CROSS WOMEN DENOUNCE DR. MUCK

Demand Boston Symphony Leader Be Compelled to Play National Air or Quit Country.

WOULD BOYCOTT CONCERT

Twenty-five women in the workrooms of the American Red Cross, 1427 Walnut street, many of whom have sons and brothers fighting under "The Star Spangled Banner" in France, paused in their bandage-making today to hear the question read to them.

At the conclusion—"is it your opinion that Dr. Muck should be permitted to give a concert unless he first agrees to play the 'Star Spangled Banner?'"—they voted unanimously that the concert should not be permitted to be held in the face of the conductor's refusal. Their spokesman explained their attitude.

"We do not believe the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be allowed to hold its concert unless it agrees to play the national air," she said. "Dr. Muck should be compelled to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' as long as he is in this country. If the concert cannot be stopped then the persistent refusal on the part of the conductor should be met by a refusal on the part of every man and woman, who had planned to listen to the concert, to attend it."

From EVENING TELEGRAPH

Address: 1827 Filbert, Phila., Pa.

Date 1917

Art vs. Patriotism

THE refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, promises further developments. In musical circles there will probably be a controversy over artistic issues as interesting to the layman as the one which arose concerning Barnard's statue of Lincoln.

Dr. Muck takes refuge in the trite and in some respects fallacious remark that "art is international." So is war international, if it comes to that. The "Watch on the Rhine" may be better music than the "Star-Spangled Banner," but since we Americans have a strange national bias just now, we have a decided preference for the "Star-Spangled Banner," and long may it wave! It happens to be our national hymn. We should certainly expect Dr. Karl Muck to stand up if he heard it played by a common, low-brow brass band.

Dr. Muck says the thing is not classical or artistic. Anyway, it offends him even to think of playing it. It is possible that Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot play the "Star-Spangled Banner" and get any music out of it, but Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra can play the same selection and make music that reaches every heart. Nobody so far has discovered that our orchestra is deteriorating in musical taste or nicety of execution through the vulgarizing influence of the people's patriotic hymn.

Patriotism cannot always be artistic in expression, but art can be patriotic.

EVENING TELEGRAPH NOV. 2, 1917

DEMAND DR. MUCK PLAY STAR SPANGLED BANNER OR CANCEL CONCERT HERE

Men and Women Protest Against Boston Symphony Director's Attitude.

MAYOR REFUSES TO GO

Declares He Cannot Force Patriotism on Part of Director of Organization.

RED CROSS ACTS

Bankers, Congressmen and Patriotic Women Urge Boycott.

MAYOR WOULD STAY AWAY FROM UNPATRIOTIC CONCERT

Mayor Thomas B. Smith, explaining that he could not stop Dr. Muck from giving his concert, said that it seemed to him that patriotic persons should show their disapproval by refusing to attend the concert. Such would be his attitude, he explained, toward any concert which did not include the national air on the program.

"So far as I am concerned, this director has a right to give a concert, but patriotic people will probably stay away from it," the Mayor said. "I would feel that I was unpatriotic if I attended a concert at which 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was not among the numbers on the program."

An uprising of protest against allowing Dr. Karl Muck to conduct the scheduled concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music next Monday night unless he includes the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the program was poured out from every quarter of the city today from men prominent in all walks of life.

The stubborn refusal of Dr. Muck, a German, to yield to the patriotic demands of his American audiences and render the national anthem at his concerts has aroused resentment here as well as in other cities.

Men of national prominence urged today that Dr. Muck be prohibited from appearing here unless he accedes to the popular clamor.

The question of police interference with the concern was put up to Director of Public Safety Wilson by a number of indignaont citizens.

For awile Director Wilson considered forbidding the concert, but decided that it was not within his province to do so unless he had reason to believe disorder would follow the refusal of Dr. Muck to render the Star Spangled Banner on Monday night.

In Baltimore threats of mob violence have been made against Dr. Muck if he refuses the Star Spangled Banner a place on the program the Boston Synphony Orchestra is scheduled to render there net week.

Mayor Smith has declined to take any official action. He has the authority to revoke the permit for the concert, but he said today that he did not deem it wise to interfere.

"Patriotic citizens will not attend," he said. "I for one think I would be lacking in patriotism if I attended a concert where the conductor of the orchestra refused to play the Star Spangled Banner."

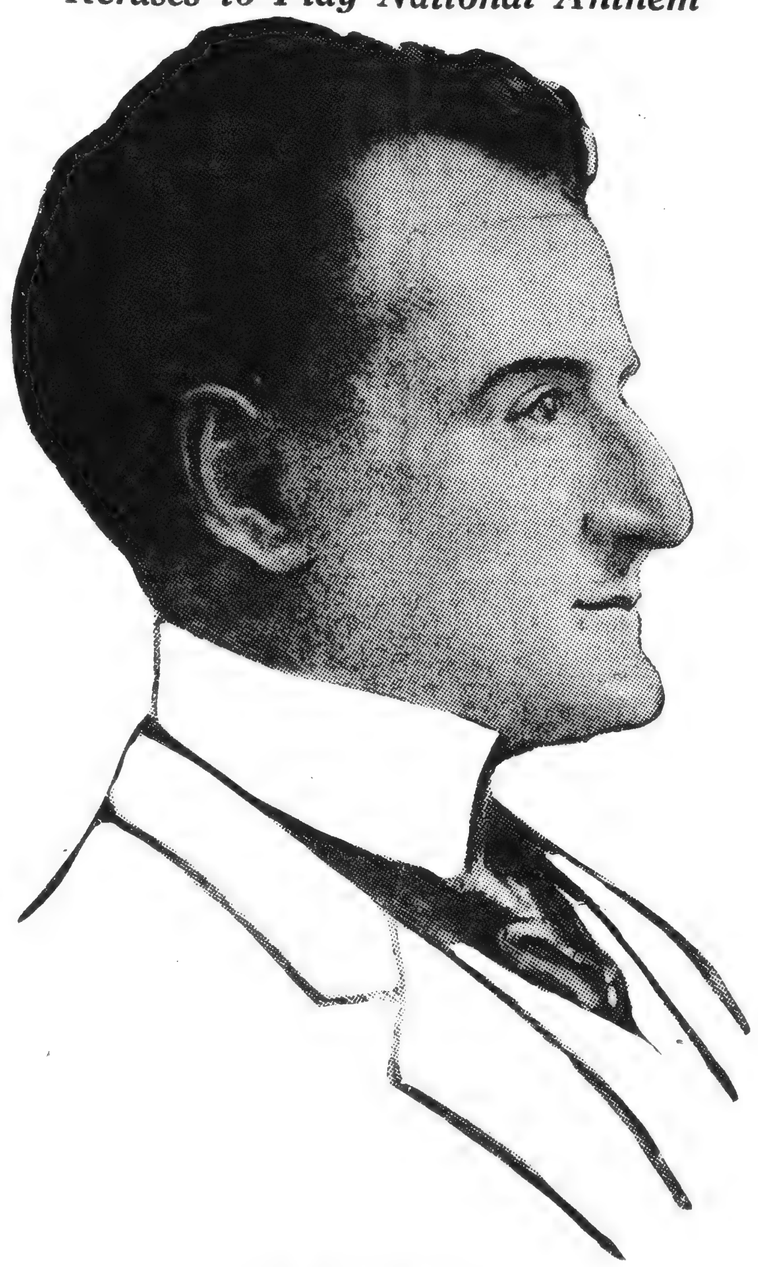
Mayor Curley, of Boston, has taken steps to compel the orchestra to play the national anthem at any concert in that city. He has threatened to break up the organization if Dr. Muck persists in his stubbornness.

CONGRESSMAN EMPHATIC.

Congressman William S. Vare stated unqualifiedly that if he were Director of Public Safety he would not allow any orchestra to play in this city if its director refused to play the Star Spangled Banner on request.

Similar statements were given by many other prominent Philadelphians. Included in those who denounced Dr. Muck's refusal to play the Star Spangled Banner were a number of German-Americans.

Refuses to Play National Anthem



DR. KARL MUCK

Whose refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his symphony concerts has aroused indignation here. Many persons insist that he not be allowed to play in Philadelphia Monday night.

Gustav Meyer, proprietor of the German Gazette, and one of the most influential German-Americans in the city, said that in his opinion, Dr. Muck should not be allowed to play here at all unless consented to place the Star Spangled Banner on the programme.

"I most certainly do think that Dr. Muck should play the Star Spangled Banner," Mr. Meyer said. "There is no excuse in God's world why he shouldn't. He should play it here or not be allowed to play at all."

No steps will be taken by the officials of the Academy of Music to cancel the lease of the building for the concert next Monday night. Colonel Sylvester Bonifan, who has charge of the leasing of the Academy of Music, has taken the attitude that the controversy is one that does not affect the management of the Academy of Music, and has declined to take any part in it.

"All I have to say is that we expect the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Monday night," Mr. Bonifan said. "We have no thought of cancelling the lease and have no intention of interfering in any manner with Dr. Muck's program."

MUCK'S ATTITUDE.

While Dr. Muck has not definitely committed himself to a refusal to include the Star Spangled Banner in his Philadelphia program he has intimated that he will refuse to do so.

In musical circles in this city, where Dr. Muck's attainments are recognized and admired, there was a disposition to believe that his refusal to play the Star Spangled Banner in his orchestra may have been due to an artistic dislike to have a purely patriotic air on a classical program.

RED CROSS WOMEN DENOUNCE DR. MUCK

Demand Boston Symphony Leader Be Compelled to Play National Air or Quit Country.

WOULD BOYCOTT CONCERT

Twenty-five women in the workrooms of the American Red Cross, 1427 Walnut street, many of whom have sons and brothers fighting under "The Star Spangled Banner" in France, paused in their bandage-making today to hear the question read to them.

At the conclusion—"is it your opinion that Dr. Muck should be permitted to give a concert unless he first agrees to play the 'Star Spangled Banner?'"—they voted unanimously that the concert should not be permitted to be held in the face of the conductor's refusal. Their spokesman explained their attitude.

"We do not believe the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be allowed to hold its concert unless it agrees to play the national air," she said. "Dr. Muck should be compelled to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' as long as he is in this country. If the concert cannot be stopped then the persistent refusal on the part of the conductor should be met by a refusal on the part of every man and woman, who had planned to listen to the concert, to attend it."

From _____

Address: _____

Date _____

Art vs. Patriotism

THE refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, promises further developments. In musical circles there will probably be a controversy over artistic issues as interesting to the layman as the one which arose concerning Barnard's statue of Lincoln.

Dr. Muck takes refuge in the trite and in some respects fallacious remark that "art is international." So is war international, if it comes to that. The "Watch on the Rhine" may be better music than the "Star-Spangled Banner," but since we Americans have a strange national bias just now, we have a decided preference for the "Star-Spangled Banner," and long may it wave! It happens to be our national hymn. We should certainly expect Dr. Karl Muck to stand up if he heard it played by a common, low-brow brass band.

Dr. Muck says the thing is not classical or artistic. Anyway, it offends him even to think of playing it. It is possible that Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot play the "Star-Spangled Banner" and get any music out of it, but Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra can play the same selection and make music that reaches every heart. Nobody so far has discovered that our orchestra is deteriorating in musical taste or nicety of execution through the vulgarizing influence of the people's patriotic hymn.

Patriotism cannot always be artistic in expression, but art can be patriotic.

From
Address: PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Date NOV 2 1917

ALL GERMAN OPERAS ARE EXCLUDED FROM NEW YORK PROGRAM

Metropolitan Directors Decide on Change to Avoid Encouraging Enemy Sentiment.

DR. MUCK STILL DEFIANT

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter.

While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and, in fact, the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera might have a political effect in Germany as evidence that the United States was divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives have induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said today, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programs for the season.

DAMROSCH PATRIOTIC.

The question whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at its opening concert here next week was debated further among local patrons of the orchestra yesterday. Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall, said, in reference to the stand of Dr. Muck, that while he thought it would be an injustice to Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct the national anthem now, at the same time he considered his reasons for refusing to do so either foolish or confusing the issue.

"'The Star-Spangled Banner' is not played in our country because it is a work of art," Damrosch added, "but because it is a symbol of the loyalty and the patriotism of our people in time of war. While I do not believe in cheapening this symbol by producing it on every occasion, it is most fitting that a musical season this year should be introduced by a playing of the anthem. The issue in the case of the Boston Orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it."

Washington Investigating.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians of any sort to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer he could be dealt with under the espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, yet remain to be developed by the Government agents.

At any rate officials in Washington consider the action of Dr. Muck disrespectful, to say the least, and do not regard his explanation worthy of much merit.

Baltimore Will Demand It.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here November 14, and unless the national anthem is played it will be demanded from the floor.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand yesterday, and it also was brought to the attention of the Federal and municipal authorities. Baltimore never has needed much excuse for mob action. Unless the orchestra plays the anthem here it is a safe bet there will be something doing.

St. Louis Orchestra to Play It.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra yesterday voted that the "Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week dur-

From TELEGRAM
dress: New York City.
te NOV 5 - 1917

PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK'S CONCERT IN BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Monday.—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here, next Wednesday night, was filed with the Police Board by the Grand Jury to-day. This action was taken after the jury had discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner," at Providence, last week. The foreman, John S. Bridges, stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be alowed to appear in Baltimore, and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

SUN
ss: New York City.
NOV 7 - 1917

Washington Applauds Muck.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—An ovation was given the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, its director, when thy appeared to-day at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

TELEGRAM
New York City.

HERALD
ss: New York City

WOULD INTERN DR. MUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

After Dr. Karl Muck refused to play our national anthem surely he will not be permitted to desecrate it by allowing him to play it. He and ever yother dirty German should be interned at once. Why hesitate? Do them before they do us, should be the American maxim.

CLAUDE TRAUGOTT.
New York City, Nov. 3, 1917.

Baltimore Police Forbid Concert by Dr. Karl Muck

Wave of Indignation Over Refusal of German Musician to Play "Star Spangled Banner" Leads to Prompt Action by City Authorities.

BALTIMORE, Md., Tuesday. Baltimore will have none of Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Police Board, following a suggestion by the Grand Jury, has issued an order forbidding their appearance in a concert here tomorrow night. This is the direct result of the wave of indignation which followed the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

A large mass meeting had been arranged for this afternoon to discuss ar- [illegible] Symphony Hall, the home of the orchestra. This followed criticism by Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Church, that the hall was the only public building in Boston not displaying the Stars and Stripes.

The Symphony gives its regular Friday public rehearsal today, and the anthem is not on the program. Mayor Curley has been quoted as saying that it must be played or the license of the hall will be revoked.

[illegible] onled the on— ss, of ad r. r. ie- t- duct another concert here.

"We never had any objection to the orchestra and we would have been willing for the concert to have taken place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said:—'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic programme."

Musical devotees are not in accord with the decision of the Police Board. They contend that some distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Dr. Muck's Orchestra Non-Union Organization.

Members of the musicians' unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor are only passively interested in the troubles of Dr. Karl Muck, who, they say, conducts one of the few non-union classical orchestras in the country. C. C. Halle, financial secretary of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, the musicians' local, said that probably no action would be taken by the union if Dr. Muck plays here Thursday.

Mr. Halle said that all of the New York operatic and concert orchestras were unionized, but that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had not been. He said several members of the local union had been expelled for joining it and that some had been fined when they returned to the union fold.

It was said at Carnegie Hall that no change had been made in the Boston Symphony engagements here. Dr. Muck and the orchestra are to play in Carnegie Hall Thursday night and Saturday afternoon.

From EVENING WORLD
Address: New York City.
Date

HERALD
s: New York City
NOV 8 - 1917

CAPITAL CHEERS MUCK FOR PLAYING ANTHEM

German Orchestra Leader Repeats "Star Spangled Banner" in Washington Concert.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored yesterday by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was played at the end of the programme, and the audience refused to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary Lane of the Interior Department and party occupied the White House box.

Says Dr. Muck Aids Cause of Germany

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Wednesday.—The Providence Journal will say to-morrow morning:—

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most violent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston

By his own statement to the San Francisco courts in cases he was interested in there he has made it apparent that at least a considerable part of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

EVENING SUN
: New York City

102

PITTSBURG WOMEN TURN ON KREISLER

Consider His Appearance in Recital as Unpatriotic.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—Now it's Fritz Kreisler who is drawing the fire that loyalist music lovers are directing at avowed or suspected anti-American artists. Kreisler, who is an officer in the Austrian army, was to have given a recital at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and one at the Union Arcade Auditorium on Saturday. Whether he will or not is now in doubt.

The Daughters of 1812 met yesterday and vigorously condemned the appearance of the violinist as an unpatriotic thing at this time, with the United States virtually at war with Austria, of which country he is a subject. The matter was brought up by Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, regent of Dolly Madison Chapter, and she soon won the support of her fellow members.

Mrs. John B. Heron, regent of Pittsburg Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has thrown her support to the movement to have the recitals either cancelled or boycotted. The patriotic women are conducting a vigorous campaign and there is little doubt that if the recitals are held they will be failures.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 7.—This city is aroused to the highest pitch of patriotic fervor as a result of the movement to bar Dr. Karl Muck and thus to show disapproval of his refusal to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it rendered "The Star Spangled Banner." At a big meeting held yesterday at the Lyric Theatre hundreds of men and women rose to a height of almost religious fervor when the following letter from Cardinal Gibbons was read by ex-Gov. Warfield, who presided:

"I regret that I cannot attend the

deutsche Journal
New York City.
NOV 7 1917

Boston Symphonie Orchester mag aufgelöst werden.

Musiker kamen der Aufforderung, die Nationalhymne zu spielen, nicht nach.

True translation filed with the Postmaster of New York on November 1, 1917, as required by the act of October 6, 1917.

Boston, 31. Okt. — Major Higgison droht, das Boston Symphonie Orchester aufzulösen, wenn die Empörung wegen der Weigerung, die Hymne „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, anhält. Er erklärte heute, daß er angeordnet hätte, den Verkauf der Einlaßkarten für das Konzert in Providence zu suspendieren, weil er Unruhen befürchtet. Er erklärte, daß die Fortlassung im Programm auf Rücksicht auf die Kunst und die Schwierigkeit des Zusammenstellens der Nummern weit im voraus zurückzuführen sei und daß die deutschen Mitglieder des Orchesters durch die Bundes-Behörden gebilligt worden seien.

Resolutionen wurden vom Nationalen Verteidigungs-Rat von Rhode Island angenommen, in welchen das Symphonie-Orchester verurteilt wurde, wegen seiner Weigerung, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, nachdem in dem Konzerte gestern Abend darum ersucht worden sei. Schritte werden getan, so heißt es, dem Orchester unmöglich zu machen, in anderen Städten zu spielen; es sei denn, die National-Hymne werde in das Programm mitaufgenommen.

TELEGRAM
New York City.

It is even now being recalled that at the outbreak of the war Dr. Muck—somewhat in the public eye to-day—bitterly arraigned the brutal Belgians for lopping off the hands and plucking out the eyes of gentle Germans.

From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Address:
Date 1917

ALL GERMAN OPERAS ARE EXCLUDED FROM NEW YORK PROGRAM

Metropolitan Directors Decide on Change to Avoid Encouraging Enemy Sentiment.

DR. MUCK STILL DEFIANT

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—German opera will not be sung at the Metropolitan this winter.

While official announcement to that effect has not yet been made, and, in fact, the list of operas already announced for the coming season includes the works of German composers, the directors of the Metropolitan have reached the conclusion that the performance of German opera might have a political effect in Germany as evidence that the United States was divided in sentiment regarding the war. Patriotic motives have induced the directors to avoid anything which might give abroad the slightest appearance of sympathy for an enemy cause.

Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, refused to make any statement in regard to the matter, but it is thought the decision of the directors is not a recent one and that it had no connection with the controversy stirred up by the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence.

The services of at least two of the Metropolitan singers have been dispensed with because of their avowedly pro-German attitude. The contract of Mme. Gadski was not renewed when it expired at the close of last season, and Otto Goritz will not be heard at the Metropolitan this season, although his contract had some time to run.

It was said today, in explanation of the fact that German operas had been included among those announced for a performance during the coming season, that it never has been the custom of the directors to announce any hard and fast programs for the season.

DAMROSCH PATRIOTIC.

The question whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at its opening concert here next week was debated further among local patrons of the orchestra yesterday. Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, after his concert in Carnegie Hall, said, in reference to the stand of Dr. Muck, that while he thought it would be an injustice to Muck to expect him, a loyal citizen of Prussia, to conduct the national anthem now, at [illegible] time he considers [illegible] using the [illegible] not [illegible] ESTATE [illegible] of the Boston [illegible] could be met by having [illegible] assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it."

Washington Investigating.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The artistic sensibilities of Dr. Karl Muck may become somewhat ruffled as the result of a quiet investigation which has been ordered by the Department of Justice. While there is no Federal law requiring orchestra leaders or musicians of any sort to play the national anthem, the refusal of Dr. Muck to do so is the first case of the kind to be brought to the attention of the Government.

Naturally the Department of Justice agents who will look into the matter will direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal on the part of the orchestra leader. If it could be shown that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer he could be dealt with under the espionage act and placed in a detention camp during the period of the war. The facts in the case, however, yet remain to be developed by the Government agents.

At any rate officials in Washington consider the action of Dr. Muck disrespectful, to say the least, and do not regard his explanation worthy of much merit.

Baltimore Will Demand It.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 2.—A storm of protest has arisen here over the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. The orchestra will give its first concert here November 14, and unless the national anthem is played it will be demanded from the floor.

Concertgoers took the matter in hand yesterday, and it also was brought to the attention of the Federal and municipal authorities. Baltimore never has needed much excuse for mob action. Unless the orchestra plays the anthem here it is a safe bet there will be something doing.

St. Louis Orchestra to Play It.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2.—The directors of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra yesterday voted that the "Star-Spangled Banner" shall be played at every concert. This includes the symphony concerts that are given twice a week dur-

m TELEGRAM
dress: New York City.
te NOV 5 - 1917

PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK'S CONCERT IN BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Monday.—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here, next Wednesday night, was filed with the Police Board by the Grand Jury to-day. This action was taken after the jury had discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner," at Providence, last week. The foreman, John C. Bridges, stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be alowed to appear in Baltimore, and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

SUN
ss: New York City.
NOV 7 - 1917

Washington Applands Muck.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—An ovation was given the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, its director, when thy appeared to-day at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

HERALD
ss: New York City

WOULD INTERN DR. MUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

After Dr. Karl Muck refused to play our national anthem surely he will not be permitted to desecrate it by allowing him to play it. He and ever yother dirty German should be interned at once. Why hesitate? Do them before they do us, should be the American maxim.

CLAUDE TRAUGOTT.
New York City, Nov. 3, 1917.

TELEGRAM
New York City.

Baltimore Police Forbid Concert by Dr. Karl Muck

Wave of Indignation Over Refusal of German Musician to Play "Star Spangled Banner" Leads to Prompt Action by City Authorities.

BALTIMORE, Md., Tuesday. Baltimore will have none of Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Police Board, following a suggestion by the Grand Jury, has issued an order forbidding their appearance in a concert here tomorrow night. This is the direct result of the wave of indignation which followed the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

A large mass meeting had been arranged for this afternoon to discuss arrangements to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting a concert. The movement is led by Dr. Warfield, formerly Governor. The meeting will be held in spite of the action of the Police Board. Mr. Warfield said:—

"The action of the Police Board follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Dr. Muck and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the Board had acted or not Dr. Muck would never have conducted the concert in Baltimore. He never would have reached the theatre and he will never conduct another concert here.

"We never had any objection to the orchestra and we would have been willing for the concert to have taken place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said:—'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic programme."

Musical devotees are not in accord with the decision of the Police Board. They contend that some distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Dr. Muck's Orchestra Non-Union Organization.

Members of the musicians' unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor are only passively interested in the troubles of Dr. Karl Muck, who, they say, conducts one of the few non-union classical orchestras in the country. C. C. Halle, financial secretary of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, the musicians' local, said that probably no action would be taken by the union if Dr. Muck plays here Thursday.

Mr. Halle said that all of the New York operatic and concert orchestras were unionized, but that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had not been. He said several members of the local union had been expelled for joining it and that some had been fined when they returned to the union fold.

It was said at Carnegie Hall that no change had been made in the Boston Symphony engagements here. Dr. Muck and the orchestra are to play in Carnegie Hall Thursday night and Saturday afternoon.

From EVENING WORLD
Address: New York City.
Date

CAPITAL CHEERS MUCK FOR PLAYING ANTHEM

German Orchestra Leader Repeats "Star Spangled Banner" in Washington Concert.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored yesterday by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was played at the end of the programme, and the audience refused to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary Lane of the Interior Department and party occupied the White House box.

HERALD
s: New York City
NOV 8 - 1917

Says Dr. Muck Aids Cause of Germany

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Wednesday.—The Providence Journal will say to-morrow morning:—

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most violent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston.

By his own statement to the San Francisco courts in cases he was interested in there he has made it apparent that at least a considerable part of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

EVENING SUN
: New York City

102

PITTSBURG WOMEN TURN ON KREISLER

Consider His Appearance in Recital as Unpatriotic.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—Now it's Fritz Kreisler who is drawing the fire that loyalist music lovers are directing at avowed or suspected anti-American artists. Kreisler, who is an officer in the Austrian army, was to have given a recital at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and one at the Union Arcade Auditorium on Saturday. Whether he will or not is now in doubt.

The Daughters of 1812 met yesterday and vigorously condemned the appearance of the violinist as an unpatriotic thing at this time, with the United States virtually at war with Austria, of which country he is a subject. The matter was brought up by Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, regent of Dolly Madison Chapter, and she soon won the support of her fellow members.

Mrs. John B. Heron, regent of Pittsburg Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has thrown her support to the movement to have the recitals either cancelled or boycotted. The patriotic women are conducting a vigorous campaign and there is little doubt that if the recitals are held they will be failures.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 7.—This city is aroused to the highest pitch of patriotic fervor as a result of the movement to bar Dr. Karl Muck and thus to show disapproval of his refusal to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it rendered "The Star Spangled Banner." At a big meeting held yesterday at the Lyric Theatre hundreds of men and women rose to a height of almost religious fervor when the following letter from Cardinal Gibbons was read by ex-Gov. Warfield, who presided:

"I regret that I cannot attend the deutsche Journal

New York City.
NOV 7 1917

Boston Symphonie Orchester mag aufgelöst werden.

Musiker kamen der Aufforderung, die Nationalhymne zu spielen, nicht nach.

True translation filed with the Postmaster of New York on November 1, 1917, as required by the act of October 6, 1917.

Boston, 31. Okt. — Major Higgison droht, das Boston Symphonie Orchester aufzulösen, wenn die Empörung wegen der Weigerung, die Hymne „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, anhält. Er erklärte heute, daß er angeordnet hätte, den Verkauf der Einlaßkarten für das Konzert in Providence zu suspendieren, weil er Unruhen befürchtet. Er erklärte, daß die Fortlassung im Programm auf Rücksicht auf die Kunst und die Schwierigkeit des Zusammenstellens der Nummern weit im voraus zurückzuführen sei und daß die deutschen Mitglieder des Orchesters durch die Bundes-Behörden gebilligt worden seien.

Resolutionen wurden vom Nationalen Verteidigungs-Rat von Rhode Island angenommen, in welchen das Symphonie-Orchester verurteilt wurde, wegen seiner Weigerung, das „Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, nachdem in dem Konzerte gestern Abend darum ersucht worden sei. Schritte werden getan, so heißt es, dem Orchester unmöglich zu machen, in anderen Städten zu spielen; es sei denn, die National-Hymne werde in das Programm mitaufgenommen.

TELEGRAM
New York City.

It is even now being recalled that at the outbreak of the war Dr. Muck—somewhat in the public eye to-day—bitterly arraigned the brutal Belgians for lopping off the hands and plucking out the eyes of gentle Germans.

om TELEGRAM
dress: New York City.
NOV 7 - 1917

4,000 CHEER FOR NATIONAL ANTHEM DR. MUCK HISSED

BALTIMORE, Md., Wednesday.—Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric Theatre at one of the most remarkable patriotic mass meetings in the history of this city, cheered wildly as "The Star Spangled Banner" was extolled in eloquent speeches, and denounced Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for his refusalto play it at his concerts.

The crowd gave ovations to the onetime Governor, Mr. Warfield; Judge Henry Stockbridge, of the Maryland Court of Appeals; Mr. Simmons, the Secretary of State; Captain Hughes, of the National Army, and other prominent speakers, but hissed and jeered the name of Dr. Muck whenever it was mentioned.

One prominent woman of society and a leader of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, yelled:—"Kill him," when Governor Warfield mentioned Dr. Muck's name. Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and reaffirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

PLAYS ANTHEM AT CAPITAL CONCERT

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted nationwide condemnation, appeared at two concerts at the National Theatre here. The audiences included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Volkszeitung
New York City.
NOV 7 1917

Mucks Rücktritt nicht angenommen.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 4. 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6. 1917.

Boston, 3. Nov. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester wird einer heutigen Ankündigung der Leitung zufolge in Zukunft in allen seinen Konzerten „The Star Spangled Banner" spielen. Den besten Informationen ist heute zu entnehmen, daß Major Henry L. Higginson die Resignation des Direktors Karl Muck noch nicht angenommen hat. Die Erklärung, daß die Nationalhymne künftin in die Konzerten des Orchesters eingeschlossen werden wird, scheint anzudeuten, daß die Absicht, die berühmte Organisation aufzulösen, nicht besteht.

Dr. Muck kann, wie Major Higginson heute erklärte, nicht dafür verantwortlich gemacht werden, daß die Konzerte nicht die National-Hymne enthielten. „Dr. Muck hat sich durchaus als ein Ehrenmann benommen," sagte er. „Wenn ich ihn ersuchte, „The Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, tat er es."

STAATSZEITUNG
ss: New York City.
NOV 6 - 1917

Dr. Mucks Konzert polizeilich verboten.

Baltimores Sicherheit würde durch Auftreten des Deutschen gefährdet werden, erklären Behörden.

(Associated Press.)

Baltimore, Md., 5. November. Die hiesigen Polizeikommissare haben dem Manager des Lyric Theaters eine Verfügung zugehen lassen, durch welche das für Mittwoch abend angesetzte Konzert des Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchesters verboten wird.

Das Verbot, das auf eine Empfehlung der Grand Jury hin erlassen wurde, wird mit der Erklärung begründet, daß die öffentliche Sicherheit durch das Konzert gefährdet werden würde. Morgen soll eine große Massenversammlung, für welche bereits Vorkehrungen getroffen sind, abgehalten werden, um führenden Männern Gelegenheit zu geben, das Verhalten Dr. Karl Mucks zu kritisieren.

NEW YORKER
ress: New York City.
NOV 5 - 1917

Dr. Muck gerechtfertigt

Boston, 4. Nov. Major Henry L. Higginson, der bekannte Förderer des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, hat in einer heutigen Erklärung Dr. Karl Muck, den Dirigenten des Orchesters, von jeglicher Schuld in der Providencer Affäre des „Star Spangled Banner" entlastet und alle Schuld auf sich selbst genommen. Herr Higginson erklärt, das Ersuchen, in Providence die Nationalhymne zu spielen, sei ihm von einigen unbekannten und nicht zu den Subskribenten gehörenden Damen gestellt worden. Dr. Muck habe aber erst davon erfahren, als das Orchester Providence bereits verlassen hatte.

Boston, Mass., 4. November. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester ist heute nach Philadelphia abgefahren, wo es morgen abend unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung konzertieren wird. Letzterer wird auch bei der letzten Nummer, dem „Star Spangled Banner", den Taktstock schwingen.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in ...

om NEW YORKER HERALD
dress: New York City. 1917
te

Beifall für Dr. Muck.

Washington, 7. Nov. Ein das National Theater bis auf den letzten Platz füllendes Publikum bereitete gestern nachmittag Dr. Karl Muck eine große Ovation, als er mit seinem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zum Schluß des Konzertes die bereits beim Beginn des Konzertes gespielte Nationalhymne „Star Spangled Banner" noch einmal wiederholte. Das Publikum verließ nicht das Theater, bis Dr. Muck auf der Bühne erschienen war und sich als Dank für die Beifallsbezeigungen verbeugt hatte. Sekretär des Innern Lane und Gesellschaft befanden sich in der Loge des Weißen Hauses.

Baltimore, 7. Nov. In einer stark besuchten Massenversammlung im Lyric Theater, in welchem heute das Boston Symphonie-Orchester unter Dr. Mucks Leitung spielen sollte, wurde gestern nachmittag Dr. Muck, der sich geweigert hatte, die Nationalhymne in sein Programm aufzunehmen, von Ex-Gouverneur Warfield durch die Hechel gezogen. Unter großem Beifall wurden Resolutionen angenommen, in welchen es heißt:

„Wir erwägen, daß er jeden patriotischen Bürger öffentlich beleidigt hat und besonders jeden Bürger Marylands, des Staates, in welchem die Nationalhymne ihren Ursprung hat."

884

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
Date NOV 7 - 1917

Joining with Boston, Baltimore protests against Dr. Muck's appearance there. "Maryland, My Maryland" draws the line. There are wars and wars. The country is united.

84

EVENING NEW YORKER HERALD
ress: New York City.
NOV 7 - 1917

Dr. Muck geehrt.

Washingtoner Audienz enthusiasmiert. Baltimorer verurteilen ihn.

Washington, 7. Nov. Ein das National Theater bis auf den letzten Platz füllendes Publikum bereitete gestern nachmittag Dr. Karl Muck eine große Ovation, als er mit seinem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zum Schluß des Konzertes die bereits beim Beginn des Konzertes gespielte Nationalhymne „Star Spangled Banner" noch einmal wiederholte. Das Publikum verließ nicht das Theater, bis Dr. Muck auf der Bühne erschienen war und sich als Dank für die Beifallsbezeigungen verbeugt hatte. Sekretär des Innern Lane und Gesellschaft befanden sich in der Loge des Weißen Hauses.

Baltimore, 7. Nov. In einer stark besuchten Massenversammlung im Lyric Theater, in welchem heute das Boston Symphonie-Orchester unter Dr. Mucks Leitung spielen sollte, wurde gestern nachmittag Dr. Muck, der sich geweigert hatte, die Nationalhymne in sein Programm aufzunehmen, von Ex-Gouverneur Warfield durch die Hechel gezogen. Unter großem Beifall wurden Resolutionen angenommen, in welchen es heißt:

„Wir erwägen, daß er jeden patriotischen Bürger öffentlich beleidigt hat und besonders jeden Bürger Marylands, des Staates, in welchem die Nationalhymne ihren Ursprung hat."

Pittsburg, 7. Nov. Eine Kampagne, die besonders von den Mitgliedern der „Daughters of 1812" und „Daughters of the American Revolution" geführt wird, ist gegen die angesagten Konzerte von Frik Kreisler und gegen Dr. Karl Muck, Leiter des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, in die Wege geleitet. Kreisler wurde hier für Donnerstag und Samstag gebucht. Kreisler wird von den Agitatoren als feindlicher Ausländer bezeichnet.

om SUN
ddress: New York City.
ate NOV 7 -

PITTSBURG WOMEN PROTEST KREISLER

Austrian Violinist Condemned as "Alien Enemy of the United States."

MUCK ALSO UNDER BAN

Daughters of 1812 and Regent of the D. A. R. Go Firmly on Record.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—Patriotic Pittsburg women joined their voices to-day to the storm of protest that has arisen over the proposed appearance of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian army officer and violinist, who is scheduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and play at the Union Arcade Auditorium Saturday afternoon.

Emphatic condemnation of his engagement as unpatriotic and inconsistent with a loyal policy of wholehearted support of the Government's war prosecution was voiced by the members of the Daughters of 1812 at their meeting to-day. The subject was brought up by Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, regent of the Dolly Madison Chapter, who asserted that Kreisler was an open enemy of the United States and was sending American money to the succor of an ally of the country with which we are at war. Resolutions were then unanimously adopted protesting against the appearance of Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, also billed here for later in the month, and termed in the resolutions "an alien enemy of the United States."

Mrs. John B. Heron, regent of the Pittsburg Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, also added the indignation of that body to the protest that has arisen here against Kreisler and Muck, and while the tickets for the former have sold freely she called upon the buyers to stay away from the concerts to show their loyalty to their own country.

Walter Damrosch of New York, who had been represented in the press here as supporting Dr. Muck in his stand regarding the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," flooded the local papers to-day with extracts from the New York newspapers showing that he had condemned Muck for his attitude.

CRIES OUT 'SHOOT MUCK.'

Woman Stirs Applause at Baltimore Meeting.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—The big demonstration at the Lyric this afternoon would have sufficed to show that, had the police board not forbidden it, it would have been unsafe for Dr. Karl Muck to have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra here to-morrow night. With the band of the 313th Regiment from Camp Meade playing patriotic airs and fifty men from Company I of the regiment marching into the hall with fixed bayonets and with big American flags waving from every box the spirit of the people was definitely warlike.

As the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played "The Star Spangled Banner" willingly or unwillingly, there was great applause. When former Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said, "he should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a full minute. At its end a woman who had been waving a great American flag from the box nearest the stage on the right shouted "Muck should have been shot!" There were shouts of approval.

A letter from Cardinal Gibbons in which he said that he regretted that he could not attend the meeting and that he who profaned the flag should not go unharmed was greeted with a storm of handclapping.

The Cardinal's letter follows: "I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the Star Spangled Banner, but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

om TELEGRAM

dress: New York City.

NOV 7 - 1917

e

4,000 CHEER FOR NATIONAL ANTHEM DR. MUCK HISSED

BALTIMORE, Md., Wednesday.—Four thousand persons crowded the Lyric Theatre at one of the most remarkable patriotic mass meetings in the history of this city, cheered wildly as "The Star Spangled Banner" was extolled in eloquent speeches, and denounced Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for his refusalto play it at his concerts.

The crowd gave ovations to the onetime Governor, Mr. Warfield; Judge Henry Stockbridge, of the Maryland Court of Appeals; Mr. Simmons, the Secretary of State; Captain Hughes, of the National Army, and other prominent speakers, but hissed and jeered the name of Dr. Muck whenever it was mentioned.

One prominent woman of society and a leader of the Daughters of the American Revolution, seated in a box near the stage, yelled:—"Kill him," when Governor Warfield mentioned Dr. Muck's name. Resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and reaffirming the loyalty of Baltimore to the anthem were passed by a unanimous and rising vote.

At the beginning of the meeting a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons in which he stated that he was in hearty accord with the sentiment that "The Star Spangled Banner" should be honored and those punished who refused to do so.

PLAYS ANTHEM AT CAPITAL CONCERT

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted nationwide condemnation, appeared at two concerts at the National Theatre here. The audiences included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Volkszeitung

New York City.

NOV 4 1917

Mucks Rücktritt nicht angenommen.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 4. 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6. 1917.

Boston, 3. Nov. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester wird einer heutigen Ankündigung der Leitung zufolge in Zukunft in allen seinen Konzerten „The Star Spangled Banner" spielen. Den besten Informationen ist heute zu entnehmen, daß Major Henry L. Higginson die Resignation des Direktors Karl Muck noch nicht angenommen hat. Die Erklärung, daß die Nationalhymne künftin in die Konzerten des Orchesters eingeschlossen werden wird, scheint anzudeuten, daß die Absicht, die berühmte Organisation aufzulösen, nicht besteht.

Dr. Muck kann, wie Major Higginson heute erklärte, nicht dafür verantwortlich gemacht werden, daß die Konzerte nicht die National-Hymne enthielten. „Dr. Muck hat sich durchaus als ein Ehrenmann benommen," sagte er. „Wenn ich ihn ersuchte, „The Star Spangled Banner" zu spielen, tat er es."

STAATSZEITUNG

ss: New York City.

NOV 6 - 1917

Dr. Mucks Konzert polizeilich verboten.

Baltimores Sicherheit würde durch Auftreten des Deutschen gefährdet werden, erklären Behörden.

(Associated Preß.)

Baltimore, Md., 5. November. Die hiesigen Polizeikommissare haben dem Manager des Lyric Theaters eine Verfügung zugehen lassen, durch welche das für Mittwoch abend angesetzte Konzert des Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchesters verboten wird.

Das Verbot, das auf eine Empfehlung der Grand Jury hin erlassen wurde, wird mit der Erklärung begründet, daß die öffentliche Sicherheit durch das Konzert gefährdet werden würde. Morgen soll eine große Massenversammlung, für welche bereits Vorkehrungen getroffen sind, abgehalten werden, um führenden Männern Gelegenheit zu geben, das Verhalten Dr. Karl Mucks zu kritisieren.

NEW YORKER

ress: New York City.

e

NOV 6 - 1917

Dr. Muck gerechtfertigt

Boston, 4. Nov. Major Henry L. Higginson, der bekannte Förderer des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, hat in einer heutigen Erklärung Dr. Karl Muck, den Dirigenten des Orchesters, von jeglicher Schuld in der Providencer Affäre des „Star Spangled Banner" entlastet und alle Schuld auf sich selbst genommen. Herr Higginson erklärt, das Ersuchen, in Providence die Nationalhymne zu spielen, sei ihm von einigen unbekannten und nicht zu den Subskribenten gehörenden Damen gestellt worden. Dr. Muck habe aber erst dann erfahren, als das Orchester Providence bereits verlassen hatte.

Boston, Mass., 4. November. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester ist heute nach Philadelphia abgefahren, wo es morgen abend unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung konzertieren wird. Letzteres wird auch bei der letzten Nummer, dem „Star Spangled Banner", den Taktstock schwingen.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in ...

om NEW YORKER HERALD

dress: New York City. 1917

te

Beifall für Dr. Muck.

384

Washington, 7. Nov. Ein das National Theater bis auf den letzten Platz füllendes Publikum bereitete gestern nachmittag Dr. Karl Muck eine große Ovation, als er mit seinem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zum Schluß des Konzertes die bereits beim Beginn des Konzertes gespielte Nationalhymne „Star Spangled Banner" noch einmal wiederholte. Das Publikum verließ nicht das Theater, bis Dr. Muck auf der Bühne erschienen war und sich als Dank für die Beifallsbezeigungen verbeugt hatte. Sekretär des Innern Lane und Gesellschaft befanden sich in der Loge des Weißen Hauses.

Baltimore, 7. Nov. In einer stark besuchten Massenversammlung im Lyric Theater, in welchem heute das Boston Symphonie-Orchester unter Dr. Mucks Leitung spielen sollte, wurde gestern nachmittag Dr. Muck, der sich geweigert hatte, die Nationalhymne in sein Programm aufzunehmen, von Ex-Gouverneur Warfield durch die Hechel gezogen. Unter großem Beifall wurden Resolutionen angenommen, in welchen es heißt:

„Wir erwägen, daß er jeden patriotischen Bürger öffentlich beleidigt hat und besonders jeden Bürger Marylands, des Staates, in welchem die Nationalhymne ihren Ursprung hat."

EVENING NEW YORKER HERALD

ress: New York City.

NOV 7 - 1917

Dr. Muck geehrt.

Washingtoner Audienz enthusiasmiert. Baltimorer verurteilen ihn.

Washington, 7. Nov. Ein das National Theater bis auf den letzten Platz füllendes Publikum bereitete gestern nachmittag Dr. Karl Muck eine große Ovation, als er mit seinem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zum Schluß des Konzertes die bereits beim Beginn des Konzertes gespielte Nationalhymne „Star Spangled Banner" noch einmal wiederholte. Das Publikum verließ nicht das Theater, bis Dr. Muck auf der Bühne erschienen war und sich als Dank für die Beifallsbezeigungen verbeugt hatte. Sekretär des Innern Lane und Gesellschaft befanden sich in der Loge des Weißen Hauses.

Baltimore, 7. Nov. In einer stark besuchten Massenversammlung im Lyric Theater, in welchem heute das Boston Symphonie-Orchester unter Dr. Mucks Leitung spielen sollte, wurde gestern nachmittag Dr. Muck, der sich geweigert hatte, die Nationalhymne in sein Programm aufzunehmen, von Ex-Gouverneur Warfield durch die Hechel gezogen. Unter großem Beifall wurden Resolutionen angenommen, in welchen es heißt:

„Wir erwägen, daß er jeden patriotischen Bürger öffentlich beleidigt hat und besonders jeden Bürger Marylands, des Staates, in welchem die Nationalhymne ihren Ursprung hat."

Pittsburg, 7. Nov. Eine Kampagne, die besonders von den Mitgliedern der „Daughters of 1812" und „Daughters of the American Revolution" geführt wird, ist gegen die angesagten Konzerte von Fritz Kreisler und gegen Dr. Karl Muck, Leiter des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, in die Wege geleitet. Kreisler wurde hier für Donnerstag und Samstag gebucht. Kreisler wird von den Agitatoren als feindlicher Ausländer bezeichnet.

From TELEGRAM

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 7 - 1917

Joining with Boston, Baltimore protests against Dr. Muck's appearance there. "Maryland, My Maryland" draws the line. There are wars and wars. The country is united.

384

om SUN

ddress: New York City.

ate NOV 7 -

PITTSBURG WOMEN PROTEST KREISLER

Austrian Violinist Condemned as "Alien Enemy of the United States."

MUCK ALSO UNDER BAN

Daughters of 1812 and Regent of the D. A. R. Go Firmly on Record.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—Patriotic Pittsburg women joined their voices to-day to the storm of protest that has arisen over the proposed appearance of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian army officer and violinist, who is scheduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and play at the Union Arcade Auditorium Saturday afternoon.

Emphatic condemnation of his engagement as unpatriotic and inconsistent with a loyal policy of wholehearted support of the Government's war prosecution was voiced by the members of the Daughters of 1812 at their meeting to-day. The subject was brought up by Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, regent of the Dolly Madison Chapter, who asserted that Kreisler was an open enemy of the United States and was sending American money to the succor of an ally of the country with which we are at war. Resolutions were then unanimously adopted protesting against the appearance of Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, also billed here for later in the month, and termed in the resolutions "an alien enemy of the United States."

Mrs. John B. Heron, regent of the Pittsburg Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, also added the indignation of that body to the protest that has arisen here against Kreisler and Muck, and while the tickets for the former have sold freely she called upon the buyers to stay away from the concerts to show their loyalty to their own country.

Walter Damrosch of New York, who had been represented in the press here as supporting Dr. Muck in his stand regarding the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," flooded the local papers to-day with extracts from the New York newspapers showing that he had condemned Muck for his attitude.

CRIES OUT 'SHOOT MUCK.'

Woman Stirs Applause at Baltimore Meeting.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—The big demonstration at the Lyric this afternoon would have sufficed to show that, had the police board not forbidden it, it would have been unsafe for Dr. Karl Muck to have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra here to-morrow night. With the band of the 313th Regiment from Camp Meade playing patriotic airs and fifty men from Company I of the regiment marching into the hall with fixed bayonets and with big American flags waving from every box the spirit of the people was definitely warlike.

As the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played "The Star Spangled Banner" willingly or unwillingly, there was great applause. When former Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said, "he should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a full minute. At its end a woman who had been waving a great American flag from the box nearest the stage on the right shouted "Muck should have been shot!" There were shouts of approval.

A letter from Cardinal Gibbons in which he said that he regretted that he could not attend the meeting and that he who profaned the flag should not go unharmed was greeted with a storm of handclapping.

The Cardinal's letter follows: "I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the Star Spangled Banner, but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

From FINANCIAL AMERICA
Address: New York City

Date

MUSIC UNDER SUSPICION

Baltimore, the birthplace of the "Star Spangled Banner," will not listen to a Boston Symphony performance led by a German, even though the professor has yielded to the demand in Providence for the national anthem. Baltimore's peace was so threatened by a similar program that the police forbade it. Washington, where German diplomacy long inflicted a strain on courtesy, has tolerated the grotesque spectacle—for such it may be described.

A subject of the Kaiser rendering "The Star Spangled Banner" in the circumstances that have attended the Boston Symphony performance must remind the witnesses of the unfortunate muzzled and leashed bear going through the two-step under the shadow of his master's long club. The bear feels compelled to dance and the maestro in these concerts has yielded to the public demand for a raising of the colors. Unfortunately for Dr. Carl Muck and his orchestra, no one believes that there is any sincerity in the performance. So the expression of patriotic sentiments contained in the air verges on a concealment of profanity.

Though rendered by musicians of the first rank, there is something unsatisfying in "The Star Spangled Banner" led or played by a Teuton. The hearer must find himself listening for a subdued, mocking, half-hidden note, in the volume of harmony that would betray the real sentiment of the musician—"Deutschland Ueber Alles."

Such a number may rank well in the realm of Teutonic acrobatics, but as a patriotic demonstration it fails of conviction. The controversy as to the artistic merit of the composition also seems unlikely to be settled by placing it in hands of those unfriendly or of doubtful attachment.

---

n TIMES
lress: Washington, D. C.
NOV 4 191

MUCK WILL PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM IN CONCERT HERE

That Dr. Karl Muck will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra while it plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Tuesday's concert in Washington was made certain by a telegram sent to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local representative of the orchestra, by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who is in Boston now with the orchestra.

The telegram, sent in response to a query by Mrs. Wilson-Greene, read:

"Dr. Muck and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were asked by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor of the orchestra, to play the national anthem at the concert in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday. They performed it as the closing number of the program and will do the same in Washington and elsewhere."

Mrs. Wilson-Greene announced last night that nearly all seats for the symphony concert to be given Tuesday at the New National Theater have been sold and that she does not expect the reports concerning Dr. Muck to affect the popularity of the orchestra in Washington.

BULLETIN

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 3 -

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Will Give "Star Spangled Banner" at Every Concert Hereafter, it is Announced

Boston, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" yesterday. Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher Genral Musik Direktor, was leader. Dr. Muck has resigned, but acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

nserted into each program was a printed sheet reading, "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number."

When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage he shook hands with the Major, Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief patron of the orchestra. The audience applauding, stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem, he received another round of applause.

The management of the orchestra announced after the concert that the national anthem would be played at every future concert of the symphony, and that

n PRESS
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 3 - 191

Muck Plays National Anthem

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who said he would not play "The Star Spangled Banner," but who did play it yesterday, has resigned his post. Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, says the resignation is under consideration.

DR. MUCK RESIGNS, AND THEN PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony to Give the "Star Spangled Banner" from Now on.

AUDIENCE CHEERS LEADER

Major Higginson Does Not Know What He Will Do About the Resignation.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played at the conclusion of this afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, with Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader, conducting. The conductor was given a tremendous ovation by the audience, which rose to its feet, applauding him.

Major Henry Lee Higginson appeared on the platform at the opening of the concert and announced that the National Anthem would be played at every performance of the orchestra. He also said that Dr. Muck had given him his resignation, but that he (Major Higginson) would greatly regret accepting it.

"It will have my earnest consideration," he said.

Major Higginson also announced that Dr. Muck never had actually refused to play the National Anthem, but he did not fix the responsibility for the orchestra's recent refusal to include it in its program.

When Dr. Muck stepped to the platform he got a remarkable reception. The audience rose to its feet, giving him applause such as has been given only to musical stars of the first magnitude, who have aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Dr. Muck led the orchestra when it played the anthem. Those who went to the concert saw that the United States flag has made its appearance on the front of Symphony Hall.

Following the declaration of Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management draped a large one over the main entrance. Charles A. Ellis, business manager, said that the flag would remain there permanently.

It is believed that the order to display the flag came from Major Higginson, founder and financial backer of the orchestra.

Mr. Ellis said there had been a United States flag at the hall during the Summer, but he could not recall where it was. There is no flagstaff on the building.

(continued)

NO GERMAN OPERA IN N. Y., SINGERS TO BE DROPPED

New York, Nov. 2.—The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performances of opera in the German language would be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the role of artists.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Selma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who, although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will, it was said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language, and means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

STOKOWSKI SUPPLIES MUCK WITH 'ARTISTIC UNITY' TIP

Demonstrates Playing of Anthem at Concert Here Does Not Upset Program

By Harold P. Quicksall

When Leopold Stokowski beckoned the members of the Philadelphia Orchestra to their feet to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of the concert in the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon the big audience figuratively seized the nation's emblem and waved it with vim in the direction of Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston music lovers who have supported his refusal to play the national anthem.

The 3000 persons in the house stood silently thru the anthem, and when it was over applauded in a fashion which might have done Major Higginson some good, even if it had given his pet conductor a pain.

"Dr. Karl Muck notwithstanding," murmured the eminent justice in front, as he resumed his seat.

"They ought to play it whether it's artistic or not," added Mrs. Justice.

But why, madam, allow Doctor Muck even that. For the last few days he has been busily throwing a Prussian barrage fire, establishing what your husband would call an alibi, and Brother Ed Vare a frame-up. What is it he says? "Art has nothing to do with politics and nationalism." A clever reversal. Art has little to do with politics, but politics and nationalism have a great deal to do with art. How else can we account for the plaintive note developed by the negro folk song during the long years of negro oppression, the barbaric melancholia of the Russians, or the pompous nothingness of some latter-day German music? It isn't all a matter of geography.

Emerson you remember, defined an artist as a man who can express what his fellows feel. Politics is very close to life and feeling. Any one in the fifth ward will vouch for that. So Prussian militarism is not without its musical expression. But it happens that art flourishes only in great intellects and is possessed of a great humanity. So it became a weak sister to politics. If it cannot speak well it runs far afield, grows abstract, or revels in the sorrows of its people.

Because art so easily grows abstract and international. Doctor Muck is at perfect liberty to play scores of properly-selected German compositions at his concerts, and the Matinee Musical Club is foolish to attempt a season of all-American music. The American public sees that or it would not have applauded Mozart, Schubert and Wagner so vociferously yesterday. But Doctor Muck should be reasonable.

Then there is Doctor Muck's assertion that performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" interfers with the 'artistic unity" of a program. It is a pleasure to recall that we always insisted Doctor Muck was ignorant of the principals of program-making. He has been under fire on this point in New York for several seasons.

When the symphonic conductor starts to build a program he becomes just as surely and purely an entertainer as the next vaudeville artist. He lays aside his role of musician to become a psychologist. How will my audience react if I give them this, that and the other thing in an hour a half?—that's his question. And he never forgets "popular ignorance"—that's what they call it—as he goes about his task.

The chief principles involved are that the human mind easily dulls under monotony and delights in contrast. And what is the test? The effect on the audience. Ordinary conductors will always aim to please; daring conductors will occasionally aim to puzzle; but wise and sincere conductors will never aim to stupify their audiences.

Now is there any sound psychological reason why, if an audience gets pleasure out of a dirge, a dance and a song in one program, it should not get pleasure out of a dirge, a dance, a song and a passing swell of patriotism? Is there any violation of art so long as the patriotic stimulus is effective?

As a matter of fact the playing of the national anthem at concerts is even thus early in the war a recognized prelude—it is completely detached in the mind of the audience from the formal program. It affects what follows neither one way or another. So the program was never built in which "The Star-Spangled Banner" could not be fitted without musical disaster to American audiences.

No informed musician will claim pure musical merit for "The Star-Spangled Banner." Neither would he for the German national anthem. Of all the great nations, only Russia and France have really adequate national hymns. These things grow. They can't be made. America can afford to wait and meantime play "The Star-Spangled Banner" assiduously. That's what Doctor Muck would do in Germany. But Prussian-like, he has resigned. The kaiser will doubtless think it was cleverly done.

At yesterday's concert Mr. Stokowski played the Cherubini overture, "Abenceragen," the Schubert unfinished symphony, and Strawinsky's "L' oiseau de Feu" for the orchestral portion of the program. All three numbers were magnificently done.

Margarete Matzenauer, contralto from the Metropolitan Opera Company, loosed her glorious voice in the "Parto" aria from "Titus" and three opera-like Wagner songs. The audience was enthusiastic over everything.

104

From FINANCIAL AMERICA
Address: New York City

Date

MUSIC UNDER SUSPICION

Baltimore, the birthplace of the "Star Spangled Banner," will not listen to a Boston Symphony performance led by a German, even though the professor has yielded to the demand in Providence for the national anthem. Baltimore's peace was so threatened by a similar program that the police forbade it. Washington, where German diplomacy long inflicted a strain on courtesy, has tolerated the grotesque spectacle—for such it may be described.

A subject of the Kaiser rendering "The Star Spangled Banner" in the circumstances that have attended the Boston Symphony performance must remind the witnesses of the unfortunate muzzled and leashed bear going through the two-step under the shadow of his master's long club. The bear feels compelled to dance and the maestro in these concerts has yielded to the public demand for a raising of the colors. Unfortunately for Dr. Carl Muck and his orchestra, no one believes that there is any sincerity in the performance. So the expression of patriotic sentiments contained in the air verges on a concealment of profanity.

Though rendered by musicians of the first rank, there is something unsatisfying in "The Star Spangled Banner" led or played by a Teuton. The hearer must find himself listening for a subdued, mocking, half-hidden note, in the volume of harmony that would betray the real sentiment of the musician—"Deutschland Ueber Alles."

Such a number may rank well in the realm of Teutonic acrobatics, but as a patriotic demonstration it fails of conviction. The controversy as to the artistic merit of the composition also seems unlikely to be settled by placing it in hands of those unfriendly or of doubtful attachment.

n TIMES
lress: Washington, D. C.

NOV 4 191

MUCK WILL PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM IN CONCERT HERE

That Dr. Karl Muck will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra while it plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Tuesday's concert in Washington was made certain by a telegram sent to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local representative of the orchestra, by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who is in Boston now with the orchestra.

The telegram, sent in response to a query by Mrs. Wilson-Greene, read:

"Dr. Muck and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were asked by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor of the orchestra, to play the national anthem at the concert in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday. They performed it as the closing number of the program and will do the same in Washington and elsewhere."

Mrs. Wilson-Greene announced last night that nearly all seats for the symphony concert to be given Tuesday at the New National Theater have been sold and that she does not expect the reports concerning Dr. Muck to affect the popularity of the orchestra in Washington.

BULLETIN

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 3

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Will Give "Star Spangled Banner" at Every Concert Hereafter, it is Announced

Boston, Nov. 3.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" yesterday. Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrisher Genral Musik Direktor, was leader. Dr. Muck has resigned, but acceptance of his resignation is uncertain.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading, "'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number."

When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage he shook hands with the Major, Henry Lee Higginson, founder and chief patron of the orchestra. The audience applauding, stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem, he received another round of applause.

The management of the orchestra announced after the concert that the national anthem would be played at every future concert of the symphony, and that

n PRESS
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

(continued)

104

Muck Plays National Anthem

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who said he would not play "The Star Spangled Banner," but who did play it yesterday, has resigned his post. Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, says the resignation is under consideration.

DR. MUCK RESIGNS, AND THEN PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony to Give the "Star Spangled Banner" from Now on.

AUDIENCE CHEERS LEADER

Major Higginson Does Not Know What He Will Do About the Resignation.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played at the conclusion of this afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, with Dr. Karl Muck, the German leader, conducting. The conductor was given a tremendous ovation by the audience, which rose to its feet, applauding him.

Major Henry Lee Higginson appeared on the platform at the opening of the concert and announced that the National Anthem would be played at every performance of the orchestra. He also said that Dr. Muck had given him his resignation, but that he (Major Higginson) would greatly regret accepting it.

"It will have my earnest consideration," he said.

Major Higginson also announced that Dr. Muck never had actually refused to play the National Anthem, but he did not fix the responsibility for the orchestra's recent refusal to include it in its program.

When Dr. Muck stepped to the platform he got a remarkable reception. The audience rose to its feet, giving him applause such as has been given only to musical stars of the first magnitude, who have aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Dr. Muck led the orchestra when it played the anthem. Those who went to the concert saw that the United States flag has made its appearance on the front of Symphony Hall.

Following the declaration of Rev. Dr. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church, that Symphony Hall was the only public hall in Boston where the United States flag was not displayed, the management draped a large one over the main entrance. Charles A. Ellis, business manager, said that the flag would remain there permanently.

It is believed that the order to display the flag came from Major Higginson, founder and financial backer of the orchestra.

Mr. Ellis said there had been a United States flag at the hall during the Summer, but he could not recall where it was. There is no flagstaff on the building.

NO GERMAN OPERA IN N. Y., SINGERS TO BE DROPPED

New York, Nov. 2.—The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performances of opera in the German language would be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the role of artists.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Selma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who, although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will, it was said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language, and means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

STOKOWSKI SUPPLIES MUCK WITH 'ARTISTIC UNITY' TIP

Demonstrates Playing of Anthem at Concert Here Does Not Upset Program

By Harold P. Quicksall

When Leopold Stokowski beckoned the members of the Philadelphia Orchestra to their feet to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of the concert in the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon the big audience figuratively seized the nation's emblem and waved it with vim in the direction of Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston music lovers who have supported his refusal to play the national anthem.

The 3000 persons in the house stood silently thru the anthem, and when it was over applauded in a fashion which might have done Major Higginson some good, even if it had given his pet conductor a pain.

"Dr. Karl Muck notwithstanding," murmured the eminent justice in front, as he resumed his seat.

"They ought to play it whether it's artistic or not," added Mrs. Justice.

But why, madam, allow Doctor Muck even that. For the last few days he has been busily throwing a Prussian barrage fire, establishing what your husband would call an alibi, and Brother Ed Vare a frame-up. What is it he says? "Art has nothing to do with politics and nationalism." A clever reversal. Art has little to do with politics, but politics and nationalism have a great deal to do with art. How else can we account for the plaintive note developed by the negro folk song during the long years of negro oppression, the barbaric melancholia of the Russians, or the pompous nothingness of some latter-day German music? It isn't all a matter of geography.

Emerson you remember, defined an artist as a man who can express what his fellows feel. Politics is very close to life and feeling. Any one in the fifth ward will vouch for that. So Prussian militarism is not without its musical expression. But it happens that art flourishes only in great intellects and is possessed of a great humanity. So it became a weak sister to politics. If it cannot speak well it runs far afield, grows abstract, or revels in the sorrows of its people.

Because art so easily grows abstract and international, Doctor Muck is at perfect liberty to play scores of properly-selected German compositions at his concerts, and the Matinee Musical Club is foolish to attempt a season of all-American music. The American public sees that or it would not have applauded Mozart, Schubert and Wagner so vociferously yesterday. But Doctor Muck should be reasonable.

Then there is Doctor Muck's assertion that performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" interfers with the 'artistic unity" of a program. It is a pleasure to recall that we always insisted Doctor Muck was ignorant of the principals of program-making. He has been under fire on this point in New York for several seasons.

When the symphonic conductor starts to build a program he becomes just as surely and purely an entertainer as the next vaudeville artist. He lays aside his role of musician to become a psychologist. How will my audience react if I give them this, that and the other thing in an hour a half?—that's his question. And he never forgets "popular ignorance"—that's what they call it—as he goes about his task.

The chief principles involved are that the human mind easily dulls under monotony and delights in contrast. And what is the test? The effect on the audience. Ordinary conductors will always aim to please; daring conductors will occasionally aim to puzzle; but wise and sincere conductors will never aim to stupify their audiences.

Now is there any sound psychological reason why, if an audience gets pleasure out of a dirge, a dance and a song in one program, it should not get pleasure out of a dirge, a dance, a song and a passing swell of patriotism? Is there any violation of art so long as the patriotic stimulus is effective?

As a matter of fact the playing of the national anthem at concerts is even thus early in the war a recognized prelude—it is completely detached in the mind of the audience from the formal program. It affects what follows neither one way or another. So the program was never built in which "The Star-Spangled Banner" could not be fitted without musical disaster to American audiences.

No informed musician will claim pure musical merit for "The Star-Spangled Banner." Neither would he for the German national anthem. Of all the great nations, only Russia and France have really adequate national hymns. These things grow. They can't be made. America can afford to wait and meantime play "The Star-Spangled Banner" assiduously. That's what Doctor Muck would do in Germany. But Prussian-like, he has resigned. The kaiser will doubtless think it was cleverly done.

At yesterday's concert Mr. Stokowski played the Cherubini overture, "Abenceragen," the Schubert unfinished symphony, and Strawinsky's "L' oiseau de Feu" for the orchestral portion of the program. All three numbers were magnificently done.

Margarete Matzenauer, contralto from the Metropolitan Opera Company, loosed her glorious voice in the "Parto" aria from "Titus" and three opera-like Wagner songs. The audience was enthusiastic over everything.

105

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 4 - 1917

MUCK'S RETENTION DEPENDS ON PUBLIC

Will Stay With Orchestra if German Music Is Not Forced From Programs

MUSICIANS ARE GLOOMY

Artists of Boston Orchestra Fear That Leader Will Go and Institution Come to End

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. Major Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept Doctor Muck's resignation.

It depends on two things; first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Doctor Muck; and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programs, as the Metropolitan Opera in New York has done. There is no demand in Boston for any further change in the symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the symphony to play the anthem wishes Doctor Muck retained. The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide.

Doctor Muck will insist on his resignation being accepted should there be a demand for the elimination of German music.

As to Doctor Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Doctor Muck credit for the success of the orchestra, and if the public demands the leader's removal the Major will carry out contracts under an assistant conductor, but disband next year.

The symphony embraces men of fourteen nationalities, equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente Powers, Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians being included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, one of the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

CANCEL KREISLER CONCERT, AS VIOLINIST IS AUSTRIAN

Sewickley and Edgeworth Society Folk Take Stand for Patriotism

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 3.—Aroused by the fact that Fritz Kreisler, violinist, is an officer in the Austrian army and reports that he is sending funds obtained through American concerts back to Austria, the ally of Germany, society folk of Sewickley and Edgeworth have canceled his engagement to appear before the Women's Club of Sewickley Valley and the Edgeworth Club. Kreisler has seen active service, receiving a wound which resulted in his present furlough.

Those opposing the Austrian's appearance contend that any support given an ally of our enemy at this time would be indicative of a lack of whole-hearted support to the Government in its war prosecution. Edward A. Woods, one of the chief backers of the concert, said:

"Can any one imagine Kreisler being engaged in Canada, England or France? Are we less in earnest than those countries, or have we failed to learn from their experience? We must, as a whole people, utterly abhor and detect all that Germany and her allies stand for, whether Austrian, Bulgarian or Turk."

KEEP MUCK AT LARGE, IF HE WON'T PLAY," SAYS T. R.

Colonel Roosevelt Emphatic in Comment on Leader's Remarks

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Before word came late today of the changed attitude of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, with respect to playing the "Star Spangled Banner," Colonel Roosevelt said:

"No Prussian who refuses to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' at this time ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America. Muck ought not to be allowed at large in this country. I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any right to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

The Colonel's remarks came in the course of a visit to Public School No. 45, in the Bronx, where he heard its Gary School's Orchestra play "America."

IN THE ORCHESTRA ROW

Major Higginson

Dr. Karl Muck

MUCK LEADS ORCHESTRA PLAYING NATIONAL AIR

Boston Symphony Conductor Meets Request of Patron and Then Resigns Post.

GETS LIBERAL APPLAUSE

Audience Expresses Approval at Rendition of "Star-Spangled Banner."

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star-Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert here today.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Major Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience today Major Higginson said that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage, and when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony Hall officials said the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation, Major Higginson made the following statement:

Never Refused to Play.

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its first Southern trip next week, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Dr. Muck will play Beethoven's C Minor Symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's Fourth in Washington, Brahms' Fourth in Baltimore, Brahms' Fourth and Beethoven's Fifth in New York and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the program are chosen from the shorter pieces played at the first four concerts in Boston.

With the exception of a short overture by Hector Berlioz, the New York program is devoted entirely to German composers.

Muck Leads Orchestra Playing National Air

Continued From First Page.

Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Dr. Muck will play Beethoven's C Minor Symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's Fourth in Washington, Brahms' Fourth in Baltimore, Brahms' Fourth and Beethoven's Fifth in New York and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the program are chosen from the shorter pieces played at the first four concerts in Boston.

With the exception of a short overture by Hector Berlioz, the New York program is devoted entirely to German composers.

Germanic Operas Barred.

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Melma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will, it was said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the Board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Strauss, a living German composer.

Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation, and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

Colonel Scores Muck.

Theodore Roosevelt declared today that Dr. Karl Muck ought not to be at large in this country. The statement was made when the Colonel was visiting Public School No. 45, in the Bronx. The school orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and some one suggested that the children might teach Muck how to play it.

"I am shocked, simply shocked," Roosevelt said, "that any one can apologize for him on the ground that the music is not an artistic, but a patriotic work. No man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

May Intern Conductor.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 2.—While officials of the Department of Justice had not been informed today of the action of Dr. Karl Muck in resigning as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the investigation ordered by them when Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" has not been discontinued, although no report has reached the Department of Justice on the incident thus far. What the Government officials are endeavoring to find out is whether or not Dr. Muck has been guilty of disloyalty, even though he may claim citizenship in Germany. Should the facts warrant it, it is probable that Dr. Muck will be interned at one of the detention camps during the period of the war.

Lieutenant Williams Santelmann, leader of the United States Marine Band, said today that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is good enough for any musical program. "The National Anthem," he declared, "has a rightful place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted."

This is his answer to Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to permit the orchestra to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence, when the audience called for it. Lieutenant Santelmann was born in Germany. He said: "The national anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic the program might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Musical Circles Incensed.

Washington musical circles are incensed over the action of Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, 11 years in charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington, defended his course and said it had not been the custom in the past to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," and she did not know "why such a demand should be made now." The orchestra is booked here for next Tuesday night.

Otto T. Simon, director of the Motet Choral Society and the Washington Chorus, said: "There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the national capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. He should be swept from the stage."

President Wilson, Attorney General Gregory, Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary Daniels and Secretary Baker and members of Congress now in Washington are being urged by mail and by wire by people from all parts of the United States to take action against

The Department of Justice is told in communications from various States that if such people are not suppressed there is serious danger of mob punishment.

The tendency to summarily deal with persons who are hindering the Government in its preparations for vigorous war against Germany is giving the President and Department of Justice officials much concern. In some communities there is constant fear of patriotic outbreaks against pro-Germans. Many persons demand that Senator La-Follette, Senator Gronna and others prominent in public affairs be dealt with. Some violent protestants go so far as to even urge that willful offenders be hanged.

The white-capping incident near Cincinnati, several days ago, is cited as an instance of what could happen in many localities. It was freely predicted here today that if Senator La-Follette becomes very active in his demands that those who took the Socialist from Cincinnati into Kentucky and whipped him be run down and punished, the feeling among lawless elements against him will be so great that it will be dangerous for him to travel.

The Department of Justice, it is understood, is preparing to take definite action against all suspicious persons. Those who are actively in sympathy with Germany will be restrained. Citizens of Germany who are considered dangerous will be interned.

PUBLIC LEDGER

from

Address:

Date

DR. MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM; RESIGNS

Boston Symphony Members Play "Star Spangled" Banner" at Concert

PROBABLY WILL REMAIN LEADER OF ORCHESTRA

Higginson Not Expected to Release Leader — Patriotic Hymn on All Programs

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" today, with Dr. Karl Muck, former director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrischer Generalmusikdirektor, leading. Doctor Muck has resigned, but acceptance is uncertain.

It was the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, as usual a society event, with the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a United States flag, in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading: "The 'Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

I have asked Doctor Muck and the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner." They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Doctor Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The question rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration.

Then Doctor Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with Major Higginson and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem, as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

William E. Walter, publicity representative of the orchestra, said tonight that, so far as he knew, Doctor Muck would continue to direct the concerts of the Symphony, and the national anthem would be a feature of every program of the orchestra, whether or not the patrons in individual cities demand it. While Major Higginson would not specifically state whether Doctor Muck would remain as conductor, the statement was interpreted to mean he would remain as leader and the anthem would be played in response to popular demand, despite the conductor's assertion it was not a part of an artistic musical program.

Major Higginson has made no further statement in regard to the question. It is understood, however, that Doctor Muck's resignation is not to be accepted.

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Announcement in a PUBLIC LEDGER dispatch last night that German operas would be abandoned by the Metropolitan Opera Company this season was confirmed tonight by a board of directors' statement.

This action will result in a number of German singers being eliminated from the role of artists. Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Melma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who, although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will appear, it was said, in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and 105

PUBL...
...ADELPHIA, PA.

NOV 4 - 1917

MUCK'S RETENTION DEPENDS ON PUBLIC

Will Stay With Orchestra if German Music Is Not Forced From Programs

MUSICIANS ARE GLOOMY

Artists of Boston Orchestra Fear That Leader Will Go and Institution Come to End

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. Major Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept Doctor Muck's resignation.

It depends on two things; first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Doctor Muck; and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programs, as the Metropolitan Opera in New York has done. There is no demand in Boston for any further change in the symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the symphony to play the anthem wishes Doctor Muck retained. The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide.

Doctor Muck will insist on his resignation being accepted should there be a demand for the elimination of German music.

As to Doctor Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives Doctor Muck credit for the success of the orchestra, and if the public demands the leader's removal the Major will carry out contracts under an assistant conductor, but disband next year.

The symphony embraces men of fourteen nationalities, equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente Powers, Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians being included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the Major. He fears the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, one of the greatest orchestra in the world, will be no more.

CANCEL KREISLER CONCERT, AS VIOLINIST IS AUSTRIAN

Sewickley and Edgeworth Society Folk Take Stand for Patriotism

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 3.—Aroused by the fact that Fritz Kreisler, violinist, is an officer in the Austrian army and reports that he is sending funds obtained through American concerts back to Austria, the ally of Germany, society folk of Sewickley and Edgeworth have canceled his engagement to appear before the Women's Club of Sewickley Valley and the Edgeworth Club. Kreisler has seen active service, receiving a wound which resulted in his present furlough.

Those opposing the Austrian's appearance contend that any support given an ally of our enemy at this time would be indicative of a lack of whole-hearted support to the Government in its war prosecution. Edward A. Woods, one of the chief backers of the concert, said:

"Can any one imagine Kreisler being engaged in Canada, England or France? Are we less in earnest than those countries, or have we failed to learn from their experience? We must, as a whole people, utterly abhor and detect all that Germany and her allies stand for, whether Austrian, Bulgarian or Turk."

"KEEP MUCK AT LARGE, IF HE WON'T PLAY," SAYS T. R.

Colonel Roosevelt Emphatic in Comment on Leader's Remarks

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Before word came late today of the changed attitude of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck, with respect to playing the "Star Spangled Banner," Colonel Roosevelt said:

"No Prussian who refuses to play the 'Star Spangled Banner' at this time ought to be permitted to have his liberty in America. Muck ought not to be allowed at large in this country. I am shocked, simply shocked, that any one can apologize for him on the ground it is not an artistic but a patriotic work. At this time no man has any right to be engaged in any business that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play the 'Star Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

The Colonel's remarks came in the course of a visit to Public School No. 45, in the Bronx, where he heard its Gary School's Orchestra play "America."

...ress: Philadelphia ...

e.....

IN THE ORCHESTRA ROW

Major Higginson

Dr. Karl Muck

MUCK LEADS ORCHESTRA PLAYING NATIONAL AIR

Boston Symphony Conductor Meets Request of Patron and Then Resigns Post.

GETS LIBERAL APPLAUSE

Audience Expresses Approval at Rendition of "Star-Spangled Banner."

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star-Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert here today.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Major Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience today Major Higginson said that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem, and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program.

Dr. Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage, and when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony Hall officials said the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation, Major Higginson made the following statement:

Never Refused to Play.

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its first Southern trip next week, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon,

Muck Leads Orchestra Playing National Air

Continued From First Page.

Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening.

Dr. Muck will play Beethoven's C Minor Symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's Fourth in Washington, Brahms' Fourth in Baltimore, Brahms' Fourth and Beethoven's Fifth in New York and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the program are chosen from the shorter pieces played at the first four concerts in Boston.

With the exception of a short overture by Hector Berlioz, the New York program is devoted entirely to German composers.

Germanic Operas Barred.

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performance of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Melma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will, it was said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the Board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Strauss, a living German composer.

Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday, from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The Mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation, and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

Colonel Scores Muck.

Theodore Roosevelt declared today that Dr. Karl Muck ought not to be at large in this country. The statement was made when the Colonel was visiting Public School No. 45, in the Bronx. The school orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and some one suggested that the children might teach Muck how to play it.

"I am shocked, simply shocked," Roosevelt said, "that any one can apologize for him on the ground that the music is not an artistic, but a patriotic work. No man has any business to be engaged in anything that is not subordinate to patriotism. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra won't play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' it ought to be made to shut up."

May Intern Conductor.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 2.—While officials of the Department of Justice had not been informed today of the action of Dr. Karl Muck in resigning as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the investigation ordered by them when Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" has not been discontinued, although no report has reached the Department of Justice on the incident thus far. What the Government officials are endeavoring to find out is whether or not Dr. Muck has been guilty of disloyalty, even though he may claim citizenship in Germany. Should the facts warrant it, it is probable that Dr. Muck will be interned at one of the detention camps during the period of the war.

Lieutenant Williams Santelmann, leader of the United States Marine Band, said today that "The Star-Spangled Banner" is good enough for any musical program. "The National Anthem," he declared, "has a rightful place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted."

This is his answer to Dr. Karl Muck's refusal to permit the orchestra to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence, when the audience called for it. Lieutenant Santelmann was born in Germany. He said: "The national anthem could in no sense detract from the beauty of any program of music, no matter how artistic the program might be. In these times it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Musical Circles Incensed.

Washington musical circles are incensed over the action of Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, 11 years in charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington, defended his course and said it had not been the custom in the past to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," and she did not know "why such a demand should be made now." The orchestra is booked here for next Tuesday night.

Otto T. Simon, director of the Motet Choral Society and the Washington Chorus, said: "There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the national capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. He should be swept from the stage."

President Wilson, Attorney General Gregory, Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary Daniels and Secretary Baker and members of Congress now in Washington are being urged by mail and by wire by people from all parts of the United States to take action against ... who give aid and comfort to the enemy.

The Department of Justice is told in communications from various States that if such people are not suppressed there is serious danger of mob punishment.

The tendency to summarily deal with persons who are hindering the Government in its preparations for vigorous war against Germany is giving the President and Department of Justice officials much concern. In some communities there is constant fear of patriotic outbreaks against pro-Germans. Many persons demand that Senator La-Follette, Senator Gronna and others prominent in public affairs be dealt with. Some violent protestants go so far as to even urge that willful offenders be hanged.

The white-capping incident near Cincinnati, several days ago, is cited as an instance of what could happen in many localities. It was freely predicted here today that if Senator La-Follette becomes very active in his demands that those who took the Socialist from Cincinnati into Kentucky and whipped him be run down and punished, the feeling among lawless elements against him will be so great that it will be dangerous for him to travel.

The Department of Justice, it is understood, is preparing to take definite action against all suspicious persons. Those who are actively in sympathy with Germany will be restrained. Citizens of Germany who are considered dangerous will be interned. ... in the World

...rom .....

...ddress: .....

...Date .....

DR. MUCK DIRECTS ANTHEM; RESIGNS

Boston Symphony Members Play "Star Spangled" Banner" at Concert

PROBABLY WILL REMAIN LEADER OF ORCHESTRA

Higginson Not Expected to Release Leader — Patriotic Hymn on All Programs

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" today, with Dr. Karl Muck, former director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koeniglicher Preussrischer Generalmusikdirektor, leading. Doctor Muck has resigned, but acceptance is uncertain.

It was the regular Friday afternoon public rehearsal of the orchestra, as usual a society event, with the lack of the usual small number of vacant seats. Symphony Hall, above which floated a United States flag, in response to public demand for it, was filled. The audience was curious, as there had been reports the hall's license was to be revoked unless the anthem was played.

Inserted into each program was a printed sheet reading: "The 'Star Spangled Banner' will be played as the closing number." The buzz of comment over this had not died down before Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, walked on the stage amid applause. He said:

I have asked Doctor Muck and the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner." They have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Doctor Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts.

He has placed his resignation in my hands, that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be disaster. The question rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration.

Then Doctor Muck came on to lead. He shook hands with Major Higginson and was given a great ovation. The audience stood up to greet him. After the completion of the anthem, as announced, he received another great tribute of applause.

William E. Walter, publicity representative of the orchestra, said tonight that, so far as he knew, Doctor Muck would continue to direct the concerts of the Symphony, and the national anthem would be a feature of every program of the orchestra, whether or not the patrons in individual cities demand it. While Major Higginson would not specifically state whether Doctor Muck would remain as conductor, the statement was interpreted to mean he would remain as leader and the anthem would be played in response to popular demand, despite the conductor's assertion it was not a part of an artistic musical program.

Major Higginson has made no further statement in regard to the question. It is understood, however, that Doctor Muck's resignation is not to be accepted.

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Announcement in a PUBLIC LEDGER dispatch last night that German operas would be abandoned by the Metropolitan Opera Company this season was confirmed tonight by a board of directors' statement.

This action will result in a number of German singers being eliminated from the role of artists. Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Melma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenauer, who, although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will appear, it was said, in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsible to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beetho... eliminated from the repe...

106

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV - - 19

MUCK QUITS, ANTHEM IS PLAYED; GERMAN OPERA IS RULED OUT

Boston Leader Resigns; Directs 'Star-Spangled Banner'

METROPOLITAN BARS TEUTON PRODUCTIONS

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had been criticised for not playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence, was announced by Major Henry L. Higginson at a concert this afternoon.

It also was announced that the national anthem would be played at all concerts given by the organization. It was played today in compliance with public request, Major Higginson, who is patron of the orchestra, said.

In announcing that Doctor Muck had tendered his resignation, Major Higginson made the following statement:

"I have asked Doctor Muck and the orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request Doctor Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

Doctor Muck was applauded as he ap-

Continued on Page Four

From HERALD
Address: Washington, D. C.

Date NOV 4 1917

The Tragedy of Dr. Muck.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the greatest musical organizations in the world, and Dr. Karl Muck, who has been its conductor for more than a decade, one of the greatest musicians. It is a pity that his career with the orchestra has ended in a tragedy.

Dr. Muck is a subject of the Kaiser, a Prussian by birth, and naturally is loyal to the land of his nativity and allegiance. In that loyalty every real American will sympathize with him. Since war broke out between Germany and the United States he has remained in Boston—perhaps the most bitterly anti-German city of the country—and held the respect of the most exacting public of that city. His conduct has been impeachable, since he is known as a man of honor as well as a man of art;, and in a nation at war with Germany he was able to hold the post of honor with that nation's leading musical body—which is a tribute to Americans as well as to himself, signal proof of their generosity and broadmindedness. Can anyone imagine an American, a Britisher, a Frenchman, or a Russian leading the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra? Hardly.

We are inclined to think that in declining to allow the Boston orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" Dr. Muck made a grave mistake. He was right on strictly artistic grounds. But none knows better than he that a German orchestra conductor who refused to play a German national air—no matter how atrocious musically—would have his official head cut off in an hour. In war questions of art and esthetics are so utterly subordinate that Dr. Muck sounded a glaringly falsetto note when he raised the "art issue."

Then came the next question: Would he, a German, stultify himself in playing the national air of a country at war with his own? We hardly thought so. The Boston Symphony is an American orchestra, despite the fact that twenty-five different nationalities are represented on it. It is supported by Americans. It is a pity that the question of "The Star Spangled Banner" should have been raised, but once it was raised it could be settled in only one way. No body of musicians can be too proud, too high, to exalted, to play the anthem which America has chosen as its own.

Dr. Muck has resigned, but not before conducting for the anthem once. It was a dramatic exit, worthy of the man and the musician. We think of him not as a Prussian but as an artist, and hope that after the war he will return to this country to minister to our pleasure as he has in the past.

MUCK RESIGNS; ANTHEM PLAYED BY ORCHESTRA

Continued From Page One

peared on the stage, and when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was rendered at the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

GERMAN OPERA BARRED; SINGERS ARE ELIMINATED

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that no performances of opera in the German language will be giving during the present season. This means that many German singers will be eliminated from the role of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Madame Ober, Madame Helma Kurt, Johannes Sembach and Carl Braun. Mme. Gadski's contract was permitted to lapse.

Mesadames Hempel and Matzenauer, who, altho their names are German, are said to be thoroly loyal in their Americanism, will, it was said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsive to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and Beethoven will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Strauss, a living German composer.

Steps to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to play here next Thursday from giving its concert unless Dr. Karl Muck, its leader, agreed to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," had been taken under the direction of Mayor Mitchel previous to word from Boston of Muck's resignation. The mayor directed the license commissioner to study the law to discover whether any provision could be employed to meet the situation and the question had been referred to the corporation counsel.

MUCK OUGHT NOT TO BE AT LARGE, DECLARES T. R.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Dr. Karl Muck's Boston Symphony Orchestra should either play the "Star-Spangled Banner" or Doctor Muck should be made to shut up, Theodore Roosevelt said today, before developments in Boston became known.

The colonel's remarks on the subject came in the course of a visit to Public School 45, in the Bronx, where he heard this Gary school's orchestra play "America." It was suggested that the youngster at the piano, the three boys and the little girl in pink ribbons who played fiddles, might be able to teach Doctor Muck how to play the "Star-Spangled Banner."

In reply to this, the colonel made a statement to the effect that no Prussian who refuses to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at this time, with the nations in a life and death grip, ought to be permitted to l erty in America.

"Muck ought not be allow in this country," Colonel said. "I am shocked, simp that any one can apologize the ground that it is not but a patriotic work. At t man has any business to in any business that is not to patriotism. If the Boston Orchestra won't play the "St Banner' it ought to be ma up."

From EVENING STAR
Address: Washington, D. C.

NOV 4 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the series of five concerts given annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene will take place in the New National Theater Tuesday afternoon, at 4:30. The orchestra returns after its seven months' absence. Exactly the same personnel which appeared here at its concert in March is announced. This is the first time in the history of the orchestra that the same personnel has been carried over from one season to another. The symphony which heads the program is Tschaikowsky's Fourth in F Minor. Other numbers on the program will be the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, the Roumanian Rhapsody in A Major of "Enesco."

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK AND OUR ANTHEM

The failure of Dr. KARL MUCK, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert given by that organization in Providence, R. I., continues to excite discussion as to the relationship between art and patriotism. "Art is a thing in itself, and not related to any particular nation or group," contends Dr. MUCK, and he may well be supported in this view without imputing to him anything in the way of disloyal sentiment, even though there may be an instantaneous and emphatic refusal to endorse the attitude which he assumes toward the National Anthem.

While it is not likely that any good judge of music would accept the tune to which the familiar words of FRANCIS SCOTT KEY'S poem have been set as conforming to a great standard of musical excellence, there are times when the patriotic spirit is willing to overlook such shortcomings and when an expression of national loyalty is expected on every possible occasion. Therefore the apparent belief of Dr. MUCK that "The Star Spangled Banner," musically, is unworthy a place on his programs, and that to play it would upset the symmetry and interfere with the "artistic appeal" of his classical interpretations will not find justification with most Americans. The fact that MUCK is a German, and that many of the musicians who perform under his baton are of the same nationality, would appear to be sufficient reason why he should have avoided the criticism and annoyance that were bound to arouse through his failure to perform the national air of this country, where he has long been treated with kindness and appreciation.

Thus the Philadelphia Orchestra plays "The Star Spangled Banner" at all of its concerts, with musicians as well as audience standing during its performance. Nor can it be said that the concerts of the local orchestra lose anything of dignity or artistic value through this tribute to national sentiment. On the contrary, the spirited rendering with which Mr. STOKOWSKI supplements each of the orchestra's programs serves to give new beauty and importance to the national air, and thereby heightens respect for the Anthem and fans anew the glow of patriotic fire in the hearts of all who listen to it.

The annual announcement that on Monday evening next the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first appearance of the season at the Academy of Music in this city would have been made peculiarly significant by reason of the attitude of Dr. MUCK in this matter, together with the disposition of Colonel HIGGINSON to sustain him, if the conductor had not decided, as he did yesterday, to resign his post. Within the walls of this old auditorium, Philadelphia patriotism, both in song and speech, has been voiced countless times by two generations. The very title of the structure is the American Academy of Music, and it would have been an act of rank discourtesy to this community, even if the act were not alien or disloyal in spirit and intent, if Colonel HIGGINSON and Dr. MUCK were to prevent their musicians from complying with what has become an American custom. The MUCK resignation now puts an end to what would otherwise have been a decidedly unpleasant occasion, and it is to be assumed that henceforth the "art" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be tempered by more tact and common sense.

OPENS AT 8:30 : CLOSES AT 5:

From RECORD
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

THE ISSUE OF NATIONAL MUSIC PRECIPITATED

How the Action of Dr. Karl Muck Affects Music World.

GERMAN ART IN BALANCE

In Fact, the Whole Situation Is Quite a Ticklish Topic Just at This Time.

DR. KARL MUCK has flatly precipitated the whole issue of national music in this country, so far as "artistic neutrality" now goes, the fat is in the fire.

Whether Dr Muck goes or stays is of no particular moment

Higginson's High Hand.

At first Colonel Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was disposed, according to the reports, to take a pretty high hand. He said, rather shortly, that "the public would better not go "too far" in this matter or he would disband the entire Boston organization That would be a good deal of a calamity, to be sure Still, this is wartime, and there are other considerations in the world than symphonic music.

Now, however, the special case of the Boston Orchestra seems more or less settled But the issue is only thoroughly started. We are likely to hear an immense deal of it

For the general eye of this country is going to be kept more and more closely on the angles of disloyalty, in whatever department of our life There is no sound objection to German music, within the definite war limitations. It must not contribute money to the enemy funds—that is certain.

Wagner Copyright Expired.

Richard Wagner we may have, operatically or otherwise; for the copyright protection of his operas is now run out, and American producers need pay no royalty to Frau Cosima. With Richard Strauss the case is very different. Moreover, Strauss was one of the foremost of those who signed the famous manifesto of the Intellectuals. We can do without him for a bit.

Still, it must be remembered that our quarrel is not with music When our use of German music in this country is apt to have any bolstering effect on the people of Germany, however, then we may well draw back, and, as for the Prussian Herr Mucks and the Prussian-American Geraldine Farrars, we ought, as rational individuals, to know very adequately what to do in their instances. In a situation like the present, either we are Americans or we are not F. H.

EVENING SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

1917

None Of This Young Lady's Money Is Going To German "Artists" If She Knows It.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN:

Sir—In connection with the controversy regarding Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when requested by an audience, it might be well to recall that about two years ago the worthy Herr Doktor sued some man, in New York, I believe, for having secured $50 from him under false pretenses. The fund for which Herr Muck contributed the cash was for the purpose of furnishing German propaganda in this country!

With Mme Gadski's husband among those implicated in plots against this country and Dr. Muck putting up the cash to force his brand of Kultur upon us, it might be just as well to consider thoughtfully the advisability of interning alien enemy artists in this country, for their calling certainly opens a large field of activity for underhand dealing, as they are free to travel all over the country at will.

Personally, at the risk of being considered "narrow," I have not subscribed to any concerts where German artists appear. It was my boast last year that I had not missed a performance of the Baltimore Symphony, but a glance at the list of members of the orchestra inclines one to skepticism, so this year my money has been turned over to the Red Cross instead of the ticket office. None of my money is going into German pockets if I know it. E. M. R.

Baltimore, Nov. 1.

rom REPUBLICAN

ddress: Springfield, Mass.

te NOV 2 - 1917

It is to be hoped that the agitation about the placing of "The Star 'Spangled Banner" in programs of the Boston symphony orchestra will not extend to New York, where the organization is to play next week. After Maj Higginson's warning that the existence of the orchestra depends upon the public's taking a sane attitude about its activities, it will be apparent that the only effect of such misguided exhibitions as that in Providence will be to deprive America of its most famous musical institution. However, music in New York has its politics, which has been revealed in the friction between the New York Philharmonic and the New York symphony orchestra, and which was responsible for the wearing down of the nervous and physical strength of that genius of conductors, Gustav Mahler. If any mischief-making papers abet the movement they have Maj Higginson's assurance that they will probably succeed. But it will not be a success of which they will long be proud.

Italy's present plight gives a tell-

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

ss: NOV 3 - 1917

After yesterday's incident in Symphony hall, it looks as though the Boston symphony orchestra would perforce play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts. Maj Higginson announced that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, but there would seem to be no reason for accepting the resignation, and Maj Higginson expressed his reluctance to do so. The press of the country is talking about "Dr Muck's refusal to play the national anthem," but Dr Muck never made any such refusal. Maj Higginson apparently decided to yield rather than subject the orchestra to the harm which continuance of agitation might cause. The enthusiasm which greeted Dr Muck's appearance on the stage was a clear demonstration of musical Boston's admiration of its great conductor and desire to retain his services.

rom EVENING SUN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

1917

ate

WANTS MUCK BARRED

Former Governor Warfield Calls People's Meeting At Lyric To Frame Monster Protest.

WILL SING NATIONAL ANTHEM

J. B. Noel Wyatt, Old Symphony Subscriber, Sends Hot Letter To Orchestra Manager.

Despite Dr. Muck's tendered resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the probability that he will not appear at the concert scheduled to be held in Baltimore next Wednesday evening, feeling in Baltimore is still running high against the slur cast upon the national anthem by Dr. Muck and Mr. Higginson's early refusal to include the hymn in the concert program.

Former Governor Edwin Warfield is planning an enormous massmeeting at the Lyric, "the people's meeting," he is styling it, "to reconsecrate with our voices 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' which was first consecrated with the blood of Maryland's sons." No invitations will be sent out to the meeting, but the entire public is invited to be present and to vote upon a resolution of protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck in Baltimore and against the action of Mr. Higginson in refusing to include the anthem i nthe orchestra's program.

Will Have An Orchestra.

There will be an orchestra present to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," and men leading in patriotic service will make addresses to show conclusively that Maryland men and women will not permit the sacredness of the national anthem to be made light of while this country's men are on the battle front giving their lives for the preservation of the flag.

"I am determined that that fellow Muck shall not come to Baltimore, the home of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' after the remarks he has made upon the national hymn," said Mr. Warfield. "If he comes, he comes at his own risk. I have nothing against the musicians that make up the orchestra, but Muck's remarks are unforgivable."

Wyatt Withdraws Support.

A protest against the appearance of the orchestra in Baltimore has been formally made to C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by J. B. Noel Wyatt, the architect. Mr. Wyatt has been a box holder at the concerts for the last 10 years, but this year refused to renew his subscription long before the present contretemps, because he had heard of Dr. Muck's openly expressed views against America, and he felt that he could not with true loyalty listen to a concert directed by him.

Text Of His Letter.

Mr. Wyatt's letter to Mr. Ellis is as follows:

"Dear Sir: The writer has always been an ardent admirer of the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its national value to the musician, the student and the amateur public, and he has subscribed to a box at the Lyric for the last 10 or more seasons of the symphony concerts in Baltimore.

"Of late, however, the compilation of the programs has produced very general adverse comment and the frequent discourteous attitude of the leader also toward his audience has been noticeably unpleasant. In addition to this, having heard, from very reliable authority, of the discourteous and insulting attitude of the leader for some time past and his openly expressed opinions in regard to America, the writer decided that he would no longer obtain the same benefit or pleasure from the concerts of the Boston Orchestra, and therefore declined to renew the subscription this year to his box as usual.

Attitude Unforgivable.

"He feels entirely justified in this action by the recent extraordinary conditions that have arisen in regard to the national anthem and the attitude of Dr. Muck and Mr. Higginson seems entirely unjustifiable and illogical, for, under present circumstances, it seems absurd to them to consider the patriotic introduction of the national anthem on such occasions as forming part of any musical program, artistic or otherwise.

Vacancy Can Be Filled.

"While it would be regrettable that any circumstances should cause the Boston Orchestra to go out of existence as an organization, it would be well for it to remember that the public would not miss it to the same extent as would have been the case some years ago, as the admirable orchestras of New York, Philadelphia and our own recent but very excellent one in Baltimore, as well as those in other cities, are now largely supplying the place (and in some points more satisfactorily) which was formerly held by the Boston Orchestra alone.

Would Silence Orchestra.

"The compulsory introduction of the anthem by legal process does not seem a satisfactory solution of the problem, as an audience does not listen to a patriotic form of expression under these circumstances to any degree with the same satisfaction as it would under normal conditions. It were better, if possible, to prohibit the public performance of this orchestra entirely at present."

No Action On Permit.

No action will be taken by the Police Board on Governor Warfield's request that the police refuse to allow the concert to take place until the voice of the ress: Springfield, Mass.

REPUBLICAN

NOV 2 - 1917

PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

MUCK OFFERS TO RESIGN

HIGGINSON REGRETS STEP

Result of Agitation Started in Providence Because of Failure of Symphony Orchestra to Play "Star Spangled Banner"

